Pope in 'serious' condition; prayers offered worldwide

By Jesse Manning
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pope John Paul II's health worsened on Thursday night as news media around the world reported that the leader of the Catholic Church received last rites. One day after being put on a nasal feeding tube, the Vatican revealed that the Pontiff was suffering from a high fever caused by a urinary tract infection.

He later suffered what Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls called "cardiocirculatory collapse and shock," though he denied that the Pope had a heart attack.

Though most sources said that the Pope had received last rites, Father Keith Weber of St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center said the single sacrament of the anointing of the sick is often confused with last rites.

John Paul II
POPE

"The Pope only received anointing, though he still has a very serious illness," Weber said. "The last rites are only given right before death."

The rites consist of a combination of the sacraments of confession, communion and anointing of the sick. The Pope received anointing in 1981 after he was wounded in an assassination attempt.

According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, the anointing of the sick is not a sacrament for those only who are at the point of death.

It is intended to provide strength to those who are ill and can be given again if the anointed person recovers.

Weber said there had been no special vigils or prayer services in Manhattan for the Pope, but there are more prayers for his health during Masses. In the event of the Pope's death, parishes would hold special Masses.

At over 26 years since being elected pope, John Paul II is the third longest-reigning pontiff, behind Pope Pius IX who served from 1846 to 1878 and St. Peter who served as the first pope for either 34 or 37 years.

Weber said he does not expect John Paul II to step down.

"I have always felt that if only he feels he can no longer serve effectively serve as pope, he would step down," he said.

Father Don Zimmerman of St. Thomas More Catholic Church said despite the Pope's physical ailments, he continues to inspire the faithful.

"He's written so much, and one of the basic themes that he has not only written about but also spoken about is 'be not afraid,'" Zimmerman said.

In his annual Holy Thursday letter to the Catholic clergy of the world, the Pope wrote about his physical condition.

"He reflected on letting go with patience and courage. Just the way he's accepted his disabilities, he has shown us to accept or not deny our failings," Zimmerman said.

"He's still a great source of inspiration and help to the Church and, to some extent, the world."

STUDENT SENATE

Students to vote on fee reallocation referendum

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will vote on adding a Center for Student Activities to the K-State Student Union April 26.

Student Senate approved the referendum Thursday night.

The referendum will be asking students to reallocate a $10.27 student fee to pay for the center.

Fast facts
Center for Student Activities
Referendum date: April 26
Costs:
- Student fees: $4.5 million
- Private donations: $2 million
- Total: $6.5 million

It will not increase student fees and requires a 60 percent majority vote. Any increase or reallocation of students fees has to be approved through a student referendum.

The $10.27 fee was originally approved by a student referendum in 1993 to pay for bonds used for Hale Library expansions, which will be paid for completely in fall 2006.

The fee will end in 2015, regardless of whether the referendum is approved or not. So, if students do not pass the referendum, student fees will not be decreased.

Senator Vicki Conner, senior in biology, said initial architectural drawings have been done by the university architect, and a contractor will be hired if the referendum is passed.

The center will be added on to the east side of the Union and will be a home to all campus organizations.

It is projected to cost $6.5 million. Reallocated student fees would pay $4.5 million and the administration has promised to raise $2 million through private donations. Donations will be raised by the Dean of Student Life and the Associate Provost for Diversity and Dual Career Development offices.

Senator Jason Heaser, senior in political science, said it will be a great addition to K-State if passed.

"This bill is to place on the ballot the choice for students to do something great for our university," Heaser said. "It is time for students to come forward to decide how this is going to progress."

Stations could charge up to $2.25 per gallon

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Time to buy new tennis shoes and clean up the old 10-speed. Once again, gas prices are on the rise.

Here in Manhattan, people and businesses are feeling the effects.

"We've had to raise prices five or six cents each time the price has jumped," Steve Stewart, co-manager of Dara's Fast Lane, 1816 Claflin Road, said. "I've been told it could reach as high as $2.25."

Dara's, one of 17 Manhattan gas stations forced to raise prices to $2.19 a gallon, according to www.kansasgasprices.com, has no choice in its decision to boost prices, Stewart said.

"We take a lot of flack," Stewart said, "but it's done through the gas company."

Jim Jaidos, general sales manager for Briggs Jeep-Eagle in Manhattan, said high gas prices influence his business, as well.

"When gas prices take a sharp jump, it slows SUV sales," Jaidos said. "We don't necessarily sell fewer cars, but it affects the mix of cars."

Jeff Rossell, petroleum manager for Farmer's Co-op Association, said the stock market plays a role.

"The main culprit of the inflation of gas prices is the people playing the stock market," Rossell said. "They're just pushing paper - it all comes down to greed."

In the past, natural gas shortages and conflicts in the Middle East have both been players in the gas price game. This time around that is not the case, Rossell said.

"The Middle East may have some reflection but not as big as in the past," Rossell said. "It's bad to say, but the U.S. has become numb to that."

Ironically, Rossell said, there is actually a surplus of regular gas in the industry.

"Right now, we are up 24-million barrels from last year's gas inventory," Rossell said.

The main problem, Rossell said, is the speculators.

"The speculators are pushing

CITY COMMISSION

Green space, sidewalk maintenance discussed at final forum

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioner candidates participated in their final forum Thursday night.

The forum was organized by Manhattan's Neighborhood Coalition. The candidates covered issues such as the inspection of rental properties, students' living spaces, the amount of green space, the maintenance of sidewalks and the issues surrounding the proposed aquatic center.

Each candidate said inspections of rental properties are important for safety.

"It's an issue I'd like to investigate further," Tom Phillips said. "Generally speaking, rental inspection can benefit the community. There are lots of rentals and you have to find the balance where you can protect the public and not have regulations that burden property owners."

Jayme Morris-Hardeman said she supports rental inspection, and as a landlord, she recently made sure her properties are code compliant.

"The codes we have are strict enough, but safety is important," Morris-Hardeman said. "There are many basement apartments without egress windows which makes it harder to get

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Terri Schiavo dies
Terri Schiavo, the severely brain-damaged woman whose final years tethered to a feeding tube sparked a bitter feud over her fate that divided a family and a nation, died Thursday. Schiavo, 41, died quietly at about 8 a.m. in a Pinellas Park hospice.

Spy agencies wrong
A presidential commission said America's spy agencies were "dead wrong" in most prewar assessments about weapons of mass destruction in Iraq and know disturbingly little about current nuclear threats on Thursday.

American incomes rise
Americans' incomes, bolstered by strong gains in hiring, rose by 0.3 percent in February while consumer spending climbed at an even faster pace of 0.5 percent, the government reported Thursday. The Commerce Department said the gain in spending followed a smaller increase in January.

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | FREE PARKING

Win a free parking spot for a year.

In response to the parking situation at K-State, SafeRide will be sponsoring a competition that will give the winner a permanent parking spot.

Ten participants will compete in a demolition derby at 2 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Registration, which includes proof of insurance, will begin at 1 p.m. today at the Union Courtyard in the K-State Student Union.

Participants will need a helmet and sign a waiver.

The surviving vehicle will be awarded a permanent parking spot. Repairs to vehicles are not the responsibility of SafeRide.

2 | U2 VIDEO SHOOT

After recently seeing a preview for the movie "Friday Night Lights," Bono, the lead singer of the band U2, has decided to re-shoot their video "All Because of You" in Manhattan.

At their Web site, www.u2.com, Bono said, "I love New York and what it has to offer, and I figure this song fits just as well in a smaller part of New York, known as the Little Apple: Manhattan, Kan."

In the original video, U2 performs on the back of a moving flatbed truck, something the group wants to do in Manhattan. Bono said he found the downtown shot in the preview appealing, and hoped to end the video on the K-State campus with a free concert.

The shoot will begin 8 a.m. Saturday at an undisclosed location. The concert is scheduled for 5 p.m. Saturday at the K-State Student Union parking lot.

3 | HIS HOLINESS

For his first time back to the United States since he's been sick, Pope John Paul II will visit Manhattan 3 p.m. Saturday.

The Pope was originally slated to visit Manhattan, N.Y., but one of his bishops fouled up the itinerary, to which the Pope insisted he visit the Little Apple due to his fondness of strange weather, cows and K-State football.

Plans to visit the K-State campus, the Konza Prairie and Coach Bill Snyder are on the top of the Pope's list.

Rumors have circulated in the past weeks that the Pope, who is a fan of the "Wabash Cannonball," will recruit Snyder to the Vatican City.

4 | EARLY SUMMER

In accordance with a new policy enacted due to the "recent weather," school has been cancelled for the rest of the semester.

A steam pipe prank slowly filled K-State president Jon Wefald's office full of steam and left Wefald delirious. His immediate action was to quickly pass a policy which cancelled classes for the rest of the semester. When questioned about the policy, Wefald said it was beautiful outside, and it would be inhumane to keep people indoors. Due to the policy, everyone gets A's.

5 | FREE HOURS

The first ever "Spring Forward Quiz Show" will be at 8 p.m. Sunday, President Jon Wefald will be the host of the event, which has been described as a Jeopardy-like quiz show. Twenty students will vigorously compete for 20 free credit hours.

The top three participants will receive free credit — the winner 12, second place 5 and third place 3 credit hours. The event was created in response to numerous students' letters complaining about tuition costs, Wefald said. The credits can be used for any class that is under the 400 level.

Registration for the event begins at 5 p.m. at the Union Courtyard. The first 200 students may register, and the 20 participants will be selected in a lottery system. Registration fees for the event are $137 per participant.

If you haven't figured it out yet, have a happy April Fools' Day.

Deadline for relay extended

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The entry registration deadline for Relay For Life has been extended to April 3.

Paige Tibbetts, co-recruitment chair, said the deadline was originally March 15.

"We initially thought, 'We need the numbers and money in by March 15 to ensure getting t-shirts,' but we actually have more time," she said.

Relay For Life is 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. April 29 and 30.

Team registration is allowed after April 3, but it is not ensured they will receive the T-shirts prior to the event.

Teams can register through April 25. Donations are accepted through the event date.

Robyn Williams is the event chair and ceremonies chair.

"We're hoping for the best in getting as many registrations as possible," she said.

Erin Spalding, publicity chair, said the new deadline will gain registration of more teams.

"If more want to get involved, that's great.

"We shouldn't restrain them because of the deadline," she said.

Spalding said more radio spots will be given by the organization about the event once the date gets closer.

"My biggest hope is that word of mouth about the event will help registration," she said.

Beach Museum gets taste of folk

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Thomas Page, singer-songwriter of the band Grandpa's .38 sings at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art Wednesday evening. The band is a Kansas-based acoustic folk band.

The Kansas folk band, Grandpa's .38, performed Thursday night for the Arts Above the Arch program at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Arts.

The band, which performed songs from the 1880's through the 1990's, put together a showing of Kansas and American folk songs written by the group and other sources.

Page and his bandmate Patrick McElmurry, who has not toured with the band since he was diagnosed with lung cancer in late 2004, founded the band on a life-long love of music.

Both have disabilities and were out of work when they founded Grandpa's .38. Page has been blind since his early 20s.

Filling in for McElmurry was Albert Alfonso, a Wichita native, who has played the guitar for 15 years. While on the tour with Page, he plays the mandolin, which he learned in the last month for the tour.

Mike Miller, retired professor of computer science, said the music took him back to his college years.

"When I was in college, folk music was very popular. I've always enjoyed it," Miller said.

Kathrine Schlageck, education and public services supervisor for the Beach Museum, said the Beach Museum's Arts Above the Arch program is designed to introduce all types of art.

"We try to integrate music, drama, theatre, and dance. The idea is to broaden the interpretation of the exhibition," Schlageck said.

Professor's ashes to be spread over prairie

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Emeritus professor in botany Theodore Barkley will be remembered in a memorial service Saturday.

Barkley, 70, died of colon cancer complications July 24, 2004, in Fort Worth, Texas.

During his 37 years at K-State, Barkley had several different roles. From 1961 to 1998 he was a curator and professor. He was the associate director for the Division of Biology from 1967 to 1973, and was the Konza Prairie Biological Station Coordinator from 1987 to 1990 and from 1991 to 1992.

Craig Freeman, a former graduate student of Barkley's and curator in the R.L. McGregor Herbarium, said he remembers Barkley for his use of language.

"He was a really gifted communicator. He also loved to pun," Freeman said.

David Hartnett, professor of biology and director of the Konza Prairie Biological Station, said he remembers Barkley was always dedicated to the Konza Prairie.

"He was really committed to the station, and he was committed to seeing it develop and grow long before he was officially involved with the station," Hartnett said.

Barkley's ashes will be scattered on the Konza Prairie in accordance with his wishes before he died.

Freeman said spreading the ashes on the prairie seems fitting for Barkley.

"I'm sure Ted would be delighted to know his ashes are out there as part of the plants he loved so dearly," he said.

TO THE POINT

Prayers for Schiavo family, news media

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

May her spirit rest in peace.

May her parents find strength and solace inside their grief – from their faith and from the many friends who have rallied to their side in this ordeal.

May her husband also be given space to grieve, and to move past the abuse he has received without bitterness or reprisal.

May her funeral be the dignified ceremony of faith and bereavement that it ought to be, and not a politicized circus of protest and speechifying.

May other families who face similarly wrenching decisions about the care of loved ones find a way to make them without deep division or courtroom fights.

May all Americans who, thanks to Terri Schiavo, have been pondering their own wishes for end-of-life care act swiftly on the warning this case offers about the risks of not making their wishes known.

May those who have sought to use this tangled, emotional family trauma to score political points stop doing so – and grasp how shameful their behavior has been.

May those who offered public witness of their moral concerns struggle to understand that people of good will could disagree without being immoral.

May the news media whose hunger to fill airtime leads them to exalt emotional and uninformed chatter over factual reporting learn to mend their ways.

May all Americans accept that no one person, political party or philosophy has a monopoly on understanding the death.

And accepting that, may all Americans agree that we must listen more , must work harder for understanding, must be as ready to learn as to lecture.

Let us not do this to one another again.

Madam president?

Women just as qualified as men to serve in nation's top office

ABBY HILES

Contrary to popular belief, Hillary Rodham Clinton does not have a penis.

I know, I know – it's shocking. A woman who was the backbone and guts behind our most famous "behind closed doors" president is not carrying anything below the belt.

And I have news for you: if she did, she would have been the 42nd president of the United States and not her intern-appreciating husband.

It's a shame that all it takes to get elected here in America is the bits and pieces associated with the male form. Why is it that a country as progressive as ours – with women leaving the house to take jobs at major corporations and fathers on paternity leave – can't seem to get past this little hurdle and elect a woman our leader?

ANATOMY

As we are taught when we are little, men have a penis and women have a vagina. These two sexual organs may play a lot of roles for us throughout our lives: curiosity, pleasure and of course, reproduction.

And as far as I recall, neither the male nor the female sexual organ prevent one gender from being better than the other at a job. Testosterone or estrogen, neither hormone projects a better political sense, and a woman's menstrual cycle doesn't tend to ruin political empires.

Therefore, anatomy cannot be the reason.

POLITICAL SAVVY

Whether you are Republican or Democrat, conservative or liberal, there are important and newsworthy women populating both sides of the political arena.

For you conservative, gun-toting Republicans, consider your potential leader – Ann Coulter. She's smart, outspoken and undaunted in her pursuit to be heard in politics.

Granted, she's a little too crazy for my taste. It must be her PMS, right guys? All the same, she's intelligent and well-informed – NRA membership card and all.

For the left-leaning crowd, I offer up a more serious candidate: Senator Clinton. After realizing that she had more to offer the U.S. than being First Lady, Hillary stepped up and won a spot as junior senator from New York after her husband left office.

As a major player in the Democratic party, she has every right to consider running for this country's highest office. But will she get the chance?

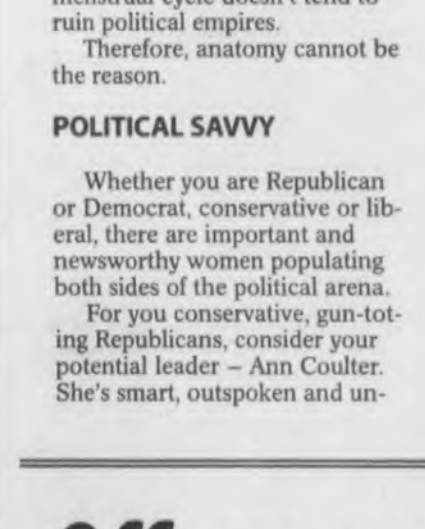
Not likely. Barack Obama in 2008, anyone?

CURRENT ISSUES

It is possible that women just might not be informed enough to make decisions on the current issues on the nation's legislative table. Is that the reason?

Let's see. Abortion: I'm pretty sure that a woman – being the only gender capable of conceiving and bringing a child into the world – would be able to make an informed decision on that issue. Next.

Gay Marriage: being in love isn't something that should be governmentally regulated, and women realize this. After all, the government lets men and women in abusive relationships marry every day. Why not give two men or two women a chance at making a functional relationship and show us straights how it works?



Education: No Child Left Behind, eh? Try no woman left behind. For years women were looked down upon for being educated, and even recently, the president of Harvard questioned women's ability to think scientifically. If anyone could stand up for the rights of education, a woman would probably be a good choice. Frankly, there isn't a good reason out there as to why a woman has not been elected president. It seems that only sexist bias, wounded egos and a largely conservative population are keeping our nation from journeying forth and making a woman our next commander-in-chief.

Off-campus life best choice for students

ANNIE LEWIS

Stereotypes make sorority girls appear rich, and those living in the dorms seem poor, but off-campus living is a mix of everything. Frankly, it is the best option of all.

A few myths need to be dispelled before this column continues. Greek living is definitely not for me. Looking at the houses and girls from the outside, I thought that sorority girls were on a whole other economic class level from me. In order to join, you had to pass a fashion test.

Not to mention living in that nice mansion on the hill. Their bathrooms probably always smell of roses and they all must have walk-in closets to hold the loads of clothes they own.

This is all blatantly wrong. I admit that I fell prey to the "Legally Blonde" portrayal of sorority living – and I could never live in that environment and stay sane. However, it's not quite like that.

I took a tour of the most Fourum-quoted sorority, Delta Delta Delta – more commonly known as Tri-Delt. The outside is gigantic, larger than any dream house of mine. The dining room, television lounge and visiting areas are all roomy, spacious and decorative.

Moving from the larger-than-life dining room to the bedrooms and bathrooms, I was expecting huge bedrooms as well. My jaw dropped when I saw rooms that resembled dorm rooms. The bedrooms at the Manhattan Christian College girls' dorms were bigger than these.

Plus, forget private bathrooms. The suites at K-State's dorms have more privacy than Tri-Delts do. More than 20 girls share one large bathroom with shower stalls.

Sorority life is to some people the green grass on the other side of the proverbial fence. While that grass isn't dead and gross, in reality it looks remarkably similar to dorm life.

It's all about a ton of girls living like sardines together and having a blast doing it. In the dorms, girls do that all the time. You get to know those on your floor and even make friends with random people throughout the building.

There is not much difference between the dorms and Greek houses when the bare bones are revealed. Both places are huge with tiny bedrooms, minimal bathroom privacy and events and activities between halls/houses.

The main difference is that Greek houses are a part of a national community and each individual dorm is uniquely K-State.

Greek living and dorm life have a ton of benefits, but not enough. Sure, all the events and parties are captivating and entertaining, but a person can do all that and more off campus.

Independent life is the best because it prepares people for what life is going to be like. Sharing life with 50 or so other girls is a blast, but it is just not a realistic portrayal of life. Therefore, transitioning from communal living to independence in marriage might prove difficult to those willing to try it.

Living independently off campus has taught many students a truckload of responsibility. There are bills to pay, and students must set their own rules.

Sure, students can learn responsibility in a dorm or a Greek house, but living off-campus also teaches them how to get involved in activities that are not handed to them on a platter.

In the dorms or sororities there are committees, events and leadership positions galore. An apartment or house of girls could coordinate get-togethers, but how often does that really happen? The independent life is infinitely more realistic.

When it is all boiled down, living off campus is truer to life, and real life rocks.

TO THE EDITOR

Marriage amendment would limit all Kansans

Editor,

ACTION (A Campus Taking Initiative On Nonviolence) is looking for 8600 students to vote NO on April 5, 2005. The Kansas Marriage Amendment is not just about "Gay Marriage" or homosexual relationships, but more about limiting all Kansans' civil rights. This amendment would not only ban the recognition of civil unions, but the rights of non-married heterosexual relationships as well.

Part B of the amendment states: "No relationship, other than a marriage, shall be recognized by the state as entitling the parties to the rights or incidents of marriage." Part B negates any legal or contractual agreement between non-married couples or family members. All relationships are excluded except for legal or religious heterosexual marriage; this includes gays, lesbians and non-married heterosexual couples.

This amendment would violate the protective barrier separating church and state. As a nation we value our freedoms and liberties. The United States grants all religions to be separate from government officials and for people to separate their beliefs from the government. The Constitution is to protect citizens' rights rather to take rights away.

The marriage amendment promotes intolerance and bigotry. The proposed marriage amendment writes discrimination into the Kansas Constitution. We believe that if 8600 Kansas State Students voted NO to the proposed Marriage Amendment on April 5, 2005, Riley County would pass as a NO county.

Please do not let Kansas State students be seen as apathetic and close-minded. We are a campus that promotes and respects diversity and human rights.

Sincerely,

Schiavo case surrounded by hypocrites

Editor,

I know what Aaron Duncan was trying to show in his article on Thursday; however, there are some major problems with a few of his arguments. A feeding tube is not considered life-support. A feeding tube falls into what they call life-extending treatment. The laws he wrote about in attacking President Bush are life support and life sustaining. They are machines that breathe for people, pump their hearts, etc.

Currently the Pope has a feeding tube that is similar to Schiavo's. His goes through his nose and into his stomach, instead of the direct like Schiavo's.

Another major hypocrisy that was present in this case, now that Schiavo has died, was the fact that her husband had a common-law two kids with that woman. Michael Schiavo making decisions for a wife whom he is not faithful to is a complete hypocrisy.

I am not trying to make Duncan out to be a bad guy. I just feel that research into both sides of the argument is required if you are talking about hypocrisy.

Homosexuals should be allowed happiness

Editor,

On Thursday, March 31, 2005, there were three articles (an editorial and two letters to the editor) opposing homosexual marriage. I would like to respond to all of them in general, but more specifically to associate professor Shing Chang's letter.

I'm not a Christian, I've never pretended to be, but I would still like to quote the Bible as Christians will agree that it is a valid source. "Judge not lest ye be judged." (Matthew 7:1) Even if homosexuality is against God's will, leave them be and let Him judge them when they die. It is not something like murder or robbery which must be dealt with by humans because it harms others. Homosexuality manifestly does not hurt anyone.

I hear Christians professing love of all people as one of the basic tenets of their religion, and yet few seem to practice it. Love, acceptance, and equality go hand in hand. Love means accepting people in spite of their flaws (or alleged flaws; I don't believe homosexuality is a flaw, but that's beside the point).

Not everyone is born equal, but we are all born with equal rights. Among these rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The pursuit of happiness includes the right to be with the one we love, and get the same benefits in our union. No human being has the right to deprive any other of their rights except to protect themselves or others from material harm (namely bodily or property).

I would like to end with another Biblical quote. "Let him who is without sin among you be the first the throw a stone." (John 8:7) I see lots of stone throwing, and find it hard to believe how many sinless men and women there are around here, especially in a religion which claims everyone, even the most devout, is a sinner.

So, when you think about voting on this issue, remember that homosexuals only want what everyone wants: to be happy, and a "yes" vote is a vote to deprive them of happiness. Then ask yourself, which is really immoral?

Religious must remember tolerance message

Editor,

I am writing in response to Shing Chang's letter published on Thursday. Chang said, "Christians, whether in a minority or majority, would vigorously speak out against this perversion (homosexuality)." But right now, Christians are speaking out for a "perversion." They are unable to remember that the overall message of the Bible – which so many seem to use as a weapon – is one of love, understanding, and tolerance.

Yes, the Bible has passages which tout homosexuality as immoral or "bad" – Chang's reference to the book of Romans among them. However, no one ever seems to remember that – despite our flaws, our sins, our misgivings – that the Bible has also promised us, as Christians, that if we believe in God, we will be absolved of our sins and welcomed lovingly.

In the end, we've been told by God himself that we will be forgiven. Nowhere in the Bible is there a reference to, "Love everyone except (your chosen group to discriminate against here)."

Hate and discrimination always make more fantastic headlines than love does. But we need to remember – straight or gay, Christian or non-Christian – that love and acceptance are rather powerful concepts. Christians need to remember that we, too, were persecuted in our early days for believing in something so radical, so incomprehensible, that others felt it needed to be obliterated.

Accepting something is different than favoring it. Even acceptance is a large step in freeing ourselves from hate. Christians need to remember that we are called on by God to love as he does.

That is a love without discrimination.

Punter's use of steroids has gone too far

This steroid thing has gotten out of hand.

What is the world of sports coming to, when punters begin to feel the pressure to be bigger and stronger in order to compete in the National Football League?

MATTHEW GIRARD

Earlier this week, "60 Minutes Wednesday" reported Carolina Panthers punter Todd Sauerbrun had testosterone cream prescriptions filled, and obtained the injectable steroid Stanozolol during the Panther's Super Bowl year of 2003.

Now, it makes sense to me that power hitters in Major League Baseball, and positions such as offensive linemen might be under the pressure to be bigger and better than the next guy, but a punter?

Where's the logic in that?

When it comes to steroids, the name of the game is power.

Power hitters want to hit a home-run every time at bat and linemen have to deal with 400-pound athletic behemoths.

Punting, on the other hand, is generally a finesse skill, unless you are on a team that can't get past its own 20-yard line. The punter's job is to pin the other team inside its 10-yard line by directional punting.

How could steroids possibly help?

A punter on the 'juice' would, first of all, look ridiculous in the kiddy pads they tend to wear, and there is no coach in the NFL that wants a punter who can't kick a ball less than 70 yards.

The only time punters need to deal with bigger players on the field is when they are faking being run into.

These Oscar-worthy performances take some style and grace that a muscle-bound punter could never pull off.

Besides, as the saying goes, "the larger they are, the harder they fall" and every punter I've ever seen would rather avoid any kind of contact.

Yeah, they need to make the occasional stop on a punt-return, but a simple shove or a well-disguised trip work just fine.

I think Sauerbrun was just getting tired of being made fun about his plastic shoulder pads and helmet he got from Wal-Mart.

TRACK AND FIELD

Back on track

Winning meet not focus for Rovelto

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the first of two consecutive visits to Texas, the K-State track and field squad hopes to continue its recent surge of momentum at the UTEP Springtime Invitational Saturday in El Paso, Texas.

The team is seeking to build off a spring break in which eight athletes qualified for the NCAA Midwest Regional Championships, and senior distance runner Matthew Chesang set a school record in the 10,000-meter run (28 minutes, 35.48 seconds).

Chesang, from Eldama Revine, Kenya, was named the Big 12 Track and Field Athlete of the Week for his effort in breaking Alfredo Rosas' 21-year-old record of 29:16.48.

K-State distance coach Michael Smith, who graduated from Bucknell University in 1988, said he thought Chesang could run fast enough to challenge the school record.

"I was unsure as to the time that (Chesang) would run, but I expected him to be close to the school record," Smith said. "I am not surprised that he did that, but I was very pleased that he did it. He is probably capable of running faster."

Despite last weekend's topnotch performances, K-State will only send a few distance runners to tomorrow's meet, and Chesang will probably not race again until mid-April.

"A 10,000 takes a lot out of you," Smith said. "It is difficult to run at a very high level too many times, so we have decided to pick our moments with those endurance athletes."

Breanna Eveland, one of K-State's athletes who qualified for the regional meet at the Arizona State Invitational last Saturday, will compete in the pole vault.

"I am excited about this meet because it should be pretty good conditions and the track should be pretty fast," Eveland said. "It is so much better to jump when you are hot and sweaty instead of when you are cold and your muscles are tight."

Eveland, who owns K-State's indoor pole vault record (13-09 1/4), said she wants to make progress toward her goal for the outdoor season.

"I would love to jump 14 feet, and in doing that I would also set the outdoor school record," she said. "I was kind of tired last weekend, but I am feeling pretty fresh and my body is feeling pretty good."

Junior sprinter Shunte' Thomas, one of K-State's leading point scorers, is scheduled to run in her second race after recovering from an injury she suffered six weeks ago.

Head coach Cliff Rovelto, in his 13th season, said Thomas is not near 100 percent in terms of conditioning.

"She is still a long ways away from being full strength," Rovelto said. "It is going to be a while before she is really ready to go."

The University of Texas-El Paso, the University of New Mexico and Texas Tech University are the three teams scheduled to compete against K-State at the invitational, and teams will receive scores.

Rovelto said winning the meet is important, but not his main focus.

"Under the circumstances with who we have got and where people are in their training, we are going to try and do the best that we can," he said. "But we are not going to sacrifice down the road for this weekend."

ROWING

Rowers looking for better finish

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's rowing team heads to San Diego this weekend to compete in the two-day San Diego Crew Classic in hopes of improving on last year's 10th-place finish.

"We underperformed there last year," Coach Patrick Sweeney said. "This is a competitive meet, and we're aiming to try and win."

The Crew Classic will prove to be a challenging meet, with 3,400 athletes competing at the event, including Olympians.

"We're seeing people we haven't seen, so we're kind of shooting in the dark," Sweeney said.

Sophomore Claire Johnson, coxswain for the Second Varsity Eight boat, said she sees the cross winds on the 2,000-meter course in San Diego as a potential obstacle for the Wildcats.

"We deal with a lot of wind on Tuttle Lake," Johnson said. "Lately, we've been learning to adapt to conditions so we can deal with whatever happens."

K-State is scheduled to compete in two races this weekend – one for the First Varsity Eight and one for the Second Varsity Eight.

The First Varsity Eight squad is entered in the Women's Cal Cup, which begins at 8:10 a.m. Saturday.

The Second Varsity Eight squad will be in the Women's JV8 event, which begins at 10:30 a.m. Saturday.

Motivated by last year's disappointing finish, Johnson said she feels K-State will be ready this time around.

"Our boats are faster than last year – we've had more time on the water and are more prepared," Johnson said.

Wildcats face No. 1 Longhorns

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One national baseball powerhouse down, one to go.

After upsetting No. 21 Wichita State 6-5 on Tuesday, the K-State Wildcats travel south to take on the No. 1-ranked Texas Longhorns in a three-game series starting Friday at Disch-Falk Field in Austin, Texas.

The Longhorns (24-4, 2-3) come into the weekend series against the Wildcats (14-10, 1-5) winners of eight out of their last 11 games and have not lost to K-State in 15 games.

Despite the Wildcats' win over the Shockers, having the best team batting average (.334) in the Big 12 Conference and scoring more than eight runs per game, K-State's task is a large one as it faces a young but effective Texas pitching squad.

"They are going to be young on the mound, but that doesn't matter," Coach Brad Hill said.

The Longhorn pitchers are allowing 3.3 runs per game and are holding opponents to a .235 batting average.

On offense, Texas has been led by their infield.

Senior infielder Seth Johnston is hitting .385 and leads the team in RBIs with 23, while junior catcher Taylor Teagarden is hitting .33[illegible].

Hill said although the Longhorns are eighth in the conference in team batting, they don't need many runners to cross home plate.

"They play for runs, they pitch it very well and there again, they don't have to score that many runs because of how good their pitching staff is," Hill said.

K-State will be looking for its second Big 12 conference series win of the season, but will have to do it in a place they have not won since 1999.

"They know they're good and obviously at their place they're going to be real tough," Hill said.

Although the Wildcats have lost 15 consecutive games to the Longhorns, Hill said K-State's first win in nine tries against Wichita State gave his team a boost of confidence.

"Our big thing is believing in ourselves and then trying to know that we can win even though we may make some mistakes," he said. "We can battle through it."

Staff Reports

WBB | Wecker selected to Wooden All-American team

K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was one of the top five players selected to the John R. Wooden Award Women's All-American Team, and is now a finalist for the Women's Wooden Award for the nation's top college basketball player this season.

Wecker

Joining Wecker on the team are LSU's Seimone Augustus, Duke's Monique Curry, Ohio State's Jessica Davenport and Minnesota's Janel McCarville.

The 29th Annual Wooden Award Ceremony and trophy presentation will be presented at noon on Saturday, April 9, live on CBS.

NFL | Buhl signs free-agent deal with Tampa Bay

Former K-State All-America linebacker Josh Buhl was signed a contract with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers as a free agent on Wednesday.

Buhl

Buhl entered the league last year with the Cleveland Browns, was waived, and signed by Baltimore. The Ravens then released Buhl on March 23 and signed with the Buccaneers after clearing waivers.

The Mesquite, Texas, native set a school record with 184 tackles during the 2003 season, and was a semifinalist for the Butkus Award, given annually to the nation's top linebacker, in 2003.

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Maria Sharapova ran off five consecutive games to take the lead, then won a marathon final game and beat Venus Williams 6-4, 6-3 Thursday in the semifinals of the Nasdaq-100 Open.

Sharapova

The No. 2-seeded Sharapova advanced to her first Key Biscayne final. On Saturday, she'll meet the winner of the match Thursday night between unseeded Kim Clijsters and No. 1 Amelie Mauresmo.

Williams, seeded eighth, ended a streak of six consecutive losses to her sister Serena in the quarterfinals. But with Serena watching from the stands, Venus was unable to pull off another upset.

NBA | Brown will return to coach Pistons on Friday

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Detroit Pistons coach Larry Brown will return to the bench Friday against the Los Angeles Clippers after a 10-game absence following a procedure related to a previous hip surgery.

Brown

Brown has been unable to coach since undergoing a procedure related to hip surgery, which caused him to miss six games in November.

Brown's future with the defending NBA champions became uncertain Tuesday when he openly questioned whether he'd be able to return this season.

NFL | MTA accepts $720M bid for new Jets stadium

NEW YORK — The New York Jets' plan for a $1.7 billion Manhattan stadium that also could serve as the centerpiece of the 2012 Olympics cleared a major hurdle Thursday when its bid was approved by the state agency that owns the proposed site.

The Metropolitan Transportation Authority board voted unanimously in favor of the football team's $720 million offer for rights to develop the site over a remote railyard adjoining the Hudson River. The board rejected two competing proposals.

The Jets' proposal for the 75,000-seat stadium is backed by the city and state and is crucial to New York's attempt to host the 2012 Olympics.

April Fools' Day dates back to 16th century; students share stories of fun

By Angie Service
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although April Fools' Day was started over a serious subject, the day has become a laughing matter.

April Fools' Day is believed to have originated in France during the 16th century, but the British are credited with bringing the tradition to the United States.

Until 1582, the New Year celebration began on March 25 and ended on April 1. During that year, King Charles IX adopted the Gregorian Calendar, which moved the New Year to January 1.

Many people refused to accept the new date, simply forgot or were unaware of the change. Being mocked, those people received invitations to nonexistent parties and foolish gifts.

The custom of playing tricks on people has continued, and many K-State students are involved with the tradition by being fooled or fooling friends and family.

"One year my brother and I came home to find all the doorknobs covered in Vaseline. We couldn't get to any paper towels or tissues to wipe it off because they were behind greased doors and we were stuck by the front door," Kalkofen said.

Being tricked can be funny, but making a fool of your friend is another perk to April Fools' Day.

"After a long night drinking the day before April Fools' Day, my roommate passed out in his bed," said Ian Holman, senior in secondary education.

"I then got a big glass of water and poured it all over him so he'd think he'd wet himself. He woke up confused and started to go get changed when he heard me yell 'April Fool' from the other room."

Physical jokes are funny, like "kick me" signs and whoopie cushions, but playing jokes with the mind can be hilarious, too.

"I told my mom that I was pregnant. She went through about four different emotions in a minute: from being pissed, to sorry, to sad, and back to pissed," Rae Sample, sophomore in secondary education, said. "Then she got even more angry when I started laughing."

Bright Eyes' releases remind listener to dream

As faithful readers of the Edge section's music reviews (what few there are) may have noticed, I have not done a music review in ages. Now, I could blame my critical absence on being really swamped with school, but the real reason for my absence has been two fold.

First, I graduate in May and with this transition into the 'real world,' I pass my music reviewer torch onto Mark Sibilla, a man who, for the past semester, has proved that his musical instincts far surpass my own and whose support I have exploited for the past semester.

Mark Sibilla, whose ear is constantly on the pulse of new, important and brilliant music, has been my safety net for the past semester, for whenever I fall short on a review, Mark is always there to pick up my slack. Therefor, I pass the torch of self-righteous musical criticism on to Mark with no worry plaguing my heart.

"I'm Wide Awake, Its Morning"

Album review by Jessica Grant

Secondly, I have been stuck on an album that I have yet found the words to express. Much to my chagrin, my little sister, in a superior act of student surpassing the teacher, beat me to buying not one, but both of the new Bright Eyes albums. After listening to "I'm Wide Awake, It's Morning" and "Digital Ash in a Digital Urn," I found myself absolutely stuck.

How could I express to my readers the importance of Bright Eyes' latest releases? After a few weak attempts at snarky, catchy leads, I saved the reviews to a disk and began to stew. What captivating, journalistically pleasing lead could I write that would even begin to draw my readers into a review of "I'm Wide Awake, It's Morning," which is, quite possibly, one of the most important records released to our generation?

I've come to the conclusion that there really is no way to snappliy express the importance of the newest release from Connor Oberst aka Bright Eyes.

What the reader should know is that "I'm Wide Awake, It's Morning" is a must buy. Do not burn this album, or simply download a few tracks to add to a mixed CD. This album may be one of the most important pieces of art created by someone of our generation. A bold statement, I know.

"Digital Ash in a Digital Urn"

Album review by Jessica Grant

In lieu of a transition here, I will simply note that "Digital Ash in a Digital Urn" is the kind of album that I do not necessarily encourage people to burn, but it is a pretty sub par delve into electronica. In fact, do not buy this album without listening to it first. Save yourself some monetary anguish.

However, I assure you that "I'm Wide Awake, It's Morning" is the kind of album that is safe to buy without listening to. This album rides the same folksy and powerful vein as the early works of Bob Dylan, at times scathing, but always honest.

Lyrically, Oberst is the voice of an apathetic generation that has been so bent on upholding the standards of being 'cool,' that is has suffered artistically. At times Oberst is insightful, other times angry, but always hopeful.

Musically, Oberst tackles folk tunes and indie gems without ever losing his trademark country twang.

Overall, "I"m Wide Awake, It's Morning" is the type of album that is much needed by my generation. "I'm Wide Awake, It's Morning" is the kind of album that reminds us that it is still acceptable to dream.

CELEB NEWS

ABC's Koppel Leaving 'Nightline'

Ted Koppel, who has provided a late-night alternative to laughs as anchor of ABC News' "Nightline" since it began 25 years ago, said Thursday he will leave the network when his contract expires in December.

Koppel, 65, said he's not retiring. His departure casts doubt on the future of "Nightline," although Koppel and ABC News President David Westin expressed confidence that it will continue.

Wyle to Check Out of 'ER' After Season

Noah Wyle is checking out of the emergency room after 11 seasons playing Dr. John Carter on the hit U.S. television program "ER," a spokesman for the actor said on Thursday.

Wyle, 33, is the last member of the original cast who has stayed with the hospital drama for all of its 11 years. The season finale on May 19 will be his last appearance as a regular cast member, although he plans to return for four episodes next season, starting in the fall.

Corgan Embraces the 'Future' on Solo Debut

Former Smashing Pumpkins/Zwan leader Billy Corgan has wrapped work on his solo debut, "THEFUTUREEMBRACE," to be released June 21 by Warner Bros.

The first single to be released to U.S. radio outlets will be "Walking Shade," while Corgan will embark on his first solo tour of intimate venues beginning in July.

Forensics competition at K-State

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament is coming to K-State this weekend.

Competitors from 95 schools across the country will be competing in events that will take place all day Saturday, Sunday and Monday, said Craig Brown, instructor of speech and K-State's director of forensics.

Brown said students will compete in 11 different events that break down into three main categories: prepared speeches, when competitors present a speech they have worked on; limited preparation, when competitors draw a topic and then speak on it; and interpretation, when competitors will act out different forms of literature, such as a short story or a poem.

There are two ways to qualify for the tournament. During the regular season, if a competitor gets in the finals at least three times and averages third place or better, they qualify. There is also a district qualifier at the end of the season for all others who have not yet qualified, Brown said.

Brown said it is an honor for K-State to be chosen to host the event because schools interested in hosting the tournament bid for it two years in advance at the national committee meeting.

K-State last held the tournament in 1984, and Larry Schnoor, the AFA-NIET tournament director said that K-State's last time as host was one of the reasons for choosing it again.

"The facilities were very good," Schnoor said.

Schnoor said they look at the number of classrooms that are available within close proximity of each other for the event, the pool of judges available and a town with ample hotel space. But one of the reasons K-State was chosen was because of its forensics team, he said. They always place in the top 20 teams at this tournament.

"They have had an outstanding program for years," Schnoor said. "They have been consistently one of the top schools in the nation."

Brown said the support of the university is another great reason for K-State to be hosting the tournament.

"We have a team that not only does well but we also have the support of the administration," he said.

5K walk/run to benefit community

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prizes will go to the runners who lead the pack in the Lead the Way 5K Walk/Run on April 16.

The race, sponsored by Leadership Studies and Programs Ambassadors, American Humanics Student Association and KSU Students for Organ Donations, will start at Bosco Plaza at 10 a.m. and will follow the general route of the Homecoming Race, ending back at Bosco Plaza, said Alex Serra, fund-raising and finance chair of Leadership Studies and Programs Ambassadors.

Prizes will be given to the winners of 10 categories: men's and women's 17 and under, 18-25, 26-35, 36-50 and 51 and over. There will also be door prizes.

The three sponsoring organizations hope the event will draw in between 300 and 400 participants, said Serra, junior in kinesiology. All three will use the proceeds from registration fees to benefit the community.

"Pretty much all this is going back to the community in one form or another," she said.

The Leadership Studies and Program's Ambassadors will put its share of the registration fees toward a scholarship for leadership students.

"We really wanted to get a scholarship," Serra said. "We thought this would be a large-scale project that would be doable."

Serra said American Humanics Student Association will put the proceeds toward community-based programs, scholarships and funding.

Erin Miller, president of KSU Students for Organ Donation and junior in biochemistry, said the group would like to use the funds to bring in a speaker about organ donation.

"We all thought it was a great fund raiser and it promotes a healthy lifestyle," Miller said.

Members of the three organizations solicited donations of prizes and funds for T-shirts from the community and area businesses.

Through today, the registration fee is $10 per runner. After today the fee goes up to $12, but runners can register as late as the day of the race.

Registration forms are available at www.k-state.edu/leadership and at various places on campus, including the K-State Student Union, the Office of Student Activities and Services, Peters Recreation Complex and the Leadership Studies and Programs building. There is also a registration and information table set up today in the Union.

City to receive spring cleaning; crews help with pickup

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spring is here, and it's time for Manhattan's annual Spring Cleanup Program.

The city of Manhattan is working with several refuse contractors in the area to clear trash and debris. Arrow Trash Service, B & L Trash Service, Joe Mallon Trash Service and Waste Management will pick up items during normal route schedules for customers.

Jeff Walters, department of public works superintendent, said the crews are divided into five areas throughout the city.

He said the city of Manhattan crews will pick up yard waste, grass clippings and leaves, but the trash must be placed in approved yard waste paper bags.

Walters said trash services will collect trash and debris, but no household appliances, tires, batteries, concrete, construction debris or household hazardous waste, such as paint thinners, herbicides or insecticides.

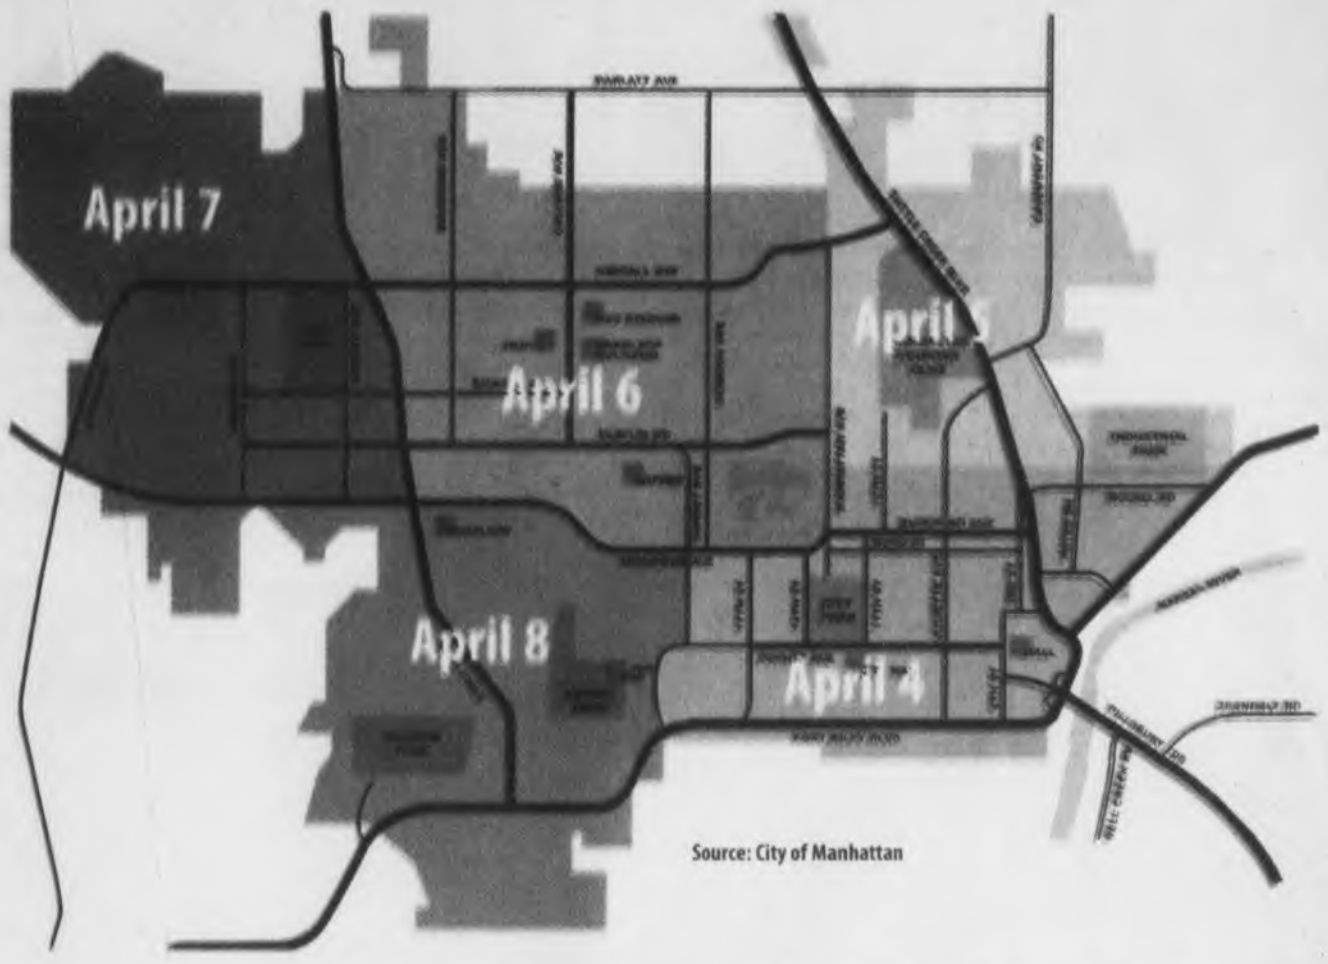
"This is a really good program. We clear several hundred loads of brush and yard waste," Walters said. "It really aids in cleaning up the town."

He said the cleanup should be done by Friday afternoon.

"Just make sure that you put your trash out by 8 a.m. on the date of your usual pickup," Walters said.

"If your usual day is on Monday and we only come Tuesday through Friday, then you may want to contact your trash service. We only go through an area once, so make sure everything is out because we don't want to miss you."

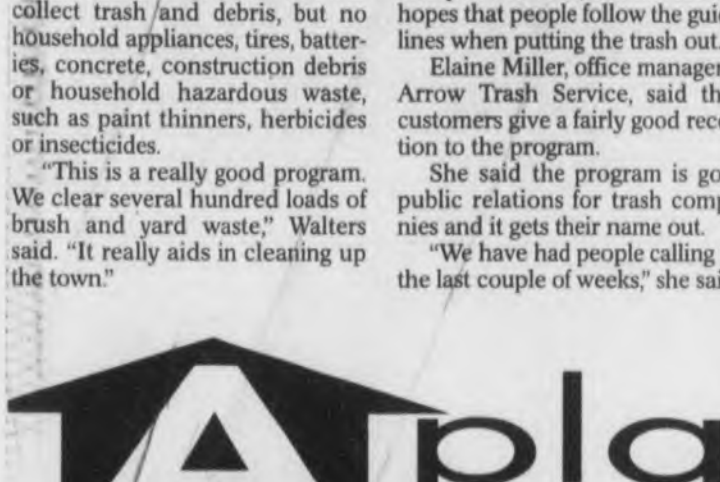
Diane Brummett, owner of B & L Trash Service, said the program is a lot of extra work, but worth it.



"Some of us have lived in the community all of our lives," she said. "It seemed like the right thing to do. The city wants to do the program, and we should help."

She said about 25 percent of their customers take part in the program. People save up the waste and put a lot out, but the crew is hopes that people follow the guidelines when putting the trash out.

Elaine Miller, office manager at Arrow Trash Service, said their customers give a fairly good reception to the program.



She said the program is good public relations for trash companies and it gets their name out.

"We have had people calling for the last couple of weeks," she said.

Planning key to living together

By Heather Bunch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cohabitation before marriage has become more acceptable with many college students.

"My girlfriend has a lease somewhere else, which makes her think that she lives there, when in reality she doesn't," said Nathan Jackson, senior in theater. "She keeps her clothes and stuff at my house, and really, I just see the whole situation as a waste of money. Living together would be cheaper.

Jackson said he also doesn't think living together would be inappropriate from a religious stand point.

"I don't see anything wrong with it," he said. "I think people can live together without having sex."

Besides saving on cost, many couples live together to see if they are compatible for marriage.

Disciples of Christ minister George Bever said he would advise serious thought before starting the cohabitation process.

"You need to work out, discuss and write down how you will handle things like finances, recreation, home life responsibilities and even your own families before ever moving in," Bever said. "Writing these things down is an important step in the process as well. It's kind of like a prenuptial. The other party can't really dispute what you said if it's written down."

Mathias Langford, senior in anthropology said he disagrees with couples who live together before marriage.

"I believe that sex is ordained of God and should be saved for marriage," he said. "When living with someone, you are faced with that temptation everyday. You are setting yourself up to fail."

Bever said everything comes down to personal values.

"It's somewhat like an engagement," he said. "You have to ask yourself 'What's the meaning of it to me, and to us?' and if the answer fits in your values, then good. If it's questionable, you should forget it."

Prenuptial agreements have pros and cons

By Heather Bunch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The blushing bride has many things to get done before that anticipated "I Do."

There's the church, the minister, the music, the dress, the cake, the flowers, the caterers and for many brides to be, the lawyer.

Prenuptial agreements have become second nature in American society today. Rarely does a movie star wed without signing the dotted line, and many Americans are following suit.

Steve Wiechman of the Wiechman Law Office in Topeka said a prenuptial agreement is a contract between two parties signed before the marriage that protects personal lives and finances in case of divorce or death.

"If you bring children into a marriage and should pass away, the prenuptial agreement can make sure that the money you brought into the marriage goes to those children and they are taken care of," Wiechman said. "Your partner is only entitled to a portion of wealth and possessions accumulated during the time of the marriage."

Wiechman said usually the case is a protection prenuptial.

"Unless you are marrying someone from a different financial class, or stand to inherit a great deal of wealth, it usually isn't necessary."

Though she isn't getting a prenuptial for her summer wedding this year, Valerie Hoyt, sophomore in jewelry design, said she can understand the need for them.

"If you marry and have money, or if they have a lot of debt, then I think it's a good idea, especially if they've been divorced before," Hoyt said.

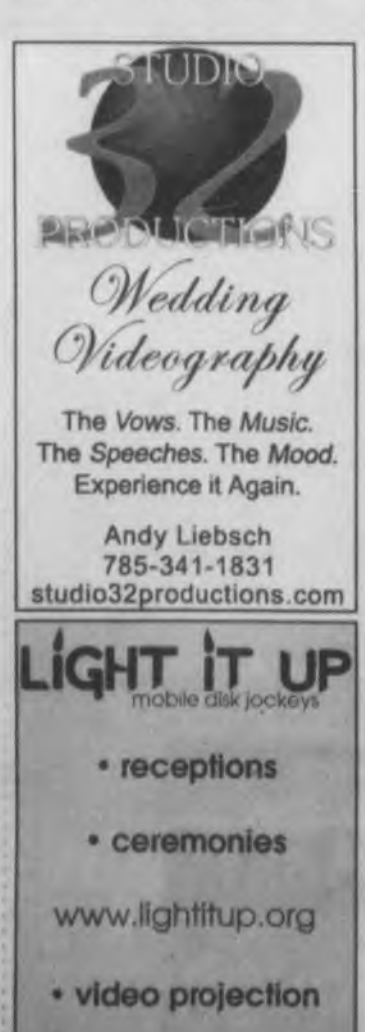
However, Laura Strugar, senior in theater, said she wouldn't marry someone who asked her to sign a prenuptial agreement. Strugar is planning a June 10 wedding this year.

"I think that if you feel you need to make out a prenuptial, you shouldn't be marrying that person in the first place, because you should be working to be married 'til death do you part, not just until it doesn't work out," she said.

Prenuptial agreements are difficult to get around, but can be overturned in divorce proceedings.

"If written correctly, it's hard to break them," Wiechman said. "But in order to be valid, both parties must disclose all assets and debts, and the party of more wealth must make provisions for the poor party."

Professor of computer science Dan Andresen said that when he married his wife six years ago, they didn't see a prenuptial agreement as necessary.



"We both had strong moral and religious objections to divorce, thus mitigating the need for a prenuptial," Andresen said.

Andresen said logically, given the current divorce rates, he could understand the need for prenuptials, but personally, he found them revolting.

"I'd rather see people do the hard work of counseling and working on the relationship instead of just walking away from it," he said.

Spice up bachelorette parties with personal touches

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

I have been waiting for tomorrow evening's big event ever since I became engaged.

Twenty-four hours from now I will eagerly wake up with butterflies in my stomach and a huge grin on my face, anticipating what is to come.

It's time to party, baby. The last leg of the wedding marathon begins tomorrow night as a handful of my closest girlfriends throw me quite the bachelorette party.

There won't be a trip to Rusty's and male entertainment dressed as firefighters or police officers won't be knocking at my door. I won't be attached to a blow-up doll or wearing a Lifesaver t-shirt looking for money.

No, my friends, this bachelorette party will feature pajamas, slippers and a bowl full of cookie dough – the three key things to make any slumber party a success.

When my maid of honor asked me what I wanted to do for my bachelorette party a few months ago, I couldn't resist the thought of having a huge slumber party. You know, the ones where we girls stay up all night, talking about boys and gossiping over who was going out with whom. It's a trip down memory lane, and who better to spend the night with than my closest girlfriends?

These days bachelorette parties have become dull. The bride-to-be wears a cheap veil, dresses in a t-shirt quoting "Suck for a Buck," gets drunk, and then goes home, feeling sick and tired. Instead of hitting the bars, which can be done any other night, why not personalize the party?

Here are some tips for those individuals with the difficult job of throwing a bachelorette party, suggested by "The Knot" Web site.

1. Hit me, baby. Gambling is the newest craze, so turn it into a party. Invite the bride and her guests to a casino night, featuring black jack and poker tables. Hire a dealer or rent out slot machines. Even better, save some money and take a weekend trip to Vegas. Who knows? Maybe the bride will win big and have money for her honeymoon.

2. Tea for two. Or three, or four, or ten. Throw a tea party, having the guests and bride dress up in frilly dresses or skirts. Buy white gloves for everyone to wear and make a sampling of light appetizers and flavored teas.

3. Spa service. Set up a homemade spa for the bride, full of facials, pedicures and manicures. Whip up some homemade facial treatments and have them available for guests.

4. Lip sync. Rent a karaoke machine and let loose. Set up a stage and let guests go vocal to their favorite songs. Better yet, videotape the bride singing her favorite song and it turns into the perfect wedding day gift – for either the bride or the groom.

5. Search around. Set up a video scavenger hunt by scattering different wedding day items at popular places around town. Break into teams and videotape the adventure.

Who knows what tomorrow night will bring? I may end up looking and acting like a fool, but whom better to spend it with than my closest girls – in our pajamas?

Waiting to settle down allows personal time

By Dan Masny
THE PITT NEWS (U. PITTSBURGH)

PITTSBURGH - My cousin is getting married in a couple weeks. She is 23 years old and graduated less than a year ago. When I first found out about this, my reaction was a mixture of confusion and anger.

Growing up, it was always my brother, my two cousins and I, all born within two years of each other. From the time we were little kids all the way through college, I could count on the four of us being at the 'kiddie' table at every family function. A certain dynamic exists. Our senses of humor fit well together. Now, every time the family gets together, it will be the four of us and her fiance – or worse yet, the three of us without her.

It always confuses me when people my age get engaged and married right out of college. I don't question that they are in love, and they no doubt know each other very well. But the person who you know now isn't necessarily going to be the same person in a couple years.

A person grows into someone different when he or she leaves school. There is a transition period when you go from being a student or entry-level employee to being someone with more responsibility and a different kind of challenge.

Regardless, I do admire that they feel their love is able to withstand the fundamental changes they will go through, no matter how irrational or foolish that might be.

It seems that some people are just in a rush to get to that part of their lives where they are "grown up." Some people want to get a 9-to-5 job, move to the suburbs and find a nice house with a white picket fence. They're missing out on their 20s! This is the prime of life.

This is the time when we are no longer simply training to be something else – we are actually out there in the world practicing our professions. This is that time when we are the most free from attachments and restrictions that might keep us from doing the things we want to do.

If I wanted to get up and move to a different city, there would be nothing stopping me. If I wanted to travel to France to teach English for a year, I would be free to do that. If I wanted to join the Peace Corps or volunteer to fight the AIDS pandemic, I could. I don't have to worry about being there for children, supporting a family or leaving the one I love behind – well, I might be leaving the one I love behind, but if it is meant to be, the love will still be there when I finally come home.

So instead of settling down, move to a city, get a job, rent a studio apartment, go to cultural events and meet some new friends. Take some time to yourself and figure out who you are. Go to grad school, focus on your career, date different people and find what it is that makes you happy.

While you are at it, party a lot, create some stories, have some wild times and make some memories. When you settle down, life changes forever, and not for the worse. But there is an element of freedom and flexibility that's lost. If you bring children into the world, you have a huge responsibility that you can never abandon.

Not only that, but can college-age people financially afford to get married? Most of us are thousands of dollars in debt and will be for years to come. My father always told me not to get married until I'm able to pay for the wedding, and I think that's reasonable advice.

The flip side of this is that I am somewhat jealous of my cousin and friends, who are so sure they have found the people who make their lives complete that they are willing to make that kind of commitment. I envy the fact that they have that one thing figured out, that they don't have to worry about dating ever again and more importantly, that no matter what comes their way, they have partners with whom they can take on life.

It's wonderful that you have someone to share your existence with, but getting married won't make you grown up. I hope all you soon-to-be newlyweds are adult enough to make it work and try as hard as you can not to lose your 20s.

GAS | Inflated prices caused by developing countries

the market as high as they can to make more money," Rossell said. "They aren't concerned with everyone else because they don't see the after-effects."

In a world where money does the talking, the "after-effects" can be brutal.

"It's not fair for the wholesalers who have to buy the gas at market value," Rossell said. "I can't be in business with selling below cost."

Roger Trenary, economics professor, said he disagreed with Rossell.

(Speculators) don't trade paper willy-nilly," Trenary said. "They guess based on facts. I don't think it's artificial."

Trenary said the inflated prices are actually a result of less-developed countries growing.

"China and India are growing so fast, which increases the world demand for oil," Trenary said. "And OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries) isn't able to increase its output."

The inability of OPEC to increase its output is because it doesn't have the resources to meet the demand, according to www.opec.org.

Relatively speaking, the price of U.S. gas is not abnormally high, Trenary said.

"In a sense, we still have pretty cheap gasoline, compared to other commodities," Trenary said. "After the current price of oil is corrected from inflation, it's actually 50 percent less than it was 30 years ago."

Seemingly, gas prices have been a disturbance for years. Last week was no different.

Lizzy Horsley, senior in secondary education, was planning on driving to Colorado to go skiing for spring break. Thanks to high gas prices, Horsley's plans changed.

"It's just ridiculous that the price of gas is that high," Horsley said. "It affects all parts of peoples' lives."

She said she was in favor of an expanded record of inspections, something Brad McCune said he agrees with.

"I'm in favor of a rental log," McCune said. "That way you know what properties are available, not just for students, but for soldiers and other families that are trying to find housing."

The increased amount of students living in houses was another issue the candidates discussed.

Mark Hatesohl, incumbent city commissioner candidate, said there are ordinances in place to prevent more than four students in a house. He said this is a concern to other residents for various reasons.

"There are already rules in place, if you know there are supposed to be four students in a house and there are more, turn them in," Hatesohl said. "If a crime is committed, who is responsible? We all are. If you know people are down the street doing something they're not, call someone.

"The problem with this issue is where there are boyfriends and girlfriends who don't live there but spend a lot of time over there. That can be a problem, but how can you stop that? I don't know."

Morris-Hardeman echoed Hatesohl's sentiments and said there needs to be better access to residents who see a problem.

"We've all probably seen it, there are seven cars in the driveway and trash is overflowing and flying around," she said. "People have complaints and they don't know who to call.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Tom Phillips, Jayme Morris-Hardeman, Brad McCune, Jim Sherow and Mark Hatesohl answered questions on city and neighborhood issues at the City Commission forum, sponsored by the Coalition of Manhattan Neighborhood Associations. The election for city commission will be held on Tuesday, April 5.

"I want a central network that will handle calls, because people get frustrated and don't think anything is getting done, or they call the wrong department. There's a better way to address concerns and enforce the law."

Each candidate said Manhattan doesn't have enough parks.

Jim Sherow said when the city was planned, there was park space set aside, but as the city has grown, it isn't enough.

"I think we have a lack of rec space and a lack of soccer fields," Sherow said. "I think there's also a lack of passive park space, where people can go out and enjoy the park and not worry about a soccer ball flying by. I think both need to be addressed simultaneously."

Tom Phillips said the city needs to look towards the future when planning on green space.

"There's a great demand for land and it would be wise for planning on options for the future," he said. "As the city grows over the next 20 years, we don't want to miss an opportunity today, otherwise people will look back and be disappointed with our decisions.

"I think we have a responsibility to do it, but it's a balancing act, but we have needs for open space."

It's not time for the proposed indoor aquatic facility, candidates said.

Sherow said the timing is wrong and there are other places that the money could be spent.

"I think we need to focus on our schools and neighborhoods first," he said. "We have a need for an aquatic center and I support it, but we have to do it at the right time."

Phillips said additional information needs to be gathered before the city goes ahead with any plan.

Senate body to keep process of selection

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was close, but the selection process for Student Senate leadership will remain as is.

The senate chair, senate vice chair, faculty senate representative and intern coordinator positions are selected by the senate body.

Committee chairs are selected by the chair and approved by the senate. None of these positions require students to be elected senators first.

Under the proposed changes, students need to be elected to a senate position first to be qualified for senate leadership. This would not affect at-large members within committees.

The bill received a 29-22-1 vote in favor of the changes, but it required a two-thirds majority, which was a minimum of 35 votes.

Arts and Sciences Senator Ben Procter said students should elect student leadership.

"We're here to give voice to students, and this is something students want," Procter said.

Faculty Senate Representative Blair Reynolds, senior in political science and psychology, was not elected and said he was grateful for the opportunity.

By limiting leadership positions only to elected senators, Reynolds said it limits variety.

"Never do something that limits your applicant pool," he said.

Faculty Representative Bill Muir said it is not democratic to allow people to benefit from the leadership positions, some of which are paid up to $5,000, without being elected.

"Those types of positions that are highly respected and have compensation should have elections involved," Muir said.

Chair Eleri Griffin said the selection process allows for more minority influence possibilities. With Senate being mainly white and greek, it's something to consider, she said.

Josh Criswell, sophomore in social science, who was a guest at senate, said he could think of eight minority students who will willingly serve in leadership positions. He said minorities don't have much of a chance to win a Senate seat.

"Realistically speaking, it's not going to happen," Criswell said.

POPE JOHN PAUL II

Final transition

Debbie Hale, Manhattan resident, fights back her tears during prayer before Mass at St. Isidore Church on Saturday. Many people came to the church early to pay respect to Pope John Paul II, who died earlier that afternoon. A candle-light vigil will take place the night before the funeral.

Pope dies at 84; remembered for commitment to unity, world peace

By Jesse Manning
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Noticeably absent from the Sunday Mass at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center was part of a prayer that had been said for more than 26 years by Catholic priests worldwide.

"Make us grow together in love with Paul, our bishop," Father Keith Weber said, leaving out Pope John Paul II's name for the first time since Weber was ordained. The altar at St. Isidore's, still brightly decorated for the Easter season, now has a large portrait of the Pope sitting front and center, flanked by floral arrangements.

Weber's homily focused on the need to see Christ in all things, something Pope John Paul II had mastered, he said.

"He was able to see Christ working through everyone he met, and because he could do that, we could see Christ working through him," Weber said.

Weber's message reflected the fond memories that many Manhattan residents – both in and out of the Catholic community – have of the Pope.

Kat Blackburn, senior in psychology, said she was inspired by the Pope's willingness to hold on despite his many ailments.

"He was a great representative of the Catholic faith, even when there's so much opposition to our religion. He was such a great leader," she said.

Blackburn added that the Pope's struggle during his final days was difficult to watch.

"This is the only pope I've ever known. Being such a strong head of our church, his suffering was difficult to watch," she said.

Job Springer, a graduate student in agribusiness economics, joined the Catholic church a year ago. He also said that the Pope was an inspiring figure.

"He tried to include everyone, and he worked for unity and peace. He was always traveling, always visible and communicative," Springer said.

The Pope had a far-reaching impact that went beyond the Catholic Church, said Rev. Donald Fallon, K-State's coordinator of religious activities.

"His humanness and warmth as a person, in spite of some differing theological views and ethical views, made him an affirming figure and related to the humanness of K-State students and their warmth toward each other," he said.

Fallon remembered the Pope's efforts to reach out to other religions of the world.

"He was motivated to reach out to the Jewish community for reconciliation, motivated by his own compassion as a human being who had suffered under the Nazi regime," he said.

O negative blood needed

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Blood shortage and a lessening of restrictions when donating blood could affect the outcome of the blood drive this year.

"We had 13 pints of O negative on the shelf," Kristi Reif, donor recruitment representative with the American Red Cross, said.

"We need 100 pints."

Reif said that the donations can make a big difference to other people's lives.

"When students come and donate they can save up to three lives with their donation," Reif said. "Every two seconds someone in the United States needs blood."

As a way to thank the donators, the Red Cross will give out purple mugs with a power eat on them.

"I've given blood twice before," said Jodi Kitterman, senior in elementary education. "It took me like 15 minutes, but some people got done a lot faster."

Danae Voubek, blood services chair for the American Red Cross club, said that the actual donating takes about 15 minutes, but it takes about 45 minutes to fill out paper work and donate blood.

"We have a goal of getting 800 pints this week," Reif said. "This is the biggest blood drive we have in the state."

Some of the restrictions that might have prevented students from donating before may not be applicable anymore. Reif said these new rules started March 21.

"A lot of the restrictions for eligibility have changed, people with tattoos can now donate," Reif said.

"Guidelines for people that have been overseas have changed, so a lot more people can donate now."

"It's really important for people to eat before they come in to donate," Voubek said. "I recommend that people drink a lot of water and eat well."

If you go

Blood Drive

- Monday - Thursday at the Union from 10:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m.
- Friday from 8:30 a.m. - 2:30 p.m.

Night drives:

- Putnam Hall Monday and Tuesday 3 - 8 p.m.
- The Rec Wednesday and Thursday 3 - 8 p.m.

Fast facts

- 60 percent of the U.S. population is eligible to donate, but only 5 percent actually donate.

In Kansas only 4.6 percent donate.

- Number to call and check if you are eligible to donate: (800) 665-4550.

Manhattan to vote on officials, gay marriage, sales tax Tuesday

On Tuesday, Manhattan residents can cast their vote.

Polls open at 7 a.m. and close at 7 p.m.

Residents can vote for up to three candidates for City Commission, and there are three write-in spaces available. The candidates in order as they appear on the ballot are:

City Commission:

- Brad McCune
- Jayme Morris-Hardeman
- Tom Phillips
- Sam Robinson
- James E. Sherow
- Mark J. Hatesohl

School Board:

- Keith B. Miller
- Dan Morin
- Peter J. Paukstelis
- Walt Pesaresi
- Beth Tatarko

Inside, Page 8-9
Not sure who to vote for? Read school board and City Commission candidates' response to the Collegian's questions.

Questions:

GAY MARRIAGE AMENDMENT

There is already a Kansas law that defines marriage as between a man and a woman, but it is not part of the Constitution. By voting "yes" on this question, it would make it part of the constitution. If it is struck down, the law will still remain.

The proposed amendment states:

- The marriage contract is the be considered in law as a civil contract. Marriage shall be constituted by one man and one woman only. All other marriages are declared to be contrary to the public policy of this state and are void.
- No relationship, other than a marriage, shall be recognized by the state as entitling the parties to the rights or incidents of marriage.

According to the wording, any relationship status outside of marriage would not be regarded by the state or any medical agency in an emergency situation, thus eliminating common-law marriage and the current rights and benefits currently in place.

SALES TAX

If passed, this question would place an additional .25-percent sales tax on all retail in the City of Manhattan. The tax would begin October 1 and end Sept. 30, 2008, unless terminated sooner.

The tax could be terminated if the tax raises $5.4 million. The money will held fund USD 383 schools. USD 383 can use the funds to maintain quality education and accommodate for expected additional military families.

Earthquake rattles Indonesia

Corsan Olivier | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An earthquake measuring 8.2 on the Richter scale struck north Sumatra on Monday destroying homes and leaving over 600 dead and hundreds more injured.

Another natural disaster hit Indonesian islands Monday, this time killing more than 2,000 people and putting thousands more on the streets. An 8.2-magnitude earthquake struck Sumatra Island in what geologists say may be an aftershock of the December tsunami and earthquake that occurred in the same area.

SCHIAVO'S NEW STRUGGLE

The court battle for Terri Schiavo's life ended Thursday, but the power struggle between her parents – Bob and Mary Schindler – and her husband – Michael Schiavo – continued this week as decisions were made on funeral arrangements. Michael Schiavo decided to cremate his wife's body and plans to take the remains to Pennsylvania, where Terri grew up.

FAMED DEFENSE LAWYER DIES

Defense attorney Johnny Cochran, famous for his "If it doesn't fit, you must acquit" closing argument in the O.J. Simpson trial, died Tuesday at his home in Los Angeles after battling a brain tumor. Cochran, 67, became popular with the American public after defending stars such as Simpson and singer Michael Jackson.

700 compete in forensics

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Over the weekend, more than 700 forensics competitors from 97 schools across the nation went head to head in the National Forensics competition.

The meet is being held on K-State's campus for the second time in 21 years. Larry Schnoor, the director of the tournament, said K-State was chosen to play host to the tournament because of both its history of outstanding forensics teams and for its performance during the last meet.

"Everything went good last time, and they have the facilities to host," Schnoor said.

The event, which takes place annually, is the culminating meet for college forensics' competitors.

"This is our form of March Madness," Schnoor said. "You take the best competitors from across the nation and they compete for three days."

The 700 students will compete in 11 events, which are divided into three categories, said Craig Brown, speech instructor and director of K-State forensics.

The first type of event is public speaking – such as orations and informative speeches – where students must write and memorize a speech, then perform at the event.

Next are limited preparation events, where students are given topics and must create and present the speech on the spot.

Finally, there are interpretation events, where students take a piece of literature – such as poetry or prose – and read the selection for a judge.

Most of the 11 events originally had 120 competitors, but that number was narrowed to 24 after the first day. By the time Sunday's competitions began, the number of contestants had dropped to 12.

The finalists will compete for first place on Monday morning in the K-State Union and K-State Alumni Center.

In order to attend the event, the students competing must show they are qualified to contend at the national tournament by either proving themselves in smaller tournaments throughout the year or by doing well in the district tournament.

The students participating in the event attend colleges from coast to coast and of all different sizes, ranging from small community colleges and private universities to the largest state institutions, Brown said.

Brown and the 25 students assisting him were given the task of assuring that each room was set up prior to every event.

Brown said that it has taken around $5,000 to put on the event. The money comes from fund raising, contributions from other schools and donations of both time and money by alumni and individuals.

"We've gotten about 30 K-State alumni who came back to judge," Brown said. "It's been really neat seeing all these people come back to help out."

A great deal of support also came from the administration at K-State, including President Jon Wefald, Brown said.

"A lot of schools have to pay for everything," Travis Roberts, a senior in speech, said. "We don't have to do any of that."

Roberts is representing K-State at the national tournament for his fourth year, and is competing in 5 events, including impromptu, prose, extemporaneous speaking, communication analysis, and after-dinner speaking.

Roberts said that one of the biggest differences between this meet and other national meets he has attended is that it is harder to focus.

Normally, the team must travel to competitions and stay in hotels, where everyday distractions are not present.

To try and help the team focus, Thursday evening the whole team loaded into vans and went to the Holiday Inn Hotel, allowing them to step away from campus and make it seem like a more traditional meet.

The difficulty at the national tournament is impressive, Roberts said.

"It's awe inspiring," he said. "Everyone is from the top of the nation."

At a banquet held in honor of the students and organizers on Sunday evening, Bobby Imbody, a speech instructor and assistant to Brown, was awarded the first Young Coach award from the American Forensics Association. The award is presented to an outstanding forensics coach who has been coaching for less than 5 years.

The banquet is also an opportunity for competitors and coaches to socialize after a hard day's work.

"They have been competing against each other all day, and this is the first opportunity for everyone to meet," Brown said.

The tournament will continue through today, and will conclude with an award banquet tonight.

Steel bridge team advances to nationals

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's steel bridge team finished second place out of eleven teams at its regional competition in Illinois last weekend and earned a spot in the national competition.

L.J. Dickens, team member and senior in civil engineering, said this was the first time the team had won in about five years.

The reason the team did so well this year was due in part to its determination to win, Dickens said.

"We all had the goal of winning," he said. "We all had the desire to put in the hundreds and hundreds of hours that we put into it."

The bridge was judged in three categories: weight, construction time and deflection, the amount the bridge moves when it is supporting weight.

Dickens said he thinks the team did best in its construction time. However, the bridge deflected more than expected. K-State finished second to Oklahoma State University.

"We are going to go back and fix a couple of pieces on the bridge to make it a little more stiff," he said.

Although the team members have learned a lot about building bridges, they also learned about teamwork from spending so much time together, Dickens said.

"We got really good at knowing what each other was thinking," he said. "We weren't afraid to suggest changes and criticize."

Scott Moeder, co-chair of the team, said it is making adjustments to the bridge before they travel to the national tournament in Orlando, Fla., during Memorial Day weekend. "We don't want to change a whole bunch of stuff," he said. "We want to see how our bridge right now relates to other team's bridges." Moeder said the team will have to raise money to pay for its trip to nationals.

"We're going to talk to the department head and talk to sponsors to see if they can help us out," he said.

TO THE POINT

Donating blood important in saving lives

Every two seconds, someone in the United States needs blood.

According to the American Red Cross, 60 percent of the American population is eligible to donate blood, but only about 5 percent of people actually donate.

Shortages in blood supply can lead to problems following accidents or disasters when victims need blood transfusions due to injury. Others need blood transfusions during and after surgery.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

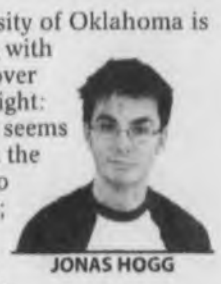
One pint of blood can help save the lives of up to three people.

This week, the American Red Cross hopes to collect 800 units of blood at the campus blood drive.

Many changes have been made in the requirements for blood donors, so those who have not been eligible before could be eligible now.



An average of 38,000 units of blood were used every day in 2001, for a total of 14 million units that helped 4.9 million people across the country, according to the Red Cross.

Students who are eligible should take the time this week to donate blood. If you aren't sure whether or not you're eligible, check the donor requirements.

Taking the time to donate blood this week is an easy way to help save lives.

Banning the bottle

Campuses across the country ban alcohol for everyone to punish a few

JONAS HOGG

The University of Oklahoma is experimenting with the 1920s all over again. That's right: prohibition. It seems that OU is not the only campus to dry out, either; in fact, many universities around the nation are banning the bottle.

But, why? It seems that our universities are full of idiots. Actually, allow me to clarify. Our universities are full of two kinds of idiots.

The first type consists of binge drinkers. These are the people whose sole purpose is to consume as much of the cheapest booze around in the shortest possible time. It seems that– surprise, surprise–these people are starting to turn up dead on an increasing basis.

If I seem caustic and unsympathetic, that's because, well, I am. There is a concept in nature known as "survival of the fittest." This states that those organisms that are stronger, faster and smarter than the others will be most likely to pass their genes on to the next generation.

Obviously, if you are one of the people who believe "one drink is good, so 100 must be the cat's meow," then you are failing on the smart scale. Buzzzzz! No gene passing for you, plant food!

The second group of idiots are those "in power," who are choosing to punish an entire student body due to the irresponsibility of a handful of people.

Because, everyone knows, if you have a problem, just pass a new law. After all, the 18th Amendment–Prohibition–solved all sorts of problems.

This flat ban simply begs the question, why should Billy Ray be punished just because Amy Sue is a dolt and drank herself to death? The answer is that even though Billy Ray didn't even know Amy Sue, he must have been, through some bizarre aligning of the planets, part of the problem that caused Amy Sue to die.

Although the founders of this country seemed to be a big fan of personal responsibility, it is refreshing to see that such an outmoded and defunct value has not stuck around to plague us. After all, personal responsibility would dictate that I, personally, should be mindful of how much I'm drinking.

Fortunately, it is no longer my responsibility to keep track of what I drink. Even better, in many cases, if I hurt myself or someone else, the businesses or individuals who provided me with alcohol are now liable for damages.

But cropping up as a solution to that pesky responsibility problem is the good -old notion of "punish everybody."

So, what now?

Well, as a starter, there are random alcohol checks in on-campus sororities and fraternities by the campus police.

What's that over there, you ask?

Why, that's just the Fourth Amendment protecting you from unlawful search. Never mind that.

So here's a solution. For the drinker: don't be a moron. I don't care how badly you want to fit in or be cool. Anyone trying to get you to stick a funnel in your mouth to force feed you alcohol is an idiot. If you follow them, then you're twice the idiot. Idiots shouldn't get to pass on their genes, and you'll generally find that a drink or two will work just fine, leaving you with a much clearer head and many fewer questions the next morning.

For the authorities: leave me alone. If someone is too immature, too much of a follower or just too damn stupid to drink responsibly, then don't punish everyone else.

If you try, you'll only wind up passing more worthless laws that will affect - in a word - squat.

Media should not allow government propaganda messages

JACI BOYDSTON

After a New York Times article last month detailed the Bush administration's use of video news releases (VNRs) to promote its policies and agendas, people across the country have been quick to cry foul, throwing around terms like "fake news," "phony journalism" and–the word most frightening to a free society–"propaganda."

Bush and his colleagues certainly have a lot of questions to answer. I don't know about you, but the one topping my list is, "Why are citizens' tax dollars being spent to fund advertisement of government policies that are so unappealing they need advertisement to garner support?"

That aside, the Bush administration is not the most culpable party involved in this travesty.

The Times reported that many of these VNRs, which are short video clips designed to resemble broadcast news segments, fail to mention they are being funded by government agencies.

Even more alarming, the news programs running these releases dress them up as the independent work of the station itself, avoiding any mention of the government agency involved.

Broadcast news programs running government-generated news stories and passing it off as independent reporting–doesn't that violate some sort of code of ethics?

In fact, it does. As the Times points out, the code of ethics of the Radio-Television News Directors Association states that broadcasters should "clearly disclose the origin of information and label all material provided by outsiders."

Sounds like a lot of broadcasters missed that memo, and a lot more have been doing the exact opposite–trying to conceal the inherently biased source of the story.

In one alarming example, the Times reported that AgDay, an agricultural news program aired on more than 160 stations, ran a VNR from the Agriculture Department in which the government reporter signed off by saying, "I'm Pat O'Leary reporting for the U.S. Department of Agriculture."

The program edited the release to exclude mention of the government agency and–shockingly–introduced the piece as being by "AgDay's Pat O'Leary."

This practice of spoon-feeding viewers biased, government-produced messages and spinning it as "independent journalism" should anger and appall us all.

The media is not an open channel through which government messages can flow directly to the American people.

It should be a skeptical watchdog, objectively presenting all angles of an issue.

Although I take big issue with some of the Bush administration's actions in this matter–particularly the $240,000 payment to columnist Armstrong Williams in exchange for his public support of the No Child Left Behind Act–placing the entirety of the blame on the government doesn't solve the bigger problem of media irresponsibility.

Bush is a man with a plan, and the success of his plans are dependent on how much support they receive.

He's trying to promote his agenda by throwing money at them and creating these VNRs, which is what every other company and organization with a big enough budget does to promote its products and ideas.

That our leaders in Washington are not morally superior to companies peddling gadgets and breakfast cereals should come as a shock to only the most naïve of us.

The government is going to try to promote its policies, and although it would be nice if it didn't spend tax dollars doing so, that practice is not going to stop.

What needs to stop is media's unquestioning acceptance of government agenda and lack of investigation.

The media is, and always has been, a powerful tool in our society, but right now, it's in the wrong hands.

It should serve to inform and alert the people, not to encourage our blind, support for the activities of the government.

File-sharing back in Supreme Court

By Manuelita Beck
DAILY LOBO (U. NEW MEXICO)

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – File-sharing made its way to the Supreme Court this week, but it's anyone's guess as to what the outcome will be.

Justices heard oral arguments in the case, in which the entertainment industry is trying to shut down online file-sharing services.

The court is expected to rule on the case in July.

Despite the seeming pervasiveness of the entertainment industry, its audience isn't all that large. Given its sales numbers, it's no wonder the existence of hundreds of millions of downloaders are flashing warning signs at the entertainment industry.

Music sales are down, and if those downloaders could be forced to buy their music instead of getting it for free, record companies could make a lot more money.

But who's to say all those people would go out and buy music? Or that they aren't already doing so?

The claim by the entertainment industry that "copyright infringement is the only commercially significant use of file-sharing" is ridiculous. File-sharing can be beneficial for all kinds of people without violating copyrights.

Plenty of musicians and moviemakers are distributing their work for free, and file-sharing software can be a convenient way for them to distribute it.

The Supreme Court ruled on a similar issue in 1984. Under that opinion, the court ruled Sony couldn't be held responsible for what people did with its Betamax video recorder. If a product or service is "merely capable" of substantial legal use, a company can't be held liable for what people do with it.

Grokster and Streamcast Networks, the companies involved in the Supreme Court case, are saying the "Sony standard" should be applied to them.

Even if the court doesn't agree, the entertainment industry is going to have to come to grips with technological changes. Times change. Even if file-sharing software gets taken out, what happens when someone comes up with some other way to share data?

They would be better off trying to find a way to profit from new technology instead of trying to preserve their outdated business models.

Testing not worth it

By Ezra Mann
UNIVERSITY DAILY (TEXAS TECH U.)

LUBBOCK, Texas – Since the dawn of education, many a pencil-pusher and professor of knowledge made rules to ensure pupils would gain necessary know-how. For many years, students were the focus of the mighty teacher, but one day standardized testing rose from the dusty crevice of locker hell and doomed the system forever.

OK, maybe that took the perspective a wee bit out of proportion, but no more so than the government places on ridiculous measures of public learning. The situation regarding success or failure remains at a resolution geared in the wrong direction.

Instead of crusading about the evils of standardized testing, the focus should fall on the incorrect use of such a method. As a tool of measuring how a group of students performs in a certain area, standardized testing works. The downfall occurs when this evaluation determines whether a child passes, a school shuts down or a principal obtains rewards. If this continues, educators will have to practice an "every child left behind" doctrine.

We can fix standardized testing by taking away a sizable amount of funding and applying it to the schools. Instead of being used to improve infrastructure, buy supplies and hire proper educators more than $2 billion burns with required exams.

We can give the future a chance by focusing on the children more than the test results. We cannot expect young people to succeed if one way of doing things controls the outcome. All children learn differently. Whether they start without trouble or suffer a learning disability, children fail if they lack separate attention. Instead of being a single unit, give the youth a chance to be individuals.

TO THE EDITOR

Students need to take advantage of opportunity, vote Tuesday

Editor,

Tomorrow K-State students, faculty and staff will have the opportunity to make their voices heard on an issue that will have indubitable impact on the future of the state of Kansas. Tuesday, April 5, polls will be open on SCR 1601, the proposed constitutional amendment on marriage freedom. This amendment would potentially have numerous effects on the K-State community, and it is therefore imperative that all registered voters participate in the referendum.

Last Thursday night, Student Senate unanimously adopted a resolution encouraging such voter participation. Earlier this semester, the senate body considered a piece of legislation opposing the marriage amendment. Debate was impassioned and lengthy, and the resolution failed by a narrow margin. The debate was inspiring to witness, as speakers on both side made meaningful contributions. In the end it was clear that in the room of sixty student representatives, there was no consensus.

If this situation is at all indicative of the state population on whole, opinions on amending our constitution to include the marriage clause are varied. We as Americans are fortunate to be in a country where we have the inherent right to vote and participate in the decision-making process.

It is our civil duty to exercise this right. Regardless of where you stand on the issue, please take a few moments tomorrow to head to the polls and vote.

Christian principles were taken out of context

Editor,

On Friday, the Collegian printed two letters that told Christians how they act about the issue of homosexuality.

I think people are taking Christian principles out of context.

They said that we are to act loving and accepting toward them and be tolerant and accepting of homosexuality. They are partially right, but still half wrong.

As Christians, we are to be loving and accepting of everyone – no matter what their actions. If you are a homosexual, then myself and other Christians will not judge you and will treat you with the same love as we do everyone else. This is the acceptance message, but we must look at the scriptures as a whole, not just bits and pieces that suit our argument.

It has been said, "Twist not scriptures lest ye be like Satan." This comes from Matthew 4, when Satan is twisting scripture to tempt Jesus to sin after his 40-day fast.

A "yes" vote for the marriage amendment is neither judging the person, nor casting a stone, but speaking out and standing up against the immoral act for the scriptures of God has commanded us.

Christians: we must vote in favor of the amendment.

Scriptures clearly say that homosexuality is wrong, and if we back down and do not stand firm for what the scriptures say, we will have to answer to God and not to man.

Remember, we are to act loving and accepting towards all people and not judge them, but we must never be tolerant or accepting of evil, sin or immorality.

Students should strive for equal rights, acceptance of diverse sexual orientations

Editor,

I'm writing in response to the letter stating that true Christians will speak out against the "perversion" of homosexuality and follow Jesus' teachings about marriage.

I take exception with the idea that I am not a true Christian simply because I believe that homosexuals deserve the same rights as heterosexuals.

I consider myself someone with a deep Christian faith, and it is because of that faith that I accept all people regardless of their sexual orientation.

I would like to highlight that in the gospels, Jesus never mentions homosexuality.

It is mentioned in Leviticus, which has many other passages that we choose to ignore, such as 19:15, which states that a menstruating woman is ritually unclean.

Also, some of Paul's letters do briefly mention it. However, some theologians have argued that when the historical and cultural contexts of the time are taken into consideration, those passages may actually refer to prostitution or ritualized sexual intercourse.

More than fifty pastors from many denominations around Kansas have signed a letter opposing the gay marriage ban.

Many Christians do not agree that homosexuality is a sin, and this belief does not mean we are not true followers of Jesus.

Because I follow the teachings of a loving, compassionate God, I will continue to accept those who are different from me and work for equal rights for all here on Earth.

Adrienne Olney
SENIOR IN PSYCHOLOGY

Marriage debate is about accountability

Editor,

The letters written by AJ Bradley and Ian Otte in Friday's Collegian tackled the issues of love, acceptance, judgment and even forgiveness: all in regard to Christian beliefs.

As a Christian myself, many of the points made in those letters put me in a very introspective mood; I realized that I have not been practicing love and acceptance the way I preach it.

It is not my place to judge others, nor should I allow myself to think I may be better than someone else.

Many of the points made were well-intentioned, but misguided nonetheless.

In the end, it is up to God to judge us for our sins, but if I see a friend steal and tell him that stealing is wrong, am I judging him? On the contrary, I am simply holding him accountable.

It is true that God promises to forgive our sins if we ask for it. But that does not mean that God doesn't mind if we live in sin for 70 years and then ask for forgiveness on our deathbed.

I have sinned as much as anyone else, and I am no better than anyone who practices homosexuality; but I have asked for forgiveness of my sins, and I do not continue to live a lifestyle I believe is wrong.

That is why I will vote not to allow homosexual marriage, and I will do it only with genuine love and concern for my neighbors' souls.

Pittsnogle made tourney memorable, exciting again

JOSH WITT

Tonight is big.

North Carolina versus Illinois for the NCAA Men's Basketball National Championship.

It's set to be the best title game in years, as it will be the first time in three decades the top two ranked teams will meet with everything on the line.

That's great. I'm excited.

I'll remember one guy and his improbable rise to greatness and status as a cult-hero – Kevin Pittsnogle.

The 6-foot-10 junior center became the face of the tournament, as he led No. 7-seeded West Virginia all the way to the Elite Eight.

And what a face it was.

The guy got it done, though.

Hitting clutch shot after clutch shot, Pittsnogle averaged 18 points per game in the tournament.

The tattooed native of Martinsburg, W. Va., didn't get most of those points down low though.

He was unleashing his fury from behind the arc, hitting 13-of-23 3-pointers in four games.

Pittsnogle just got better as the tournament went on and the pressure increased.

In the Sweet Sixteen, Pittsnogle had 22 points and grabbed eight rebounds in the Mountaineers' 65-60 win against Texas Tech.

Then, he saved his best for last, scoring 25 in an Elite Eight loss to Louisville while knocking down six 3-pointers.

When West Virginia fell by eight points to the Cardinals, I think a little piece of all of us was lost.

No more chest thumps, no more "You just got Pittsnogled" signs.

We were without "The Snogle."

Never fear, though; for those wanting more Pittsnogle, there's plenty to be had.

Take a visit to Kevin Pittsnogle's Ultimate Web site where you can read fan mail, check out The Snogle's favorite band and submit media for the site because Pittsnogle does not have any photographs of his own.

Why?

"Once I had a photograph machine, but I traded it for a basketball straight up," Pittsnogle explains.

Beyond comedy.

I can only hope that it is really Pittsnogle who set up the Web site.

Although I'm not 100 percent sure, I am almost completely certain of the authenticity of The Snogle's profile on a little thing I like to call "The Facebook."

You might not have heard of it, I know, but it's at www.thefacebook.com.

This past week I had the privilege of being accepted as a friend by Pittsnogle, and I have not been disappointed.

His profile is pure gold.

Mr. Pittsnogle is a rap and R&B music fan, he responds "Who Does That!!!!!!!" to the favorite books section and he likes all comedy and scary movies.

And ladies, I don't know how to break this to you, but he's married to the lovely Heather Pittsnogle. Sorry gals.

The fun continues when you check out "Kevin's Wall."

Here's an excerpt in a fan's words:

"Dear Snogg Dogg, This is Dave Stern, you may know me as the commissioner of the NBA but you can just call me Master Shredder for short. Anyways, I have a spot for you now on the Chicago Bulls right now. Love Davey."

Then, there's this perfectly coherent post.

"I will forever scream 'Pittsnogle' anytime I shoot for juice or dunk for bunnies. You are the man!"

The popularity of this icon is clearly just beginning.

Pittsnogle has 484 friends at West Virginia, and his reach spans the country.

He's got nine friends at Swarthmore – wherever that is – 24 friends at Duke, 10 friends at Gonzaga and 13 friends at Kentucky. And yes, he has four friends – including yours truly – at K-State.

Only a junior, we should have one more year of Pittsnogle in our lives before he moves on to a professional career.

The clash between Illinois and North Carolina could be epic, but that's not what I'm taking away from March Madness, 2005 edition.

I'll remember it as the month an icon was born and the whole world got "Pittsnogled."

High-jumper sets new school record in Texas

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When high-jumper Kyle Lancaster cleared the bar, he knew his jump was big – real big. Little did he know that it was record breaking.

Lancaster, a junior from Fort Scott, Kan., jumped atop K-State's track-and-field record books with a jump of 7-07 at the UTEP Springtime Invitational on Saturday in El Paso, Texas.

Not usually known for showing his emotions, Lancaster found reason to celebrate this time after he successfully cleared the bar.

"I jumped off the mat and ran across the apron." Lancaster said. "I was pretty excited. I was not really expecting that this weekend. I do not think it has really soaked in yet."

The high-jumper's previous best was 7-06 at the 2004 NCAA Outdoor Championships, and he surpassed K-State's previous record of 7-06 1/2.

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said Lancaster should continue to improve with more training.

"I do not think (Lancaster) is jumping as well as he is capable of jumping," Rovelto said. "I think we are still searching a little bit to mesh his approach with where he is physically. I still think his approach can get better and I know he can get stronger.

"The fact that he is still able to perform at a pretty high level just shows how much better he has gotten."

Lancaster said his jump on Saturday will only drive him for the rest of the season, and he needs to

Cats beat Texas, make history

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's baseball team made history on Sunday by knocking off a No. 1-ranked team for the first time in the program's history.

The Wildcats (15-12, 2-7) beat the No. 1-ranked Texas Longhorns (26-5, 4-4) by a final score of 5-3, picking up the historic win and avoiding being swept in the series.

Cowart retired 10 of the next 11 batters, but the Longhorns still managed to retake the lead at 3-2 in the bottom of the fifth.

Texas, however, would not score again.

Kansas State rallied in the seventh, scoring two runs to take a 4-3 lead, and then the Wildcats scored one more run in the top of the ninth to knock off the top-ranked Longhorns.

Eymann drove in four of the Wildcats' five runs with a single and a double. Murphy and junior Barrett Rice each collected two hits on the day.

Cowart gave up three runs on nine hits in 8.1 innings to improve to 6-1 on the season. He gave up one walk and struck out six.

Junior Bryan Peterson picked up his first save after getting the final out for the Wildcats.

On Saturday the Wildcats lost 5-4 in a 10-inning effort.

K-State rallied in the top of the ninth, scoring two runs to tie the game at four. The runs were created off the bats of Murphy and sophomore Jared Goedert, who each had an RBI in the inning.

Texas' Chance Wheeless sent a grounder to second off junior pitcher B.J. Kissel. Junior Eric Durante's throw home was high, forcing junior catcher David Baker to make a tag attempt on runner Carson Kainer. On a controversial call, Kainer was ruled safe by beating the tag giving the Longhorns the win at a 5-4 final.

The loss was marked the second loss of the season for K-State senior reliever Eric Rollins (0-2). He threw 6.2 innings and gave up two unearned runs on six hits while striking out two and walking two. Rollins was in for relief of starter Mitch Walter, who gave up three runs on five hits in 2.1 innings.

On Friday the Wildcats were held to just three singles off Texas starter Kyle McCulloch (6-2), as Texas shut out K-State 8-0.

Senior Josh Dent was the majority of the offense for the Wildcats with a two-hit effort, while Durante had the only other hit for the Wildcats.

The Wildcats will next face Washburn in mid-week action at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Tointon Family Stadium.

WBB | Wecker named to Kodak All-America team

On Saturday, K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker became the third women's basketball player in school history to be named to the prestigious Kodak/WBCA All-America Team.

Wecker

This is the first time in her career Wecker has been named to the Kodak All-America team, and she joins former Wildcats Nicole Ohlde (2003 and 2004) and Priscilla Gary (1983) as the only Wildcats ever named to the team.

"Her recognition as a Kodak/WBCA All-American is a reflection of the positive impact her intensity, work ethic, skills and athleticism have brought to Kansas State and the women's game as a whole," head coach Deb Patterson said.

MLB | Boston's Schilling still on track for April 13 start

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Curt Schilling will likely make his season debut on April 13 against the Yankees, the Boston Red Sox ace said Saturday after pitching the equivalent of 8 1/3 innings in a minor-league intrasquad game.

Schilling

Schilling allowed one run and four hits, struck out eight and walked two. He threw 88 pitches, 64 for strikes.

Schilling was placed on the disabled list Friday, a move retroactive to March 26, making him eligible to pitch April 13.

Schilling is recovering from offseason surgery to repair a torn tendon and a cartilage defect in his right ankle.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Jacque Vaughn of the New Jersey Nets sustained a season-ending injury Saturday night, breaking a bone in his right foot early in the first quarter against the Orlando Magic.

Vaughn

The seven-year veteran, who has started 34 games this season at shooting guard, was experiencing pain in his foot before the game but decided to play. He ran off the court after fracturing the fifth metatarsal 2 minutes into the first quarter and was replaced by Travis Best.

Vaughn was averaging 5.3 points and 1.9 assists for the New Jersey. Vaughn will have surgery next week to have a screw inserted in his foot.

CFB | Leach's contract extended through 2009

Leach

Leach also got a $250,000 raise, bumping his salary to $1.275 million per year.

In five seasons at Texas Tech, Leach is 39-25 and has led the Red Raiders to five bowl games. Texas Tech finished 8-4 last season, including a 45-31 victory over California in the Holiday Bowl.

CBB | Illinois, North Carolina to meet in championship

ST. LOUIS — For the first time since 1999, two top seeds will play for the national championship.

Illinois, the No. 1 team in the country for most of the 2004-05 season, will face North Carolina Monday night in the NCAA Tournament championship game at the Edward Jones Dome.

The Fighting Illini defeated Louisville (33-5) 72-57 on Saturday, while North Carolina stormed back for an 87-71 victory in Saturday's second semifinal after trailing Michigan State by five points at halftime.

Tattoos are an art form with a long and varied history, spanning more than 12,000 years.

Their use has varied from culture to culture.

From marking women in Borneo to show their particular "marriage skills" to signifying members of the Hell's Angels, tattoos often have a strong significance to the people who get them.

People get tattoos for many reasons.

Jesse DeBey, junior in women's studies at Wichita State University, had wanted a tattoo ever since she was 12, she said.

"I thought they were super cool, and I really wanted one," DeBey said. "I always wanted a fairy tattooed on my leg; I stuck with that idea until I was 18, but when I went to get it, I didn't have the time or the money."

DeBey has 20 tattoos on her arms, legs, chest, back, head, neck and stomach.

"I got my first tattoo the day before my 19th birthday," DeBey said. "It was a pink and black nautical star."

Before getting a tattoo, there are many things to consider. Body shape is important.

It is best to think about what the tattoo will look like and get it where it will look the best, DeBey said.

Originality is a major factor when choosing a tattoo.

The most common tattoos for males are tribal symbols, their name or initials in old English or barbed wire around the upper arm. Women commonly choose Chinese characters, roses and anything tiny and feminine, like butterflies and flowers, DeBey said.

Dave Crawford, senior in anthropology, said he had a desire to express himself.

Robert Black works on the tattoo of Inch on March 31 at Stray Cat Tattoo. Black has been the tattoo artist at Stray Cat for 4 years.

"I've just always thought tattoos were cool and wanted to do something that would make a statement about myself," he said.

Crawford said his tattoo, a rune symbol, comes from an ancient Norse alphabet and symbolizes brute strength and resistance to illness.

"I thought it might be sort of a good luck charm, too," he said.

Safety, Crawford said, was not a huge concern because he felt comfortable.

"The place I went to was very clean and very reputable," he said. "They do so much of this sort of thing that I figured it was completely safe."

Crawford said the only advice he would have to people considering tattoos is that there is some level of pain.

"It's going to hurt a little bit," he said. "Anyone who tells you it doesn't is lying, but it's not really that bad."

Did you know?
Tattoo popularity

- One of seven adults has a tattoo.
- Tattoos can be found among 9 percent of the so-called "boomer generation" — people born between 1946 and 1964.
- Thirty percent of people between the ages of 25 and 34 have tattoos.
- About 28 percent of adults younger than 25 have tattoos.
- In all, the post-baby-boom generations are more than three times as likely as boomers to have tattoos.
- 15 percent of adults have tattoos, while 88 percent said they know at least one person who has a tattoo.

Tips for People getting tattoos

- The tattooist should not dip needles into a big bottle of ink; instead, enough ink to complete your tattoo should be poured into a disposable ink container.
- Ointments should be taken from their containers with disposable sterile spreaders, not with the tattooist's fingers.
- New sterile needles should be used for every tattoo.
- All non-disposable equipment should be sterilized after each use with an autoclave.

Regular gossip seems pointless when there is celebrity gossip

LOVE HURTS

Jennifer Aniston and Brad Pitt are officially over. Aniston filed for divorce on March 25, two months after they announced their formal separation on January 7.

Original speculation for the split was that Pitt cheated on Aniston with his "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" co-star Angelina Jolie, but all parties denied the rumor.

Both Pitt and Aniston were spotted wearing their wedding rings during their separation, leading many to think they were headed for a reconciliation. Pitt and Aniston met in 1998 on a blind date and were married on July 29, 2000.

In other celebrity splits, Denise Richards filed for divorce from husband Charlie Sheen. Richards is seven months pregnant with their second child, and the timing of the divorce made many think former bad-boy Sheen had cheated on her, a charge Sheen denies, saying through his rep that "sometimes marriages don't work."

Richards has asked for sole custody of their one-year-old daughter Sam and the unborn child, and spousal payments. Sheen wants shared custody of both children and does not want to pay alimony.

IN HAPPIER NEWS...

Supermodel Heidi Klum and singer Seal, who got engaged late last year, recently announced that they are expecting their first child together. Klum has a 10-month old daughter from a previous relationship, although Seal has acted as a father to the child since her birth last May.

MORE BABIES

Star Magazine is reporting that Britney Spears and new husband Kevin Federline are expecting their first child together. Federline has two children from former girlfriend Shar Jackson, who was pregnant with the second when Spears and Federline got engaged.

Spears has not been quiet about her desire to be a young mother, and Star Magazine claims that Spears is three months pregnant – using as evidence pictures of the singer with a bulge on her formerly flat stomach and carrying along larger-than-normal breasts – and plans to officially announce the news within a week.

Demi Moore and her young boyfriend Ashton Kutcher are denying rumors that they are expecting a baby, but not that they might like to have one someday. The couple raised eyebrows with their 15-year age difference when they began dating two years ago.

Moore told People Magazine that "the rumors are just that: rumors," but her publicist announced that "having another child is something that Demi would like to do."

Kutcher joked about the rumors with reporters, saying, "Why am I the last person to find out everything? I'm going to be a daddy? God, no one tells me anything!"

OTHER HOOKUPS (OR NOT...)

Moore's ex-husband, Bruce Willis, made headlines when The New York Post reported that the 50-year old hooked up with 18-year old Lindsay Lohan at an after-party for his new film "Hostage." Lohan is friends with Willis's 16-year old daughter, Rumer. It was reported the groping went so far that Willis revealed a tattoo on Lohan's right buttock reading "La Bella Vista" (the beautiful view).

The Post later retracted its story and apologized to the non-couple, but it's still fun– and kinda creepy– to read about.

CELEB NEWS

Celebs get slimed at Kids Choice Awards

Green slime poured down on celebrities and fans alike Saturday night at a raucous 18th-annual Kids Choice Awards broadcast on the Nickelodeon children's cable network.

Stiller

Rapper and actor Will Smith kicked off the evening with a spirited performance of the song "Switch" accompanied by a supporting cast that included breakdancers and throngs of people in feathered costumes.

Host Ben Stiller arrived in a tricked-out miniature convertible, dressed from head to toe in a silver jumpsuit he said would prevent him from being that year's celebrity slime victim.

Will Ferrell was the evening's first slime victim, having buckets of the green goo dumped on him after he challenged soccer star Mia Hamm to a soccer kickoff.

The evening concluded with Johnny Depp coming on stage supposedly to slime Stiller, but instead getting the green goo dumped on himself. Stiller, saying he was jealous, dove onto the stage and rolled in the slime.

'Sin City' No. 1 at Weekend Box Office

"Sin City" proved an irresistible temptation for audiences as the highly stylized comic-book adaptation led the weekend box office with a $28.1 million debut.

Latifah

Opening in second place was Queen Latifah's comedy "Beauty Shop," a spinoff of the "Barbershop" franchise, which took in $13.5 million for the weekend, according to industry estimates Sunday. Since opening Wednesday, "Beauty Shop" had grossed $17.3 million.

The comedy "Guess Who," the previous weekend's top-grossing movie, slipped to No. 3 with $13 million, lifting its 10-day total to $41.3 million.

Overall, movie revenues slipped for the sixth straight weekend. The top 12 movies took in $98.3 million, down 14 percent from the same weekend last year, when "Hellboy" and "Walking Tall" opened on top of the box office.

The slump follows a healthy start to 2005 in which movie revenues had surged about 10 percent ahead of 2004's.

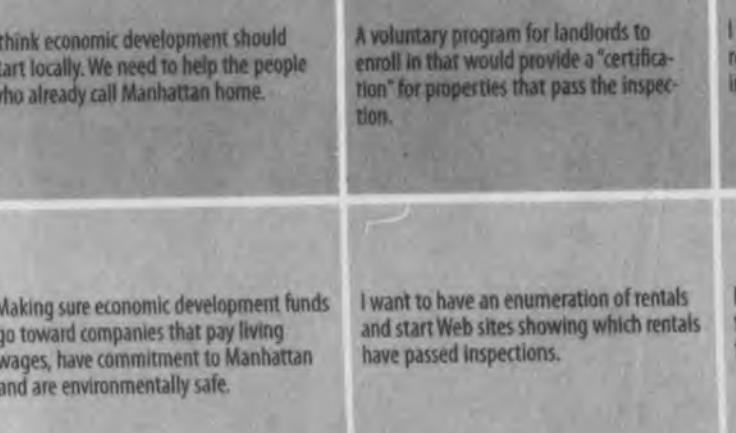
CITY COMMISSION



City Commission candidates comment on housing, K-State

Candidates were limited to 20 word answers. Answers were cut off after the 20th word.	How will you ensure continued economic development?	How will you keep housing rentals to code?	What is your most important goal if elected?	How is K-State important to Manhattan's future?	Why are you the best candidate for Manhattan?
 Mark J. Hatesohl	By providing a business-friendly environment of controlled property taxes and fewer regulations and conditions on business.	By educating renters about the inspection process that is already available to them and by encouraging more housing so bad	To grow the community while keeping Manhattan affordable and resisting more government regulation of our day to day lives.	KSU provides lots of good-paying jobs and through research can bring the high-paying high-tech jobs we desire.	My experience as a commissioner and the leadership I have shown in the community for over 20 years.
 Brad McCune	Maintain a business friendly environment and outsource ECO-DEVO activities to the Chamber, plus work closely with K-State USD-383 & Fort Riley.	Centralized rental registry and education programs for renters and landlords outlining request procedures for voluntary inspections and property inspection history.	Guide growth and development in a controlled manner, expanding the tax base thereby reducing the pressure on individual property taxpayers.	Critical in educating our citizens and providing quality, high paying jobs which add to the diversity of our community.	I possess a proven track record of leadership success, business ownership, fiscal responsibility, strong work ethic and moral integrity.
 Jayme Morris-Hardeman	I will promote safe and stable neighborhoods, quality schools and quality of life as important aspects of economic development.	Improved education of the existing voluntary inspection program is needed. I would also work with Student Senate on their proposals.	Increasing diversity in city government. I would use my volunteer recruitment skills to expand the pool of advisory board applicants.	The future of the city and university are mutually linked. They must work more closely together to ensure combined success.	I am creative, energetic, compassionate and open-minded. I would bring a diverse perspective to city government.
 Tom Phillips	Retain and grow existing businesses, attract new industry, expand our retail base, focus on quality of life.	Work with the Manhattan Landlord's Association and Student Governing Association to improve our current programs.	To become an effective voice for finding solutions by bringing people together to work on critical issues.	K-State enables Manhattan to have a role in the knowledge economy and become a "community of choice" attracting professionals and	I worked as Director of Planning and Development in Lenexa, Kansas, served almost eight years on the Manhattan Planning Board.
 Sam Robinson	I think economic development should start locally. We need to help the people who already call Manhattan home.	A voluntary program for landlords to enroll in that would provide a "certification" for properties that pass the inspection.	I want to be a good steward of the city's resources: tax dollars, land, services and image.	Obviously when you have an organization as large as KSU in a city, it is important for many reasons.	I have an open mind and a willingness to work for the citizens of Manhattan.
 James E. Sherow	Making sure economic development funds go toward companies that pay living wages, have commitment to Manhattan and are environmentally safe.	I want to have an enumeration of rentals and start Web sites showing which rentals have passed inspections.	My most important goal is to deal with the housing issues of the community, from rental inspections to zoning.	It's critically important. It is the solid economic and cultural base for the community. It's the anchor for the community.	I've had experience in local historic preservation, downtown redevelopment and zoning issues. I'm a small business person with extensive experience

Candidates face budget deficit, new superintendent

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five candidates have filed for election to the USD 383 School Board, with three positions available.

Keith Miller, Dan Morin, Peter Paukstelis and Beth Tatarko filed for the first time, while incumbent board president Walt Pesaresi filed for a second term.

Newly-elected board members will begin their terms in July.

KEITH MILLER

Keith Miller sees K-State playing an important role in the USD 383 school district.

Miller

Miller, a geology professor, said there are benefits to living in a town centered around a state university.

"Being a university town makes the community very educationally oriented," he said. "The university provides a huge number of resources to the public school system, with the art museum, insect zoo – there are all kinds available, and I'd like to see those taken more advantage of.

"The university really has a stake in local publication."

Miller has lived in Manhattan for the past 15 years with his wife, Ruth, who is a professor in electrical engineering. The couple has an 8-year-old son, Ian, who is a third-grader at Theodore Roosevelt Elementary.

Since his arrival, Miller said he has been active in both community and educational issues, including his leadership in the creation of the city's Habitat for Humanity program as well as his involvement in Oak Grove School, a private preschool.

Why he decided to run for school board:

"I'm very convinced at the importance of community input into the school board decisions. I've been impressed by the amount of passion and expertise and involvement of the community with the school system, and I would like to take advantage of that commitment."

His stance on the budget and new superintendent:

"I'm looking forward to working with the new superintendent and working together to come up with a vision for the district. As far as budget, there's still an awful lot of uncertainties. We have to prepare for both good and bad news, but not be preoccupied with budget concerns."

DAN MORIN

Dan Morin recently moved to Manhattan, but it's a place where he said he wants to stay – and make better, as far as the public schools go.

Morin

Morin, along with his wife, Jessika, and 2-year-old daughter, Katy, moved to the city in August, after spending the past four years working in Hawaii as a public policy analyst for a state senator and city councilman.

Originally from Maine, Morin and his family have moved around with Jessika in the Army.

When Jessika received news of her transfer to Fort Riley, the family came for a visit – and stayed.

"When we came here, we just noticed the caring, small-town community," Morin said. "It's what we were used to growing up in Maine. We decided to buy a house because this was the place we were going to stay, even when she's done with Army."

Why he decided to run for school board:

"Too often, whether it's a school board or a commission, elected bodies aren't an accurate representation of the community. I'm a young parent – I'm 37. Most of the time, boards are stacked with parents with kids out of the school system, or they're retired. There's nothing wrong with that, but we need to have an accurate representation of the community with young parents whose kids are just entering."

His stance on the budget issue:

"One of the current issues of concern is sales tax and the $1.7 million shortfall the district is facing. Too often these temporary taxes end up becoming blended into the budget and become permanent. If we won't need that sales tax one or two years from now, I'm going to be one of the people to push to terminate it. It's not meant to be there six years from now."

PETER PAUKSTELIS

Three years ago, Peter Paukstelis and his wife, Dianne, were talking to his neighbors in Pasadena, Calif., and they were worried.

Paukstelis

Throughout his conversations, Paukstelis said he learned his neighbors were sending their children to private schools or other districts because they didn't want to send them through the Pasadena public school system.

"I moved the family back here three years ago because we wanted to be in the community of Manhattan, to take advantage of the great schools here," he said.

Paukstelis went through grade, middle and high school in the Manhattan district, and his parents both taught at K-State. Now he is the father of Nicolas, 4, and Nathan, 2, and owns his own law practice in downtown Manhattan.

Why he decided to run for school board:

"When I heard that some school board members weren't returning, I thought about all of the interests I had for schools providing for our kids. I have historical interest because I went to school at USD 383. I have a future interest because my kids are going to be there. My family and I committed to Manhattan three years ago and we're not going anywhere. This is our home, and it's been my home for a long time."

How he would handle the current budget issues:

"There's certainly things we can do to try and alleviate budget problems. The first one has already been proposed by the 0.25-cent sales tax. The second thing is working with legislators to make sure that the state properly funds schools."

WALT PESARESI

"I'm very interested and concerned about education," he said. "I think education is very important for our future generations and quality of schools."

Currently the owner of Mr. P's Party Outlet in downtown Manhattan, Pesaresi has spent 20 years as an educator. Pesaresi taught four years in Nebraska, teaching eighth- through 12th-grade social studies, world history and sociology. He then moved to USD 383 where he taught for 16 years at the old junior high school, where he was the department head for social studies and a student council sponsor.

Pesaresi

His wife, Dorothy, now teaches at Lee Elementary School, and his two grown daughters graduated from Manhattan High School.

Why he decided to run:

"We've made some great strides in the last four years, and we have some new opportunities ahead of us. I'd like to see a conclusion on some projects and programs that we got started."

Big issues the board will face:

"Depending on the variables and Fort Riley, we're going to continue the realignment of our schools. We have lost about 100 kids per class, as many schools in Kansas have, because we're losing population in Kansas. One of the big areas we have is... excess properties right now. We have people in buildings that we're renting and we need to move those programs back into our buildings and stop paying rent and continue reorganization of the district that we started."

BETH TATARKO

Beth Tatarko knows Manhattan schools.

After all, Tatarko's oldest child, Peter, attends Manhattan High School, while her daughter Anna attends Eisenhower Middle School and her youngest, Sarah, attends Lee Elementary School.

Tatarko

Add to the fact that Tatarko has been a member of PTO, site council and the budget advisory committee over the past decade, in addition to local community groups, it's no wonder why Tatarko wants to get involved again – this time at the school board level.

Tatarko has been married to her husband, John, for 18 years, and she has worked for K-State for 10 years.

Why she decided to run for school board:

"The main reason I decided to run is because I'm concerned with the stability of our school district and long term health of our community.

"We have some financial challenges that our school district is facing, and we need to be sure we're balancing cost-cutting revenues so we're not losing quality education, which is what we're well known for. I think common sense is what the board needs right now. I want to look at the long-term picture."

Some of the big issues:

"The budget is a big one, and maintaining class size is another issue in balancing the budget. Studies show that class size is critical in quality education.

"In four years, I hope that we have a stable fiscal picture and we maintain quality education. By working with the board, we'll just have to work through the ideas and come up with good solutions."

Landlords put candidate signs on tenants' lawns

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the general election scheduled for Tuesday, candidates and those in support of issues have been busy placing signs all over Manhattan. For students who rent apartments or houses from landlords, however, there is some disagreement over whether the landlord or the tenant has the right to display yard signs in support of candidates or issues.

The City of Manhattan requires the candidates to put their signs up a maximum of 60 days before an election and remove them within 15 days after the election. They also restrict candidates from putting signs in or over public right-of-ways, Steve Zilkie, city planner, said. There are no regulations on landlords allowing candidates to place signs in their tenants' yards.

"As far as political signs, we only determine when the signs can be put up and public locations," he said.

Mark Hatesohl, city commission incumbent, said that since the landlords own the land, it is up to them to determine what is placed on it. With a lot of the student tenants living in high traffic areas, their yards are a good location for candidates to place their signs.

"The landlords want their candidates to have those high visibility locations," he said.

Larry Hackney, human resources specialist for the City of Manhattan, said it's not clear if the yard would be considered in the tenants' possession or the landlords'. For instance, a common phrase in a lease is: "At the beginning of the lease, the landlord shall deliver the possession of their premise." If the yard is considered part of the premise, this might suggest that the tenants have possession of it.

"The Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act could not write a statute for every single issue," he said. "Jurisdiction of the courts says that every county's district court has jurisdiction in disputes."

Under this statute, it would be up to the district court to decide who owns the yard in an actual dispute.

Candidate Sam Robinson said it matters who takes care of the yard. If it's an apartment complex where the landlord cares for the outside property, it's their decision. If the tenants have to take care of the property, it belongs to them.

It also depends the terms of the lease, said candidate Brad McCune. If the tenants are just leasing an inside apartment, then it's the landlords' decision. If the tenants are leasing the whole property, then it's theirs.

"I tend to agree with the position that it depends on who takes care of the outside property," he said.

If tenants don't like what is displayed in their yards under these conditions, they should have the right to remove the sign their landlord had placed in their yard, Candidate Jim Sherow said.

"If a landlord doesn't like what a tenant puts up, then it's up to the landlord to put it in the lease," he said.

Candidates Tom Phillips and Jayme Morris-Hardeman were not available for comment.

Grammy-winning artist performs at Alumni Center

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Grammy award-winning artist gave an Indian classical music concert Sunday night in the K-State Alumni Center.

Pandit Vishwa Mohan Bhatt, the Grammy winner, and Subhen Chatterjee performed for the Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts' spring concert Raag-e-Rang.

Bhatt plays the Mohan Veena, an instrument he created. He called it the Mohan Veena because Bhatt's middle name is "Mohan" and a "veena" is an ancient Indian instrument.

"I was looking for a different kind of music, so I chose this western slide guitar and started modifying it," Bhatt said.

Chatterjee plays the Tabla, a drum pair in which each drum is played by one hand. The left hand plays the bass drum and the right plays the treble drum.

The two musicians collaborated to perform Indian classical music, an unwritten, free form of music that is memorized, but results in a unique performance each time.

"This music is based on improvisation," Bhatt said. "Each artist puts his own creativity and imagination into it. He has the liberty to express himself.

"It comes to you when you are doing it. That is the beauty."

Bhatt won a Grammy Award with Ry Cooder in 1994 for their album "A Meeting by the River." He also received a Grammy nomination in 1997 for his work with Jei Bing Chang, a Chinese Ehru player.

Bhatt said about 90 percent of his work is solo, but the rest is collaborations and compositions.

Rupayana said SABHA brought in Bhatt because the guitar is a more familiar instrument and the concert met the goals of the group.

"This is what we do," she said. "We promote Indian music, Indian dance, Indian art forms."

Anisha Gupte said she attended the concert because of Bhatt's instrument and his renown.

"This was a combination of the western guitar and Indian veena," she said. "This combination went really well. He's a big name in this field."

Samer Salesh said he went on a friend's recommendation and enjoyed the concert.

"It looks very complicated but yet produces very nice sounds, very nice rhythms," he said. "It's full of harmony. It's very sensual."

'Tastes of Cultures' promotes diversity

Multicultural event features varied foods

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Crystal Michel, freshman in agricultural education, replenishes the supply of eggrolls at the Thailand table, which was hosted by the Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences. The second annual Taste of Cultures involved tables from eight student organizations that had food from various nations.

Joslyn Brown
COLLEGIAN

Smells of sushi, enchiladas and fried chicken wafted through the doors of the Ecumenical Campus Ministry building Friday.

"Taste of Cultures" was a part of the Dow World Day Festival and featured food made by different multicultural student organizations.

The groups made food of their choice and displayed boards with information about their organization.

Thao Nguyen, senior in education and mathematics, who organized the event, said she loves to do multicultural events.

"I love to see international and domestic organizations getting together," she said.

Nguyen also worked the event last year and is looking forward to making the event an annual occurrence. However, she will graduate in December and is hoping she can train the next person who would like to do it.

"This takes a lot of work, and you must have a passion for it," she said.

She said the event is great, but she would like to see more participation from other student groups. There is generally a good perception of the event, and people can voice their opinions on the survey that is given out.

Marlon Butler, junior in kinesiology and vice president of the Black Student Union, said his board showed a brief summary of what BSU is.

He said BSU has participated in the event since he has been in the organization.

"It is nice to be able to promote diversity on campus as well as in the community," he said.

Yvonne Adame, senior in mass communications and vice president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said it is a great event.

"It is one big fund raiser," she said. "It is great to be able to make money with other groups, and it is a good cause."

She said it is a lot of fun to get together with other groups and is interesting to see what kind of meal they make.

The event is usually a success in fund-raising as well as getting members of the community to learn more about HALO.

Danae Mason, freshman in secondary education and mathematics, was there supporting her friend who was working at the Bilingual Education Student Organization table.

"I love the food, and I think it has been a success," she said.

The event featured groups including American Ethnic Studies Student Association, Bilingual Education Student Organization, Black Student Union, Native American Studies Association, Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Japanese Student Association, Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences, Multicultural Student Association and the Philippine Student Association.

Thousands gather to mourn at Vatican

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pope John Paul II, spiritual leader of the world's more than one billion Catholics, died Saturday in Vatican City.

On Thursday, he came down with a fever caused by a urinary tract infection, and on Friday he experienced a cardiocirculatory collapse.

Vatican officials said that in addition to cardiocirculatory collapse, the Pope's death was caused by septic shock – when bacteria enters the bloodstream and causes organ failure.

"The Holy Father's final hours were marked by the uninterrupted prayer of all those who were assisting him in his pious death and by the choral participation in prayer of the thousands of faithful who for many hours had been gathered in Saint Peter's Square," Vatican officials said in a statement.

Vatican officials estimated a crowd of over 100,000 on Sunday.

In a brief statement at the White House Saturday afternoon, President George W. Bush said, "Laura and I join people across the Earth in mourning the passing of Pope John Paul II. The Catholic Church has lost its shepherd, the world has lost a champion of human freedom and a good and faithful servant of God has been called home."

Bush met the Pope three times during his life and presented the pontiff with the Presidential Medal of Freedom when he visited the Vatican in June 2004.

He has ordered U.S. flags be flown at half staff in honor of the Pope.

John Paul II served longer than all but two of his 264 predecessors, St. Peter and Pius IX.

Did you know?

How the Pope is elected

- A meeting of the College of Cardinals takes place in the Sistine Chapel 15-20 days after the death of the pope. Only cardinals under age 80 can vote.
- Cardinals vote by secret ballots, on which they disguise their handwriting. The ballots then are put into a gold chalice. The number of ballots must match the number of electors or a new vote is taken.
- In order to be elected pope, one must get a two-thirds of all votes, plus one. Votes are taken twice each morning and twice each afternoon until a new pope is elected.
- At the end of the morning and afternoon, the ballots are burned. Chemicals are added to produce either black smoke - meaning no pope has been elected, or the natural white smoke - indicating the successful election of a new pope.
- If no successful election has taken place after three days, the cardinals break for a day of prayer. Voting resumes again with day-long breaks after every seven ballot series.
- If no pope has been elected after a fourth series of seven ballots, the cardinals allow the new pope to be elected by an absolute majority. Candidates can also be limited to the top two vote-getters on the last ballot.
- When a new pope is chosen, he accepts the office with a Latin proclamation and announces the name that he will be known by.

that kind of human experience and his faith and theology that came a response not to let that happen again."

Fallon praised the Pope's openness, but stressed that there is much work to be done.

"I think the Pope, by his understanding of the gospel and God's grace and his compassion for person, has fostered a new kind of openness and acceptance among the religions of the world," he said.

"My sadness over his death includes that we have a long way to go to break down those barriers to acceptance, both locally and in our world. But I'm thankful for what the Pope has done to open up our world, and I hope it deepens."

Father Don Zimmerman of St. Thomas More Catholic Church in Manhattan recalled the Pope fondly.

"The Holy Father represented that we are all united, regardless of culture, language or the color of our skin," he said.

"He showed us great dignity in his quiet transition out of life."

Woman injured in motorcycle accident

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A woman was injured Sunday in a motorcycle accident.

Danielle Nely was traveling north on 17th Street when she apparently lost control of her motorcycle while turning west on Anderson Avenue, said Riley County Police Department Sgt. Troy Hensley.

Nely's motorcycle hit the curb and her body may have hit fire hydrant, Hensley said.

Hensley said he was unaware if Nely was wearing a helmet, although witnesses at the scene reported she was not.

Nely was transported to Mercy Regional Health Center. Hensley said it appeared as though Nely may have had injuries to her legs and suffered rashes. The hospital was unable to release her condition.

"Our role is done with this case," Hensley said of the RCPD's involvement.

"There is no indication that this could be a fatality."

continue working hard in practice to improve even more.

"I do not ever want to set limitations for myself," Lancaster said.

"I want to think anything is possible. I just can't let this go to my head. "I need to take it day by day and continue to work hard to make myself better."

Eveland, who owns K-State's indoor pole vault record, tied Erin Anderson's outdoor record of 13-09 1/4.

The Grand Rapids, Mich., native said even though she vaulted well, her technique could have been better.

"I was happy with my height, but I was not happy with my technique," Eveland said.

"I am hitting the weight room pretty hard and trying to get stronger."

"I am definitely not at my peak right now," she said.

The Wildcats combined for nine event titles in El Paso, including wins from senior Chaytan Hill (triple jump), senior Stelios Kapsalis (triple jump) and senior Tarl Vetter (hammer throw).

Vetter and senior Ryan Creadick (hammer throw) each added their names to the Wildcat list of Midwest Regional qualifiers.

Overall, K-State's men and women's teams each finished in second place.

The men tallied 159 points and the women scored 157. Big 12 Conference for Texas Tech won both the men's and women's team titles, finishing with 212 and 176 points respectively.

The team will make a return to Texas later this week for the Texas Relays, April 6 to 9 in Austin.

Citizens vote on sales tax

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today is the day.

The fate of the quarter-cent sales tax initiative is in the hands of the voters.

Manhattan residents today find themselves adding 7.3 cents on every dollar, and the proposal would raise that to 7.55 cents, or 7.55 percent.

Not all of that money goes to the city though, City Manager Ron Fehr said.

Fehr said that of the 7.3 percent currently charged, only 1 percent, or about one penny on every dollar, is collected by the city, as well as a portion of the .5 percent collected by the county for economic development. The remainder of the money goes to the county or state governments.

"Sales tax goes into our general operating budget," Fehr said. "We fund much more of our operational expenses through sales tax than we do property tax. Right now the bulk of the property tax goes to the Riley County Police Department and to our bond programs."

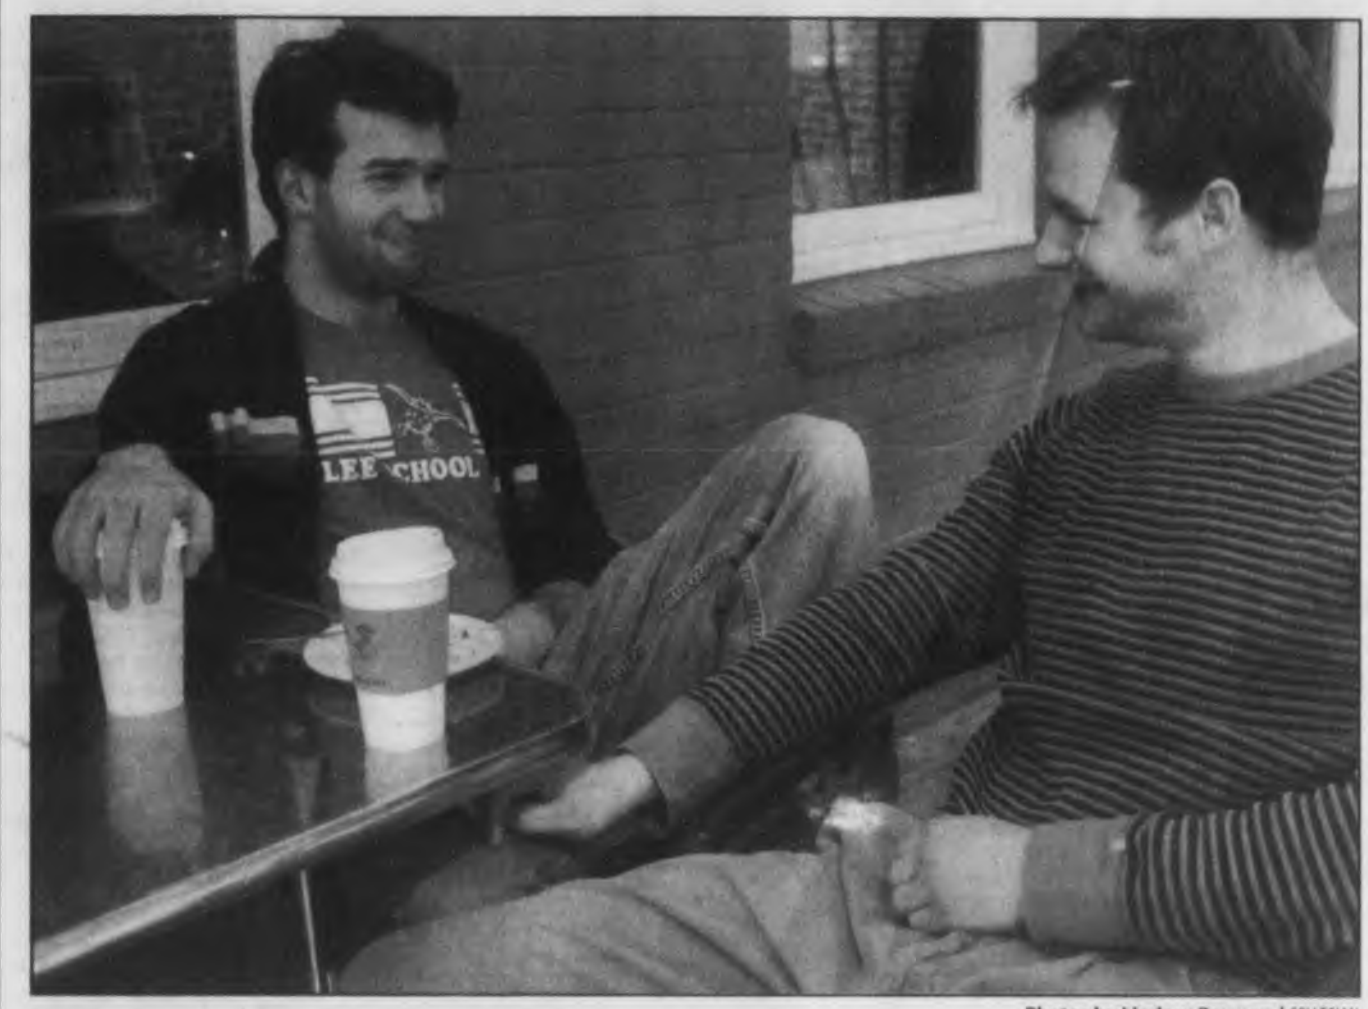
Fehr said the city, which received a total of $10.5 million in sales tax during the 2003 fiscal year, relies heavily on sales tax to fund the day-to-day operations of the city.

He said the proposed tax would be specifically earmarked for school improvements and would not be included in the City/University Fund, a program through which K-State receives sales tax dollars generated from sales on campus to fund projects that would benefit both the city and the university.

Clyde Jones, Manhattan resident and vocal supporter of the sales tax, said it is necessary because of the financial situation in which Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 finds itself.

"The school district has a real shortage of funds which has developed over the last several years," Jones said.

The shortage, he said, has resulted from insufficient funds from the state government as well as declining enrollment.



"The school district has cut approximately $4 million over the past four years," Jones said. "And that includes 81 positions. To avoid cuts of this kind, we have proposed this quarter percent sales tax."

The program, Jones said, will provide an estimated $1.8 million in additional revenue over three years. After three years, the program will end.

Though it is scheduled to last for three years, USD 383 School Board Member Randy Martin said it was

Honesty, interests play large role in couple's relationship

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They are just like any couple.

They fight, go out to eat, get coffee, and rent a lot of movies.

Just like any other couple – except they are both men.

Mike Evans, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, and Brett Currier, junior in biological and agricultural engineering, have been dating for eight months.

The two met through a mutual friend.

While the couple does not live together, they are very open about their sexuality.

"We are the official gay couple of Aggieville," Currier jokes.

Evans said that while he and Currier share similar interests in books and political views, they differ in personalities.

"I'm the loud, obnoxious one. I'm a lot meaner than Mike," Currier said.

Both agree in that they had typical Kansas upbringings.

Currier said that while his upbringing was not religious, he was brought up Republican.

He said the Republican upbringing wasn't necessarily conservative.

Evans said he was brought up with emphasis on religious teachings about Jesus and a relationship with Him.

Neither told their parents for a while after initially coming out.

Currier said he slowly came out at 14.

"My dad had instilled that honesty was the best virtue. My coming out was just about being honest with others," he said.

Evans is not sure when he knew he was gay, but he said it was sometime in high school.

He chose to wait until college to come out.

"It would have been a dangerous, difficult situation in high school. I have no regrets about waiting," he said.

Neither man's family accepts them as gay men.

Evans and Currier consider themselves "pre-engaged," and have

Consequences of same-sex amendment disputed

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fate of the resolution to amend the Kansas Constitution with a definition of marriage will be decided at the polls today.

Proponents say the amendment will provide social stability and protect the sanctity of marriage, while opponents say the resolution damages the rights of homosexuals and unmarried heterosexual couples.

Section 1, part A of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 1601 states "marriage shall be constituted between one man and one woman only."

Since 1867, a Kansas statute has limited marriage to being between one man and one woman.

Thirty-nine states have laws specifically banning same-sex marriage. Sixteen states have marriage amendments.

"It's extremely difficult to change the constitution once it has been amended, so we should be hesitant before enacting this amendment," John Fliter, associate professor in political science, said.

Fliter said if the amendment fails to pass, nothing would change in the aspect of gay marriage, because the statute would remain in effect.

Part B states "no relationship, other than a marriage, shall be recognized by the state as entitling the parties to the rights or incidents of marriage."

Common law marriage provides legal protections, which include pension benefits of senior citizens living together, health

Journalism, civility discussed in Landon Lecture

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

American conversation is no longer healthy.

"I believe a combination of factors has caused serious discourse deficit," PBS anchor Jim Lehrer said Monday during the 137th Landon Lecture.

Lehrer said both the journalism and political worlds have resorted to name-calling and mudslinging rather than the constructive discussion crucial to a democratic society.

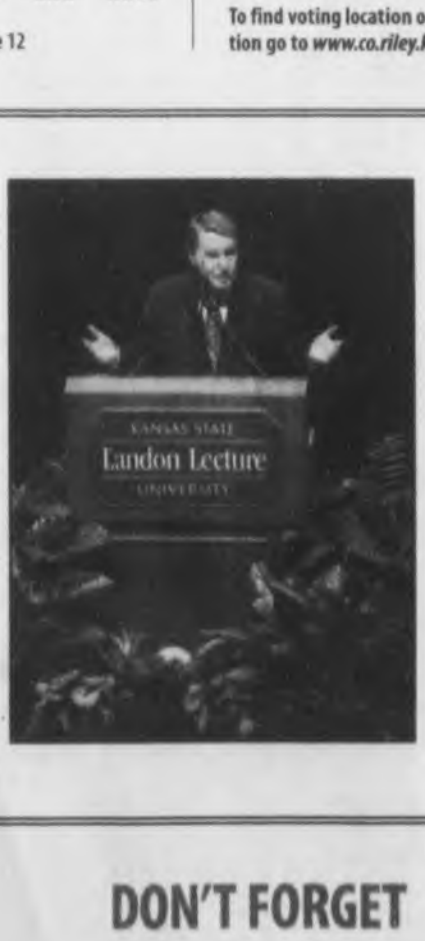
"There are differences between show business and journalism business," he said.

To ensure his news program, the NewsHour, doesn't fall victim to irresponsible journalism, Lehrer said he has set forth personal guidelines including assuming both sources and viewers are as smart and caring as he is, not using anonymous sources and assuming there is more than one side to a story.

The excuse that irresponsible journalism is just giving the viewers what they want is unacceptable, Lehrer said.

"When you play in the mud, whether you jump in first or you jump in second, you get just as dirty," he said.

As moderator of 10 of the nationally televised candidate debates in the last five presidential elections, Lehrer said the debates are proof that political candidates are capable of civilized debate.



"If civil is the right thing to do, then why isn't it the right thing to do throughout the whole political campaign?" he said.

The debates aren't as good as they could be, but they are still important, Lehrer said.

"I wish there were more debates. I wish the rules could be more open," he said. "The bottom line, they are a good thing."

To change the course of American discussion, it's not only up to journalists and politicians but also the general public.

"We have to let them know by our actions – by what we watch, by what we read," he said. "We have to demonstrate our sickness for this."

Jim Lehrer, anchor of "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer" and PBS executive editor, presents the 137th Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium Monday. Lehrer is also known as the moderator for 10 of the nationally televised candidate debates in the last five presidential elections.

Schiavo ordeal prompts increase in living wills

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Lisa Sisley gave birth to her daughter, Anna, 11 years ago, she knew it was time to begin thinking about her future.

Sisley, instructor in the College of Education, said she and her husband drafted their own living wills in the event that they would become physically or mentally incapacitated.

"We got a living will at the same time we got a regular will. We wanted to make sure we had a guardian for our daughter," Sisley said.

According to a March 24 article in USA Today, only 33 percent of American adults have a living will, a document that explicitly states one's wishes of whether they would sustain their own life by artificial means if they are terminally ill and unable to make the decision.

Lawyers and medical practitioners nationwide have seen a surge in the number of requests for assistance in drafting a living will, according to the article. The requests came days after the feeding tube of 41-year-old Terri Schiavo was removed March 18. Schiavo, who died Thursday, had been in what doctors described as a "persistent vegetative state" since she suffered a heart attack in 1990 that cut off oxygen flow to her brain.

Schiavo, who was 26 years old when she suffered the heart attack, had no living will, and her blood relatives and her husband, Michael, had been embroiled in intense legal battles for years over whether Schiavo should die or be sustained by artificial means, and which option she would have desired.

Manhattan attorney Grant Bannister said such terminal illness is rare in younger persons, but he advises all those considering getting a living will to err on the side of caution.

"Generally, the statistical information would state (young adults) are less likely to need a living will, but the Schiavo case proves no one is immune from catastrophic health problems," Bannister said. "They certainly could come into play at some point."

Sisley said she thinks it is dangerous to neglect the possibility of becoming terminally ill, especially for young adults.

"Terri Schiavo was 26 years old, so you never know," Sisley said. "At that age, you think you're invincible."

Tonnie Martinez, instructor in the College of Education, said she agreed, and that the case should prompt younger people to reflect on their own mortality.

"When you're that age, you never think you're going to die," Martinez said.

Peter Kelley, senior in construction science, said his parents recently drafted their own living wills, but he said if he never gets one of his own, he will trust his family's decisions for him.

"If you don't have a living will, you should just allow your family to do what they want with you," he said. "My family's beliefs are, if you're on life support, you're not alive anyway. You should just let nature take its course."

Kassie Pike, senior in social science, said she and her fiancé discussed the possibility of getting living wills shortly after their engagement. She said the two, who will marry in June, have yet to draft the documents, but she said the Schiavo case caused them to decide to write a living will as soon as possible.

"Nobody's going to know what you want unless you write it down," Pike said. "We've both talked about it, and a living will is very important. I wouldn't want to be hooked up to a feeding tube or anything else keeping me alive."

Bannister said there are two ways to get a living will: through Web sites that provide forms that can be filled out and then signed by a notary public, or through lawyers who can act as guides through the process.

Bannister said he recommends using the services of a lawyer, since many online documents sometimes are too general and often do not focus on specific state laws regarding wills. Lawyers usually begin with a general document and then customize it according to the person's wishes and the state's laws.

"The laws can always vary from state to state, so you want to be very careful if you're printing anything from an online source," he said. "You want to make sure it satisfies the statutory criteria of the state of Kansas. Otherwise, it could be ineffective. I'd be cautious of depending on one without the assistance of an attorney."

Jarod Hyde and Kelly Johnson each break ground for a new duplex to be built for their families by Manhattan Habitat for Humanity. The house will be located on Juliette Avenue.

New homes provided by charity

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Excited amazement is what Kelly Johnson and Jarod and Bobbie Hyde said they felt when told they would be receiving a new home.

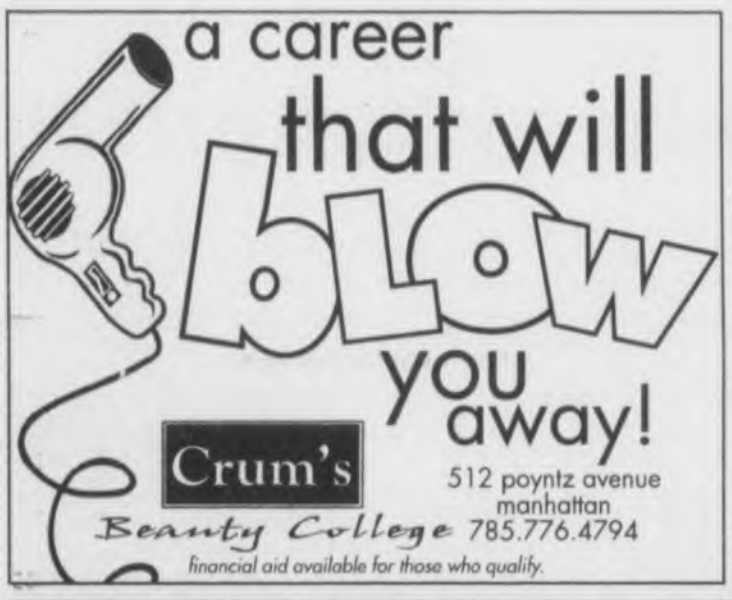
Family members, volunteers, Habitat for Humanity board members and capital donors gathered Sunday for the groundbreaking of Manhattan Habitat for Humanity's 16th and 17th houses. Those who attended the ceremony were addressed by the organization's co-director Emily Ross.

On average, the organization builds about one house every year, and usually receives the land as a donation from the city. Co-director Kristen Wilmes said the city no longer has lots to donate, and she doesn't think it will be getting any more in the near future.

Ross said despite a shortage of affordable land, she hopes the number of houses constructed in the future will increase.

"In recent years we've had a difficult time finding affordable land, but we'd really like to increase our capacity with new volunteer and donor programs," she said.

Wilmes said each new house usually costs $40,000, and they are funded by many different resources.



The Builders Club is made up of individual donors that usually make donations totaling $26,000. All Habitat for Humanity house inhabitants are required to pay a monthly mortgage payment of $350, which goes toward funding the construction of new houses.

Johnson is a single mother of three boys and said she was grateful for the opportunity.

"This is a great opportunity for us to get back on our feet and have a more positive lifestyle," she said. "All the hard work will be worth it, because we will end up with something tangible that we can call our own."

Jarod Hyde said their current house is extremely small for himself, his wife and their two children, and so he's ready for construction on the new house.

"I didn't actually think we'd be selected to be a recipient, but now that we've been chosen I can't wait to get started with construction," he said.

Solutions for quality education.

TO THE POINT

Amendment dangerous, must be rejected

Adding a ban on gay marriage to the Kansas Constitution would be short-sighted and against American ideals.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Constitutions are in place at the state and federal level to protect civil liberties, not ban a segment of the population from participating in a basic aspect of life.

To many of us, gay marriage is against our religious and moral beliefs. However, laws are not about personal morals. They are in place to protect and ensure a fair, democratic process.

Allowing homosexuals to legally marry is neither dangerous to society nor threatening to government. Perhaps the greatest argument against instituting a gay marriage ban is to look at who has been shunned historically on account of morality.

Moral beliefs prevented Native Americans from maintaining their lands, women from voting and blacks from attending the same schools as whites. In 10 years, homosexuals will be more accepted in society just as other minority groups have been accepted as equals.

A Constitutional amendment would be too permanent an action for our ever-changing society.

Increased sales tax vital to USD 383 schools

An increased sales tax is needed to support Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

The question is on the ballot today for Manhattan residents to decide whether to give additional funds to local public schools.

If passed, the proposal would add .25 percent to the 7.3 percent sales tax, making it 7.55 percent.

The proposal is to end after three years, but can be ended early by the school board and/or the City Commission.

The school board has faced difficult decisions lately due to a lack funding.

Eugene Field and Bluemont elementary schools were closed in 2002 because of declining enrollment and funding.

Then in 2004, the school board faced another tough decision to close another school. As a result, Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School will close after the 2005-06 school year.

Additional funds from this sales tax could allow Theodore Roosevelt to stay open. It will also prepare Manhattan schools for a possible influx of Fort Riley families.

The Kansas Legislature has voted on an increase in funding, which will result in about $1.1 million for Manhattan schools.

This is not enough to keep the school district running without cutting programs.

The fate of local schools rests in the hands of voters. Vote yes.

Sharing responsibilities

Attitudes toward housework important aspect of roommate search

LUCAS MADDY

I wear old Levi's. Usually faded, sometimes torn, but always clean. I'm used to old jeans.

A new pair of Lucky's look nice, but they cost too much, and with them on, I'd worry more about looking fancy than having fun. I'm happy with my worn Levi's. They fit my lanky body and paltry budget.

My roommates understand this. They are much the same. This choice of wardrobe reflects our attitudes toward house chores: old jeans, nothing to fuss over.

We look for no compliments after a once-over with the vacuum and the occasional "hey moron, take out the trash" is almost flattering. It means these duties are accepted as the norm. Tardy work is surprising – enough so that it merits comment.

Like I said, I wear old jeans. A friend's roommates all wear new jeans – forever beseeching compliments, hurt if they don't receive them, pugnacious if reprimanded.

What a sad situation. One does the dishes and announces it to the rest, readily accepting praise for a job well done. Another steams under a smile, for the glory of emptying the lint screen was just stolen.

No problem. Revenge will be done, the washer and dryer commandeered for sole use until a roomie requests the interjection of one measly load. Ahh, the tinder has been sparked: no Tide shall touch a tank top until hurtful words achieve retribution for neglected tribute.

Big words aside, here's the breakdown. Some people grew up responsible for themselves. Others were coddled. No matter how well you get along with a buddy in class or doing homework, make sure you're close to the same breed of cat before signing that lease.

If you wear new jeans and he does too, great: you'll have fun making refrigerator schedules of "house duties" using a fancy new eraser-board or a computer chart. Perhaps you could share the tiring task of finding a decent housemaid. To some, the only thing more satisfying than doing it yourself is finding someone who can do it better.

On the other hand, if you can handle emptying a full trash can or washing dirty dishes by yourself, no matter whose turn it may be, then you might do well to find another in your image. Feel free to give me a ring.

If you fail to take this precaution, picture this: you've been gone for the weekend, say a quick jaunt home, and now you're back Sunday night at six. You're meeting a sweet little gal to study at 6:30, but the drive-through you devoured on the way isn't sitting well.

Quick detour – a beeline to the bathroom new-jeans roomie shares with you. As you settle into the porcelain office chair for a little paper work, alarms explode in your mind. There is no paper with which to work, for the color-coded chart on the fridge clearly states that you are next in line to buy the Charmin, and your roommate used the facilities at Arby's all weekend to avoid feeling like he had to expend cash out of turn.

Last advice: live with someone you could have grown up with. If you grew up privileged, why change? If not, why torture yourself by parking your clunker next to a Mercedes all year? Those from wealth – Johnson County, by and large – bristle not, for you I spare in targeting as worthless roommates.

Those upon whom I call for vengeance are the forgetful, those who have forgotten the sacrifices made by themselves or others to make possible the privilege of worrying about trivial bothers such as with whom we should share an overpriced apartment.

Representative democracy should overrule gut reactions

JESSE MANNING

There is a long-running debate in the American political system about how our elected officials should conduct themselves while in power. Should they be delegates or trustees?

In political terms, a delegate would be one who represents the interests of the people regardless of his better judgment. A U.S. Representative acting as a delegate would vote for whatever his constituents prefer.

If the constituents want lower taxes, the congressman will never support a tax hike. And if they want a war with Canada, the congressman will do his best to make that a possibility.

Far better decisions are made when officials act as trustees. Treating our public officials as trustees sends a powerful message from the constituency: "We trust you to make sound decisions on our behalf."

The trustee mentality seems to take away from the idea of "power to the people." In a democracy, the people should hold ultimate sway and letting elected officials run amok, not beholden to the views of the constituency, would surely lead to an aristocratic ruling class.

But the United States is not a democracy. It is a federal republic. We send 535 men and women to Capitol Hill and a president to the White House to make decisions for us because we're too apathetic or ignorant – or both – to make such decisions on our own.

That's a harsh assessment of the democratic system, but one that rings true nonetheless. Democracy in its raw form would be an undesirable alternative to the representative democracy in which we live in.

There's a famous story from ancient Athens that illustrates the dangers of direct democracy, which is prone to irrational behavior. The city-state of Mitylene, a former ally of Athens, revolted against Athenian rule and joined Sparta in the war against Athens.

Naturally, the Athenians were upset, so much so that they voted to send a ship full of armed sailors to kill all the male Mitylenians and sell their women and children into slavery. It was a gut reaction, one that the Athenians regretted the next day.

In fact, the Athenian assembly voted again and decided that they had made a mistake. Another ship was hastily sent to catch the first one and stop the slaughter they approved just a day earlier.

Athens had as democratic a government imaginable 2,400 years ago. All male Athenians were eligible to vote on all issues that presented themselves, and in the case of the Mitylenians, the Athenians fell victim to the impassioned speeches of Cleon, a violent general and politician. They voted on a whim, and poor choices made by Athens' democratic government led to the city's downfall years later.

Is it any wonder that democracy remained an unpopular form of government for over 2,000 years after the fall of Athens?

In letting our elected officials act as trustees, we risk letting them make decisions that are not based primarily on what the constituency wants but on what they think is best for us. However, any risks are trumped by the very elections that our system requires for officials to hold onto power.

If the voters don't like the way a senator or representative has conducted himself, they can exercise their "democratic rights" and vote for someone else.

As trustees, elected officials do owe something to their constituents: a detailed explanation of why they vote the way they do. The electoral process takes care of the rest.

Allowing our officials to act as trustees guarantees that cooler heads will prevail and that our government won't be at the mercy of gut reactions or impassioned speeches.

I swear I'm gonna get it right this year, man. Fall forward, spring back, so we set the clock back one hour in spring. That's right, right? OK, I'm gonna get it right this time.

I worked my three graveyard shifts Wednesday night, Thursday night, Friday night. Every night when I came in, gas prices changed and went up - $2.15 to $2.19 to $2.25. Three nights.

Hello? It's not doing anything...

Thank God for "hot guys walking around shirtless" day.

I'm an atheist, and one of my heroes just died today, and that hero was Pope John Paul II. In the end, when history is written 50 to 100 years from now, he will be cited as being more of a factor in the peaceful ending of communism in Eastern Europe than Ronald Reagan.

I got drunk and played tetherball this weekend. What did you do?

Has anyone ever been to Disneyland over spring break with two strippers? Wow.

To the girl who apologized for cutting us off at the crosswalk: we pedestrians really wish there were more drivers like you.

So I just watched "Super Size Me," and now I really want McDonald's. Is that why America's obese?

Beef.

Full beef.

To the wrestlers that stole our roping dummies: we will find you.

Vote yes.

Hey K-State: we're rocking the wet and wild contest on Wednesday. Be there.

Deciding what is right, wrong should be left to higher power

Editor,

This letter is in response to the two letters to the editor printed last Thursday. They disagreed with Jesse Manning's article and heavily stated their negative opinion of homosexuality.

I assume that neither Patrick Murtha nor Dr. Shing Chang have been given any "higher power" to allow them the right to judge others and dictate what is "right" and "wrong." Therefore, what gives them the right to publicly discriminate against K-State students, faculty, alumni and members of the community? The answer? Nothing.

Imagine sitting in a classroom knowing that your professor openly has stated that your lifestyle is "wrong." Imagine hearing from this authority figure that he or she believes the god you have grown up praising and praying to is rejecting you.

As a heterosexual Catholic, I have seen how strongly members of the Christian faith feel about this topic and how willing they are to share their opinions. However, we are all members of this earth, no matter what god you believe in or choices you make.

The opinion you have on God's feelings towards this subject is your own. No one should be told that their god rejects them and does not love them.

I would hope that everyone at our university is able to make that decision for themselves.

With The Writing on the Wall Project and other parts of End Discrimination Week ahead of us, I hope our university can accept those around us for living their own lives.

Love's definition often altered

Editor,

This is in response to Al Bradley's letter published last Friday. Bradley presented a very strong point – love. However, I beg to differ on how we view love. The highest purpose of love in Christ is to draw people to Jesus through repentance.

Christ's love goes hand-in-hand with God's justice. Without the justice of God, sins are of no consequence and Jesus' blood wouldn't be necessary.

Christians love sinners but hate sins, including our own. We would love to see sinners like us repent in order to inherit eternal life. Bradley argued, "...despite our flaws, our sins, our misgivings – that the Bible has also promised us, as Christians, that if we believe in God, we will be absolved of our sins and welcomed lovingly."

He forgot that Jesus called for repentance at the very beginning of his preaching and asked the people he healed to "sin no more."

Christians are supposed to be light and salt of the world and are required to teach about right and wrong in order to bring people to God.

There is no persecution of homosexuals but to uphold a reality that marriage is for a man and a woman. As shoes would not be put on hands to fake gloves, marriage cannot be defined other than between a man and a woman. Even if you put them on, they don't fit.

Disease shatters hope of eternal life

By Geremy Bass
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

COLLEGE PARK, Md. – I like my body. I'm not going to lie; it's been good to me thus far. I'm not tall, but I'm not too short. I'm not ripped, but I'm not scrawny. So I haven't had much to complain about, until now.

As I sit here trying to be clever, a ridiculous disease named after a roofing material festers on my neck. No, not hinges, as my brother lovingly calls it. Shingles. Yep, shingles.

Here's the nutshell version of my cockeyed contraction: Spring Break, sunburn on back, return to school, small rash on neck, University Health Center, shingles.

According to WebMD.com, after a person has chicken pox, the virus lies dormant in the body and any deficiency in the immune system can bring about chicken pox's mutant uncle. He's not a fun-loving, pull-my-finger type of uncle. He's painful and won't get off my neck.

My bizarre breakout has unfortunately forced me into a stage of almost complete reclusiveness. WebMD.com says, "If you develop shingles, avoid close contact with people until after the rash blisters heal." I venture out of my room once in a blue moon for nourishment or the occasional class.

You see, you can't get shingles from shingles, but you can get chicken pox from shingles if you've never had chicken pox.

It's more frightening than it is confusing.

As I scanned the Internet trying to diagnose myself, I became incredibly disheartened. There are way too many diseases out there. While I perused the list, I realized I have no chance of living forever. My dreams of enduring century after century have been crushed. Thanks a lot.

Mostly, I'm just in shock I actually have this ... thing. More than the pain, itching and overall discomfort, I find myself wrapped in a shroud of disbelief. WebMD.com says, "You are at risk for developing shingles if you ... are over the age of 50." My doctor said she sees "a few cases every year." All I'm asking is: What are the odds?

I sit for countless lonely hours in front of my laptop pouring my heart and soul into columns I hope will bring joy and happiness into the hearts of the Diamondback faithful. And this is my reward – shingles? I can't help but abandon all belief in a higher power.

How can there be a God? From this point forward, I'm abandoning all hope of ever encountering a burning bush or an immaculate conception.

So my gruesome growth has actually become a life-changing, thought-altering, deeply religious experience. I'm honored and privileged that each and every one of my readers has joined me in my journey to this realization.

If you come to congratulate me, try to maintain a five-foot radius. You never know.

TO THE EDITOR

Discrimination against homosexuals will soon be lamented

Editor,

As a Christian and an American, I was outraged by the letters to the editor in Monday's Collegian. The question isn't how Christians should view homosexuality, or even whether it's right or wrong. The real question you should be asking yourself, Christian or not, is "are homosexuals human?"

If you vote "yes" for the gay-marriage ban, then your answer to the above question is "no."

If homosexuals are considered humans, then they should be granted all the rights and privileges that humanity enjoys, including the right and freedom of marriage. By denying homosexuals the basic human right of marriage, we are denying their humanity, and thus relegating them to a class of sub-humans.

The same thing happened in Nazi Germany, when Jews were labeled as a lower class of human beings.

Just as we now recognize these as acts of discrimination, so too shall we someday look back and realize our acts of discrimination against homosexuals.

It's easy to say you feel "love and acceptance" for homosexuals, but consider your actions carefully; they often speak louder than words. Do you think that if you were denied your basic human rights you would feel loved and accepted by those people who had denied them to you?

Don't tell me you're denying these people their basic human rights out of the goodness of your heart, that you're forcing them into sub-human status "for their own good." If you tell me that, then here's a label you can't escape: hypocrite.

Tennis team gains confidence before playing Missouri

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis won its second straight road match over the weekend, shutting out Wichita State 7-0.

The Wildcats (6-6, 1-3) won each doubles match before taking every singles match in straight sets. The win was K-State's 11th of its last 12 against the Shockers (10-7), and the second consecutive road victory after losing 12 in a row away from Manhattan.

Although the win was a shutout, Coach Steve Bietau said the team's play was hard to evaluate because of the talent discrepancy in the match.

"It was tough to measure the things that we really need to see for upcoming matches," he said. "We didn't play very clean in the doubles, but I thought we were solid in singles. We would like to be solid everywhere, but we weren't."

Senior Maria Rosenberg picked up career win number 75 in the match, inching to within three wins of the all-time school win record. She beat Ana Exeni 6-1, 6-3, and echoed Bietau's feelings about the match.

"I figured that we could win 7-0," Rosenberg said. "We may have had a few problems, but no, (a shutout) was very possible, and we did it.

"My match was a good match. I can't say it was very easy but it wasn't too hard either. I feel like I could still play better and this gave me a little bit of confidence."

Another player closing in on the record books is Rosenberg's doubles partner, freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia.

Kvaratskhelia chalked up win number 25 this season, defeating WSU's Wendi Webster 6-2. 6-2.

"I didn't expect anything because I didn't know how they played," Kvaratskhelia said of the Shockers.

"I just knew we needed to fight, and we did a good job. I don't want to say that my competition was great, and I don't want to say that she was really weak.

"She was a good player, but I beat her pretty easily."

Kvaratskhelia and the Wildcats are back in action this Thursday at No. 50 Missouri.

ROWING

Crew suffers problems

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Technicalities were the trouble for the women's rowing team this weekend at the San Diego Crew Classic in San Diego, Calif.

Due to a technical error that stopped the boat from moving, the First Varsity Eight Crew was unable to capture first place Sunday in the grand final of the Women's Cal Cup.

"They were doing a great job with the difference in lanes, moved into second and were just closing in on the first crew, when they caught a crab (blade goes under the boat) and basically went from second to last," Coach Patrick Sweeney said in a release.

As a result, K-State was forced to settle with last place and a time of 7:07.50 in the six-team field, giving up first place to San Diego State.

"The overall results were definitely better than last year," Sweeney said. "It could have been better, but we really put ourselves in a position to win today (in the Women's Cal Cup race). You learn from each race and the big thing about racing this weekend is that it prepares us for our regional championships in the coming weeks."

The Women's JV8 squad finished sixth as well, with a time of 7:16.28.

"Today the Second Varsity Eight had a bit of a frustrating race," Assistant Coach Paula Donald said in a release. "They had good power and focus but they just lacked a bit of rhythm.

"They were in the race all the way down and then, with about 300 meters to go, the rest of the field stepped it up and we did not, which was the difference. Overall for the weekend, the 2V8+ accomplished a lot and continues to learn how to really compete."

The Wildcats now look ahead to the Kansas Cup, which K-State will be hosting April 9 at Tuttle Creek Lake Reservoir.

Wildcats set to take on Washburn

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coming off a historic win over the Texas Longhorns in Austin, Texas, over the weekend, K-State head coach Brad Hill had reason to be proud, as his Wildcats recorded the first win over a No. 1-ranked team in school history.

"We put ourselves in position to win in two of the three games," Hill said. "We came away with one of them. We had some really nice execution."

Now the Wildcats (15-12, 2-7) are set to take on Washburn at 7 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium. Washburn, a non-league opponent, will come into Manhattan with a 14-14 record, 1-5 in conference.

Hill said the Wildcats are getting a lot of production across the board.

"Right now, it's not just one guy," he said. "One game it's one guy and the next game it's someone else. It's not just one guy."

K-State is seventh in the conference in team pitching with a combined ERA of 3.38.

"Our pitching staff has been really good," junior pitcher Brett Muegge said. "They have been keeping us in ballgames."

The Wildcats are looking to have a solid mid-week game before taking on Big 12 opponent Baylor.

"We can't take them lightly," Murphy said of the Ichabods. "We can't come out and play down to our opponent."

Muegge (1-1) will get the start against Washburn.

"I just want to come and relax and try and have some fun," Muegge said. "I feel like I'm starting to get into a groove."

Muegge said he believes the win over Texas gives the team the confidence it needs to win.

"We now know that we won't lose to a team because we are over-matched," Muegge said. "We will lose because we didn't get things done as a team."

Murphy said he agrees.

"The win against Texas feels great," Murphy said. "We know that we can compete against a Texas. We know we can compete against anyone."

Underclassmen offensive line crucial to football team's success

MICHAEL ASHFORD

After an off-season filled with questions and concerns, one might think it ridiculous to state that there is one dominant key for K-State football that will be the difference between a repeat of last season and a quick turnaround for the 2005.

But there is, and it might not be what you think.

The question isn't who will be the starting quarterback. It's not which running back will replace the incredible Darren Sproles. And it doesn't even have to do with the defense.

K-State's biggest question still unanswered is this: Will an offensive line filled almost entirely with underclassmen be able to step up and perform at the Big 12 level?

When spring practice began almost a week ago, the pre-spring depth chart on the offensive line immediately stood out to every K-State fan.

The simple fact is the Wildcats are very young and very inexperienced, but are still incredibly talented on the offensive line.

On the two-deep, there are four redshirt freshmen, three sophomores, two juniors – both of whom are junior college transfers – and one senior.

Of the 10 players listed on the two-deep, three have actually played Division I-A college football – senior Jeromey Clary, junior Greg Wafford and sophomore John Hafferty.

Nevertheless, this group of guys holds the fate of the 2005 season in their mighty palms.

Think about it. If this group can't get it done, it won't matter who the quarterback is; he won't have any time to pass if the linemen can't hold blocks.

And if no holes are opened for the next K-State running back, only the best Sproles imitation could help the poor guy gain any yards.

As for defense, just think of the strain it puts on a defense when the offense can't move the ball and score points.

See what I mean? It all starts in the trenches.

Now, don't get scared because of this. Truth be told, the talent and size is there for this group to eventually be really, really good.

I'm talking knock-you-out, drag-you-down, beat-the-hell-out-of-anybody good.

Going back to the two-deep, the 10 guys weigh a combined 3,026 pounds for an average of almost 303 pounds per man, and their average height is 6-foot-5.

You talk about some big dudes.

Now they just have to put that talent to use out on the football field, and they need a leader to help them do it.

That leader appears to be Clary.

As the only senior of the group, it seems as though Clary has taken the offensive line under his wing and is pushing it to become bigger, better, stronger, faster and tougher.

"I don't know if I'd say father figure," Clary said about his role on the offensive line. "I think big brother, definitely."

For K-State to have a successful fall, it will take hours and hours of work from the offensive line, and they know that.

This month of spring practices will go a long way towards determining the fate of next season, and nowhere will it be more helpful than on the offensive line.

NCAA | Roy Williams wins 1st national title

North Carolina delivered Roy Williams his first national title Monday night, but it didn't come easy. The never-say-die Illini erased his Tar Heels' 15-point lead in the second half before UNC closed out Illinois 75-70.

The women's championship game between Baylor and Michigan State is at tonight 7:30 p.m. on ESPN.

MLB | Royals fall to Tigers in season opener

Dmitri Young became only the third player to hit three homers on opening day, and Jeremy Bonderman won as the youngest opening-day starter in the major leagues since 1986 to lead Detroit over the Kansas City Royals 11-2 Monday.

Young came out of the dugout to tip his hat to the raucous Comerica Park-record crowd of 44,105 after his third homer. Bonderman pumped his fist and walked off the mound with a confident strut after closing the second inning with his fifth strikeout.

Jose Lima gave up five runs and six hits over three innings in his first opening day start, and 200th of his career. Three of the hits were homers, including one by Brandon Inge.

Kansas City scored on David DeJesus' single in the fifth, but Detroit got three in the home half on a bases-loaded walk and Craig Monroe's two-run single to take an 8-1 lead.

NFL | Supreme Court opts not to hear Clarett appeal

The Supreme Court declined to consider the appeal of Maurice Clarett, the former Ohio State running back who challenged the eligibility rules of the NFL draft.

Clarett

The justices on Monday, without comment, let stand a lower court ruling that said federal labor law allows NFL teams to set rules for when players can enter the league. Regardless of how the high court acted, Clarett is eligible for this month's draft.

Clarett was two years out of high school when he sued the NFL, contending the league rule requiring that a player be at least three years out of high school violates federal antitrust laws.

MLB | Sanchez denies steroid use, violating policy

Tampa Bay's Alex Sanchez gestured toward his bare chest and shoulders, calling attention to his physique.

The Devil Rays outfielder became the first player publicly identified for violating baseball's new policy on performance-enhancing drugs, but insisted Sunday he has never used steroids.

"I'm surprised because look at what kind of player I am," Sanchez said after being suspended 10 days for testing positive for an unspecified substance. "I'm a leadoff hitter. I never hit any home runs."

City offers numerous outside locations to enjoy warmer weather

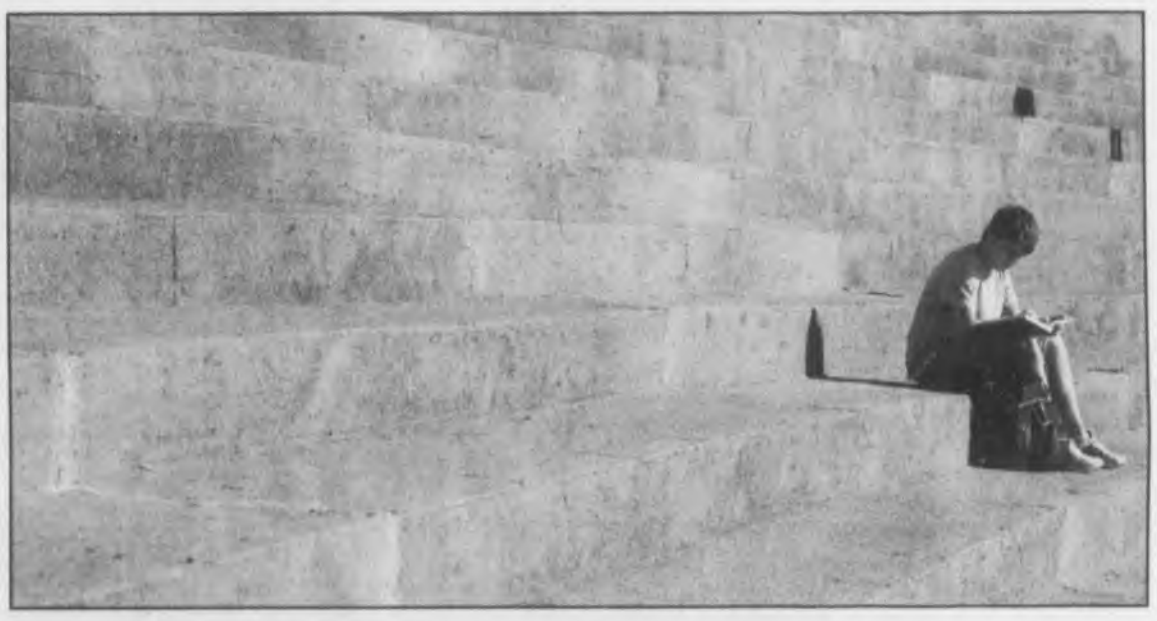
By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many Manhattan destinations are ideal for warm weather.

The temperature is rising, the sun is shining, and you've been vacantly staring out of classroom windows more often than usual. What does it all mean?

Spring has arrived. Why not enjoy this momentous occasion by abandoning your usual routine and spending some time in the great outdoors? Manhattan has a lot to offer those seeking adventure.

Parks are some of the most convenient places to enjoy the warm weather. Take a walk, play Frisbee with a friend or rediscover your inner child on the playground equipment. Manhattan's own City Park at 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue is a beautiful choice.



Another fine fair-weather destination is the Sunset Zoo. From chimpanzees to cheetahs, the zoo boasts an extensive menagerie of animals and a low admission price – only $4. Hours and driving directions are available at www.sunsetzoo.com.

Nature lovers should visit the Konza Prairie, owned by the Nature Conservancy and K-State.

Konza is an 8,600 acre tall grass prairie that serves as a research field station for the Department of Biology. It is open from sunrise to sunset, and trail guides are available at the entrance. Call 587-0441 for directions.

Don't want to drive? K-State's own botanical gardens contain everything from roses and lilies to banana trees and vegetable plants. Walk along paved paths and throw a penny or two into the fountain. The gardens are located just north of Claflin Road on Denison Avenue.

Spring is also a great time to go camping. Pack your sleeping bag and flashlight and head out to Tuttle Creek State Park, five miles north of Manhattan. Go fishing, make s'mores around the campfire, and if you can't figure out how to pitch that pesky tent, just sleep under the stars.

Any of these destinations, or even your own backyard, makes a perfect place for one final spring activity: a picnic! Go all out with a blanket, a wicker basket and potato salad, or go low-fuss with a beach towel, paper sack and a PBJ sandwich.

So smear on some sunscreen, lace up your tennis shoes and go outside, for goodness sakes! The weather has never been better.

Miller's 'Sin City' remake a feminist call to arms

"Sin City"
Movie review by Nathan Dorsett

Outside of Frank Miller's serialized corpus of comics, this seemingly adolescent masterpiece, "Frank Miller's Sin City," is the discovery of a feminist linchpin.

Before viewing Miller and Robert Rodriguez's ("Spy Kids" and "Once Upon a Time in Mexico") film, one expects misogyny with the brilliantly stylish brutality of Miller's comics.

Miller's city is populated by actors Rosario Dawson (Gail), Bruce Willis (John Hartigan), Benicio Del Toro (Jack Rafferty) and Mickey Rourke (Marv), to name the usual suspects, with not-so-usual associations.

Elijah Wood, however, was completely unexpected, although a startling fit for the role of Kevin, a serial killer who resembles the manifested alter ego of the comic creator: nerdy, angst-filled and egotistical.

Kevin is balanced with Dwight, played by Clive Owen of "Croupier," who also sports Converse and could be thought of as the ego of the comic creator, the protective boyfriend, subtly attractive like Spiderman's street persona Peter Parker.

Maturity is undoubtedly among the qualities of its creator, looking back at the comic genres with more than 30 years of success as writer.

It's a credit to the thematic masterwork of its directors to say that Del Toro plays a minor role, a stock character in the cast of denoued characters, a wife beater in a world where prostitutes will take your balls, literally, if you step foot in the wrong alley.

"If you walk down the right alley in Sin City you can find anything," proclaims the disfigured vigilante Marv (Rourke), voicing Miller's mantra of revolutionary urban realism.

His concept is difficult to grasp; the traditional morals of the city become surreal as Miller's realistic characters become sympathetic and unwavering portraits of a victimized underclass.

In Pontecorvo's film they use handheld cameras, a technique from the Italian New Wave movement in cinema. The film accurately portrays the Algerian rebellion against French colonials, unable to quell local dissent.

Frank Miller's city is entirely generated using computer generated images with a green screen, as Rodriguez commented to MSNBC's fan letters two weeks ago.

Miller and Rodriguez, while using CGI, follow gritty stairwells and alleys, much like Pontecorvo's violently humane portrayal of the Algerians under the colonial police state.

The cast collaborates on threshold action scenes, where doors are all breakaway, to bring the torn emotions of the city into a batik, where the rain washes the characters clean in a city of unrelenting night.

The CGI used in the unsettlingly familiar police sirens, circling helicopters and polished riot gear creates a portrait of the U.S. in the minds of its disenfranchised youth, as comic books are usually followed by teens seeking reasons for the incongruities in daily life.

Miller proves the mark of maturity in the age of technology is in an individual's ability to interpret media. Miller seems to have consumed his media so completely that the viewer is caught in the space of the moving frame.

Ashcroft's comments proposing religious artifice in ice storms and George Bush's proposed ban on gay marriage are paralleled in the union of church and state in Miller's character, Senator Rourk, played dynamically by Powers Boothe.

Despite the T-backed, scorching steel riddle of crosses on women who could not be other than of the night, in "Old Town," one of many novelistic tags, this film is largely feminist with vastly more men killed than women in Miller's violently encapsulated metropolis.

When good meets bad, Frank Miller plays it all and wins with the best house in town.

ABC debuts digital network distributor

ABC News on Monday said it would launch an expanded suite of video news products available on the Internet, wireless devices, and someday, maybe even on cable television.

Now all it has to do is find someone actually willing to put it on television. ABC's ambitious plan takes the unusual approach of making its programming available to new media outlets even before it completes a plan to get it on TV. ABC is a unit of the Walt Disney Co.

The product is known as ABC News Now and will be offered in both a traditional "linear" format, like the regular TV news, and in some cases as an on-demand platform where users can see the reports they want in any order.

Emphasis put on distance learning

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The number of off-campus students enrolling this year boosted K-State's total enrollment for the spring semester.

This year off-campus enrollment increased to 1,742 students, from 803 in the 2003-2004 year, an increase of 117 percent.

"The marketplace has changed dramatically, and the Division of Continuing Education has changed to keep up," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

Although on-campus enrollment increased as well, it is likely to decline for the next 10 to 15 years, Bosco said. This is because of the decreasing number of high school students in Kansas.

K-State has put an increased emphasis on continuing education to help keep its numbers up.

It is K-State's responsibility as a land-grant university to serve Kansans, said Elizabeth Unger, vice provost of academic services and technology, and continuing education helps fulfill that goal.

"There are new media available to deliver our instruction to people at a distance, and that instruction is shown to be at least as good as on-campus instruction," Unger said.

Although K-State has increased its emphasis on distance learning, the program won't take away money from undergraduate departments, said Bosco.

The distance learning program helps to benefit those students who have a different style of learning, Unger said.

"We've focused our distance learning on always creating total programs," she said. "We believe we have an increased responsibility to keep our graduates up-to-date."

Crosses bring awareness to campus

Pro-life organization sponsors 'Graveyard of Innocence' display

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 200 white crosses stood in the ground of the K-State campus quad on Monday for all to see.

K-State Students for Life, a pro-life organization, sponsored the "Graveyard of Innocence," which is what the crosses represented.

Beginning Monday morning and ending this afternoon, two representatives from the group watched over the crosses, handed out pro-life fliers and ensured that the crosses were not vandalized or stolen.

The members of the organization dedicated the two days to the quiet protest of abortion in conjunction with Chastity Week.

Jenna Newsum, freshman in psychology and pre-law, said that the two mini-graveyards were there to remember all the children who weren't given a choice to live due to abortion.

One of the graveyards contained 148 crosses, which represented the number of children aborted each hour in the United States.

During the day, the Graveyard of Innocence keepers told three out of every four people walking by, "Congratulations. You have been allowed to live," reminding students that one in four pregnancies ends in abortion.

The other students were handed a flyer which read "Sorry. You were never given the opportunity to live. Look around you, 25 percent of your classmates were also deprived of life."

Newsum said she hoped the facts affected students who saw the graveyard.

"I really hope the number of crosses will open people's eyes to see that it's not just a tissue in there, it's a human that is not getting a chance to live," she said.

Much of the funding and materials that made the event possible were provided by The Leadership Institute, which promotes and supports conservative ideas on college campuses.

This is the first time in the past few years that the group has demonstrated the Graveyard of Innocence, so members said they hope the effect is large.

"I'm hoping people will start considering how much abortion costs our society and how much it costs the dignity of a woman," said Garrett Ridder, junior in secondary education.

"This means a lot, and we hope it'll bring the issue to the students' attention, how tragic it is and how many lives it affects," he said.

Students For Life members said they hope that after witnessing the graveyard, K-State students will refuse to contribute to the 45 million abortions that have been committed in the United States since the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision.

Scholarship honors Wefald

When Dale Herspring was awarded the 2004 Commerce Bank Distinguished Graduate Faculty Award last year, he decided he wanted to do something worthwhile with his $2,500 award money.

Herspring and another contributor, who wishes to remain anonymous, used the money to raise $10,015 for a scholarship for the Department of Political Science.

The scholarship has been set up for graduate students in the political science department. Recipients should be working toward a master of arts degree in political science and have an interest in working with national security.

"Any student who gets the scholarship should be hard working, show incredible dedication and have big dreams," K-State President, Jon Wefald said.

The scholarship was named the Dr. Jon Wefald International Security Scholarship to recognize Wefald for the support he has given the political science department.

Herspring said the scholarship is a way to honor Wefald before he retires.

Wefald said he was grateful to Herspring and his colleagues for the scholarship being named in his honor.

"It's a neat idea," he said. "It's a plus to have another scholarship."

Forensics tourney comes to a close

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Waves of mixed emotions flowed through the audience in the K-State Student Union Ballroom as finalists in each event were announced at the awards ceremony for the 28th annual American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament.

Larry Schnoor, the director of the tournament, said emotions at any tournament run high, but individuals are especially tense at nationals.

"This is the pinnacle of their forensics career," Schnoor said.

Ninety-seven schools and more than 700 competitors participated in the tournament, which began Saturday morning and ran until Monday afternoon.

Of the 12 K-State students who participated in the national competition, four broke – reached the quarter finals – in four events, one made it to semifinals in an event, and two, Nick Barton, junior in philosophy, and Neal Stewart, junior in speech, made it to the final rounds in their events.

Overall, the K-State team was the seventh in the nation, out-performing 90 of the schools at the tournament. First place went to Illinois State University.

Barton, who took second in Dramatic Interpretation and ninth overall in the nation, said that competing at K-State made it easier on him.

"I was more comfortable, not having to think about where buildings were," he said.

Stewart, who placed third in After Dinner Speaking and ranked as the 17th student overall in the nation, said he agreed with Barton, and felt that competing at nationals in Manhattan gave him an edge.

"It was really a rush competing at home," he said. "It was such a supportive atmosphere."

Barton said that the emotions evident in all participants were due to the hard work and effort they put into forensics throughout the year.

"You work all year to get to the end," he said.

Craig Brown, director of K-State forensics and tournament organizer, jumped for joy as his friends, pupils and thankful competitors congratulated him on his team's performance and on the tournament organization.

"It's always like this," he said, pointing to the groups of laughing, crying and speechless students. "We've done this all year. We're proud of what we've done and we are proud of our friends who we competed against."

Thousands gather to see Pope carried to St. Peter's

By William Kole
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pope John Paul II's body was carried solemnly on a crimson platform to St. Peter's Basilica past a sea of more than 100,000 pilgrims who waited for hours Monday under a blistering sun for a glimpse of the late pontiff before his funeral and entombment.

Twelve pallbearers flanked by Swiss Guards in red-plumed helmets gingerly marched the body from the Vatican's Apostolic Palace, where it had lain in state for prelates and dignitaries, to the basilica for display to the public.

Incense wafted through the church where John Paul's body will be laid to rest Friday in an ancient grotto holding the remains of popes through the ages, after a funeral to be attended under heavy security by President Bush and dozens of other world leaders. Up to 2 million pilgrims are expected in Rome to pay their final respects.

As cardinals in their red robes and caps filed past the body bowing and crossing themselves, a long line of faithful, tourists and Romans who had packed St. Peter's Square, slowly snaked into the basilica.

On his feet were a pair of the simple brown leather shoes he favored during his 26-year pontificate and wore on many of his trips to more than 120 countries – a poignant reminder of the legacy left by history's most-traveled pope.

"I would like to tell him how much I love him," said Lorenzo Cardone, 9, waiting in line with his parents.

Since John Paul's death Saturday, St. Peter's Square has been transformed into an outdoor shrine of thousands of candles, farewell letters and notes scribbled on train tickets and tissues fused in puddles of melting candle wax. The scene was reminiscent of the impromptu tributes that swelled in Paris and London after the 1997 car crash that killed Princess Diana.

"Yesterday there was almost nothing here, and now look at it," said Catherine Pech, who drove 12 hours from Switzerland with her husband and daughter to mourn the pope.

Hours before the body was moved to the basilica, the College of Cardinals – meeting in tradition-bound secrecy – set Friday as the date for the funeral in the first of a series of gatherings preceding their secret vote this month to elect a new pope.

It was not clear if they discussed other issues. Chief Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said there were 65 cardinals attending, while the remaining cardinals were heading to Rome.

John Paul will be buried immediately after the funeral, which will include pageantry reserved for the highest prince of the church. The basilica was designed by Bramante and Michelangelo and dedicated in 1626. It was built on the site where St. Peter is believed to have been buried.

Navarro-Valls said John Paul would "almost surely" be buried in the tomb where Pope John XXIII lay before he was brought up onto the main floor of the basilica.

John XXIII was moved after his 2000 beatification because so many pilgrims wanted to visit his tomb, and the grotto is in a cramped underground space.

In London, Buckingham Palace announced that Prince Charles postponed his wedding until Saturday so that he could attend the funeral, and the White House said Bush would lead the U.S. delegation.

"It will be a moment without precedent," Rome Mayor Walter Veltroni told Repubblica Radio on Monday. "Rome will grind to a halt."

Archbishop Josef Clemens, secretary of the Vatican office for lay people and a former aide to top Vatican Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, said not all the cardinal electors had arrived in time for Monday's first session. Asked about the atmosphere among the cardinals, he said: "Sad, but hopeful."

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Wichita

Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.

We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your CD, call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

Witness claims Jackson molested him during a tickling incident in 1990

By Linda Deutsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a halting, emotion-choked voice, the son of Michael Jackson's former housekeeper testified Monday that the pop star molested him during a tickling game in 1990.

The 24-year-old man was called to the stand as prosecutors in the current molestation case against Jackson began trying to show the jury that the singer has a habit of molesting boys.

The witness said that over a span of several years, Jackson twice touched his groin over his clothes during tickling games at Jackson's Los Angeles-area condominium, which he and his mother referred to as "the hideaway," and in a third incident reached under his clothes at Jackson's Neverland ranch.

"We were tickling. He was tickling and I was laughing and the – it was, he was – he was tickling me in the...," the witness said before asking the judge for a break. He wiped his eyes and drank some water.

"He was tickling me. I was wearing shorts again. ... He reached on my leg and I'm still laughing and he reached up to my – privates," the witness said.

As he began to describe the alleged molestation he apologized to prosecutor Ron Zonen for his halting testimony and said: "This took a lot of counseling to get over, just to let you know."

The defense asked that the comment be struck from the record and Judge Rodney S. Melville agreed.

The witness said that Jackson touched him in that incident for two or three minutes and that he remembered thinking, "I should probably go." Asked whom he first told of the incident, the witness said, "Probably God."

The appearance of the young man was allowed under a ruling last week by the judge that prosecutors may present evidence that Jackson molested or otherwise behaved inappropriately with five boys before the time period of the current allegations.

Jackson is on trial on charges of molesting a 13-year-old boy in February or March 2003.

In his ruling, the judge said prosecutors could mention that the housekeeper's son and another boy received civil settlements from Jackson but could not tell the jury the amounts. Prosecutors have said the housekeeper's son received $2.4 million in 1994.

The housekeeper's son, now married and working in an antitruancy program, was asked at the outset of his testimony if he could identify Jackson in court.

"He's the light-complected gentleman," the witness said, smiling at Jackson.

The witness also described two earlier alleged incidents that involved Jackson touching him over his clothes.

Nest egg now off-limits to creditors

By Hope Yen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Supreme Court gave bankrupt Americans another layer of financial protection Monday, ruling that creditors cannot seize their Individual Retirement Accounts.

The unanimous decision shields a nest egg relied upon by millions of people. The justices said IRAs should join pensions, 401(k)s, Social Security and other benefits tied to age, illness or disability that are afforded protection under federal bankruptcy law.

Justice Clarence Thomas, writing for the court, said a bankrupt Arkansas couple was entitled to keep more than $55,000 in retirement savings from creditors. He reasoned that IRAs are benefits tied to a person's age under the federal statute because a tax penalty is imposed if a person makes withdrawals before age 60.

"That penalty erects a substantial barrier to early withdrawal," Thomas wrote. "Funds in a typical savings account, by contrast, can be withdrawn without age-based penalty."

The ruling affects 16 states and the District of Columbia, which do not have their own state laws protecting IRAs. The remaining 34 have separate state laws on bankruptcy protection, and a few of those, including New York, California and Iowa, have language mirroring the federal bankruptcy statute.

IRAs let most investors contribute up to $4,000 annually to a fund that grows tax-free until withdrawals. It is the retirement plan typically used by workers between jobs, according to AARP, the advocacy group for people over 50.

Unlike many other retirement plans, IRAs permit cash withdrawals for any reason at any time, but holders 59 1/2 and younger must pay a 10 percent penalty for doing so.

Some lower courts had ruled that makes IRAs more like savings accounts, which are unprotected from creditors under bankruptcy law.

In Monday's opinion, however, Thomas noted that IRA withdrawals by those younger than 60 are few, effectively making the account a benefit based on age. "The deterrent to early withdrawal it creates suggests that Congress designed it to preclude early access to IRAs," he wrote.

The ruling comes at a time when more people are finding themselves in debt. Last year, about 1.56 million people filed for personal bankruptcy, compared with 875,000 a decade earlier. In 2003, bankruptcy filings peaked at 1.63 million.

"We're pleased," said Jean Constantine-Davis, a senior attorney for AARP. "It's really important to encourage people to contribute savings in their working years and to keep those savings sacrosanct."

Largest U.S. anti-terrorism drill underway

By Wayne Parry
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The biggest anti-terrorism drill ever held in the United States began Monday with a mock biological attack in New Jersey and a simulated chemical-weapons explosion in Connecticut.

Named TOPOFF 3, the $16 million week-long exercise is meant to find weak spots in the nation's emergency planning.

"We will intentionally stress our emergency response systems to the point of failure so we can repair them," said Matt Mayer of the U.S. Homeland Security Department.

Although no real weapons or bio-agents are used, state and local officials are supposed to respond as if it is the real thing, sending ambulances to hospitals and flooding the area with investigators and emergency workers in haz-mat suits.

"It's a test of how well people are communicating with each other and whether the right people are getting pulled into this exercise," said Roger Shatzkin, a spokesman for New Jersey's Office of Counterterrorism.

The biological attack drill started in New Jersey at the Hillside campus of Kean University with officers swarming around the scene of a mock auto wreck.

Reporters were given a simulated briefing and told that the vehicles did not match their registrations.

Doctors tried to connect the incident to a patient who had been admitted to a hospital with "flu-like symptoms." More "victims" of the supposed biological attack headed to emergency rooms, and state health officials started zeroing in on pneumonic plague as the likely cause.

In Connecticut, federal officials staged a mock chemical weapons explosion on the New London waterfront. Buses were overturned to create a realistic scene and volunteers played victims of the attack.

All told, more than 10,000 people will participate in the drill, including exercises that will involve officials in Canada and England. More than 8,500 people took part in similar exercises in Seattle and Chicago in 2003.

Today and Wednesday, the drill will shift to hospitals, where hundreds of mock patients will show up in various degrees of medical crisis. Some will be treated in emergency rooms, while others might undergo outdoor decontamination.

AMENDMENT | Judiciary could affect resolution

who have been together for a long time.

"To lose the protections could be very serious," Littrell said.

Some who support the resolution see no problems with part B's language.

Rachel Olds, senior in political science and College Republicans president, said if part B is perceived as a problem in the future, problems should be dealt with on a case-by-case basis through legislation, if needed.

Paul Barkey, co-pastor at Ashland Community Church, said part B does not threaten anyone.

Anyone in Kansas can accomplish what married couples can, including gay and lesbian couples, he said.

This includes advanced medical directives and power of attorney, Barkey said.

"The part B argument is simple an attempt to confuse people with what is in the letter of the amendment," he said.

But Leigh Fine, senior in chemical science and former president of Queer-Straight Alliance, said his identity as a gay man is being put to a test of validity.

"This isn't just about marriage or love or civil unions or sex. It's really about validity and being recognized as a valid person that can love.

"I really hope that when people vote for this they consider the nature of human rights. When one group's rights are in jeopardy, everybody's rights are in jeopardy," he said.

Maintaining family values is another issue with the resolution.

He said those for the amendment are approaching it as a pro-family issue, with a concern in preserving the family.

Barkey said gay marriage is not the sole threat.

"Family is a building block of culture. There are lots of threats to marriage," he said.

Barkey said polygamy is an example of another threat to marriage.

"These things are disastrous because they do not provide stable environments for raising families," he said.

Olds said the resolution will define what marriage is, as well as the rights and benefits of a married couple.

"The amendment is not taking away rights. It's just stating the rights of married couples," she said.

Ben Davis, sophomore in political science and pre-law and executive of College Republicans, said marriage is a privilege, not a right.

"Nowhere in the constitution does it say that marriage is a right," he said.

Both sides agree on the potential role the judiciary could have on the resolution.

Barkey said since judges are appointed and not elected, they don't answer to the people when it comes to defining marriage.

He said the judiciary is directing legislature as to what they are to do and not do with the law.

"What we have going on is judicial tyranny," Barkey said.

Barkey said in order to prevent that from happening, the people of Kansas should define what they want marriage to be rather than allow a single judge to do so.

Barkey said he thinks the resolution will be challenged if it passes, but he doesn't expect the challenges to hold.

Chris Renner, co-chair of Flint Hills Human Rights Project, said there is no way of knowing how judges will interpret the resolution if it passes.

"Some legal scholars say it will take 20 to 30 years of litigation to define what the marriage amendment means in Kansas law," he said.

Davis said he is confident the resolution will pass.

"I'm really encouraged by those that support the amendment," he said.

SALES TAX | Tax to supplement education funding possible for the tax to end earlier.

"It ends automatically after three years," Martin said. "If the school board, in agreement with the City Commission wants to end it, or if the City Commission wants to, they can end it after $5.4 million is collected."

The money raised from the new tax would go to directly to the city, and then be given to the school board to be spent in specific areas.

Supporters of the program, like Jones, argue that the imminent arrival of additional troops at Fort Riley requires that something be done immediately.

"We have to maintain our school system to accommodate incoming troops," Jones said. "We can't wait until we get money from the state after they get here."

In addition, Jones said faculty members at K-State, as well as other professionals, often consider the quality of the school system first when deciding where to live.

Martin said that after five months of work, today's vote is an opportunity for Manhattan citizens to voice their opinions on how the funding shortfall in the district should be handled.

discussed a civil union marriage.

"It's a joke with us, but I suppose it's true," Currier laughs.

No rings are involved in the engagement. Neither man's parents know the couple are dating.

Both disagree with the resolution defining marriage as between one man and one woman only.

"This amendment is messing up so many more things than just gay marriage," Evans said.

Currier said the resolution has given his gay friends another reason to be selective in coming out.

"It's very disappointing," he said.

Both said if the resolution passes, it won't have a direct impact on them.

"The amendment won't have immediate effect on my life," Evans said.

"Given what I want to do career-wise, I probably won't stay in the Midwest," Currier added.

Evans said he and Currier really haven't experienced too many negative things as a couple.

He said they do have to avoid Aggieville at 2 a.m.

"You just have to be smart about it and get used to being careful," Evans said.

"We've had more positive reactions than negative reactions as a couple."

Kansas passes constitutional amendment banning gay marriage

Marriage ban passed

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas citizens voted Tuesday to accept an amendment limiting marriage to one man and one woman.

Thirty-nine states have laws specifically banning same-sex marriage, while 16 have constitutional amendments banning gay marriage.

Ben Davis, executive of College Republicans, had full faith the amendment would pass.

"I'm very happy, and I am sure that the majority of the state is happy as well," said Davis, sophomore in political science and pre-law.

Those who opposed the amendment are unhappy with the results.

"It's disappointing, but it's not something we weren't expecting," said Leigh Fine, former president of Queer-Straight Alliance and senior in chemical science.

Fine said the most disappointing aspect of the amendment is it doesn't affect gay

High voter turnout for local elections

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a close race for local elections Tuesday night.

Five votes separated the third and fourth place vote getters for Manhattan City Commission, and the fifth-place finisher was only nine votes behind.

Voter turnout was high for Riley County with 11,778 voters, which is 33.48 percent of registered voters. That is 5,508 votes more than the 2003 city/school elections.

Election results are unofficial until Monday, which is the canvass of the election, County Clerk Rich Vargo said. All provisional ballots will be considered by then. Newly elected officials will take over in July.

Vargo said the high voter turnout could be attributed to the amendment and sales tax question on the ballot.

"For a city/school election that is good," he said.

Tom Phillips received the most votes with 4,040. Mark Hatesohl, incumbent, took second with 3,953 votes. Jayme Morris-Hardeman barely took a seat with 3,483 votes. Not winning a seat were James Sherow with 3,478, Sam Robinson with 3,469 and Brad McCune with 3,050 votes.

Morris-Hardeman said the competition was quality.

"Once I saw the advanced votes come in, I could really tell it was going to be a close race," she said. "This was a really high quality pool of candidates."

Hatesohl, who took fourth in the primaries, agreed.

"All candidates ran serious campaigns," he said. "Across the board there were quality candidates."

Hatesohl said the quality of the candidates resulted in him contributing more time to his campaign than he expected.

"Every spare hour that the sun was out I was

Manhattan residents vote to raise sales tax to support local schools

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan consumers are going to help fund local public schools.

The sales tax question on the ballot passed Tuesday with almost 61 percent of the vote.

It raises sales tax from 7.3 to 7.55 percent beginning October 1.

The increase will last for three years, unless $5.4 million is reached before that time.

The tax is going to support Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

David Colburn, vice president of USD 383 school board, said the tax will help greatly.

"I'm humbled and thankful that the community voted to support the community," Colburn said.

He said there were not a lot of specifics discussed on what needed the tax will be used for before it passed.

"For me, the sales tax had a lot to do with getting ready for students coming to Fort Riley," Colburn said.

Beth Tatarko, who was unofficially elected to the school board Tuesday night, said it will be used so programs won't be cut. It will keep foreign language, music, activities, sports programs and class sizes small.

Walt Pesaresi, president and elected to another term, said the tax is needed because future funds were uncertain.

It was uncertain how much more would be given by the state and how many more students would come into the district, Pesaresi said.

"That's why we need the money because we don't know what's going to happen," he said.

Pesaresi said the school board will not ask for the sales tax to be continued.

Riley County Results

Sales tax question
- Yes 5,247— 60.94 percent
- No 3,363— 39.06 percent

"This is kind of a three-year loan for us," he said. "It's very important that we use the sales tax wisely."

Man arrested for drug possession; methamphetamine bill passes in House, Senate

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christopher Rohr, 19, was arrested on existing felony charges Monday.

Rohr, 3109 Lundin Drive, was stopped for speeding and found to have an existing warrant in Lyon County.

"When the police searched his vehicle, the officers found marijuana," Riley County Police Department Lt. Michael Quintanar said.

It was a misdemeanor charge, according to RCPD Sgt. Lynnette Woods, but Rohr was previously arrested on three felony charges. Two of the charges were for the sale of cocaine and one was for the sale of methamphetamines within 1,000 feet of a school zone. Bond was set at $6,000.

Kansas is responding to a decrease in meth busts since 2001, according Riley County Law Enforcement agencies, as reported by The Associated Press.

A bill was passed to limit the sale of ephedrine and pseudoephedrine, key ingredients used in making methamphetamines.

The bill is likely to be signed into law by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius due to such overwhelming support in the Kansas House and Senate, Sebelius spokesperson Nicole Corcoran said, according to The Associated Press.

On Friday, the bill passed unanimously in the Senate and with only two votes of opposition in the House.

Under the proposed law, consumers will be required to provide identification and sign a log book.

These precautions are meant to help pharmacies be "operated and maintained without endangering the public health or safety," according to the bill, as amended by the Senate Committee of the Whole.

Consumers will be limited to three packages per week of any products containing the two substances.

The bill is in response to a decreasing number of meth lab busts, down to 264 out of 847 in 2001, according to Kansas Law Enforcement agencies.

The law, if signed, will be named after Greenwood County Sheriff Matt Samuels, shot and killed in a meth raid 45 minutes from Emporia, Kan. on Jan. 15.

Illinois pillowfighting club to attempt record

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. – Pillow fighting is traditionally reserved for slumber parties, where masses of young girls or boys gather to partake in what has been depicted as typical sleepover behavior. The University of Illinois Pillowfighting Club wants to take the slumber party out of pillow fights and bring the fights outdoors while simultaneously attempting to break a world record.

The soccer field on the corner of Florida and Lincoln avenues in Urbana, Ill., will play host to the Pillowfighting Club's attempt to be listed in the Guinness Book of World Records for the world's largest pillow fight.

"In an ideal situation, we want over 3,000 people to show up," Emma O'Brien, junior in communications, said. "There are other colleges that are competing, like the University of Albany. Ideally, would want as many people to show up as possible."

According to the Guinness Web site, the current world record for the largest pillow fight is 2,773 people. It was set on Sept. 8, 2004, by the employees of a Land's End factory in Dodgeville, Wis.

"I think that people will want to come because it'll be fun and they'll be a part of history, for a little while anyway," said Jerrod Marten, a sophomore who is one of the founding members of the Pillowfighting Club. "It'll be a story to tell your friends and maybe one day, your kids."

TWO MEN DISRUPT U. ARIZONA CLASS WITH BEER, KICK CANS INTO AUDIENCE

TUCSON, Ariz. – Two men interrupted a University of Arizona class Thursday, drank beer and kicked the empty cans into the audience, but students said the incident was more humorous than threatening.

Suzanne Delaney, a psychology adjunct lecturer, contacted the University of Arizona Police Department to document the incident in her psychology course Structure of Mind and Behavior, reports stated.

Delaney told police the men did not belong to the class but entered the room in the auditorium of the Social Sciences building around 3:42 p.m. each drinking a beer, reports stated.

The men went onto the lecture hall's stage, set the beer cans down and kicked them into the audience of students, reports stated. No one was hurt from the flying cans.

BOSTON U. PROFESSOR PROMOTES NAPS

BOSTON – Students who were still feeling tired from losing an hour of sleep due to daylight savings time this weekend grabbed a few minutes of sleep Monday in celebration of the sixth annual National Napping Day.

Boston University Sargent College of Health and Rehabilitation Sciences professor William Anthony said he started observing the holiday to get people talking about the benefits of napping, noting that in recent years, National Napping Day has received an overwhelmingly positive response.

According to Anthony, more college students take naps than any other age group.

"About 70 percent of college students take naps," he said. "The reason for this is because they have the opportunity to nap. Once you leave college you have less of an opportunity."

Boston University freshman Leslie Sall said she naps everyday because she gets little sleep at night and has free time between classes.

"I usually take naps when I come back from class and I have nothing to do," she said. "I take a nap instead of doing homework during the day."

Anthony said Sargent sends out a press release to notify students of the health benefits of napping, although the college student demographic does not require more sleep than others.

According to Anthony, there is no set amount of time for an effective nap.

"If you nap too long it may be an indicator of a health problem," he said. "Napping is short sleep between several minutes and two hours. Winston Churchill took two-hour naps and he said it helped him get through World War II. The most popular nap is between 15 to 30 minutes."

Nicole Coleman | COLLEGIAN

Randall Duval, Vanderbilt graduate student, Bikat Tilahun, senior in psychology, Susan Guy, DATA Heartland Field Organizer, and David Norman, professor in agricultural economics, speak at a panel discussion titled AIDS and Africa held in Forum Hall Tuesday night. The discussion was sponsored by CrossRoads and Funded by SGA in conjunction with the one campaign to fight global AIDS and poverty.

Lack of education causes spread of disease

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A panel of four discussed the AIDS crisis in Africa Tuesday evening, with hopes of informing students about the epidemic.

The panel discussion was part of a series of events sponsored by the CrossRoads student group which began April 4 with screenings of the films "Closer Walk" and "The Heart of America Tour" – both dealing with the issue of AIDS in Africa.

The four speakers were all former residents of African nations, and had all experienced firsthand the effect of the AIDS virus on families, communities and entire nations.

The first speaker was Randall Duval, a graduate student from Vanderbilt University. Duval spoke about the stigmas associated with the AIDS virus. In his experience, Duval said that those infected with HIV or AIDS are often looked down upon by those around them. He said this is because many people associate the contraction of AIDS with a lack of judgment.

"When you find out you have it you ask yourself, 'Where did I get it?'" Duval said. "It's not a diagnostic question, it's a judgment question."

The next speaker was Rosemary Eustace, a nurse originally from Tanzania, who also spoke about the social stigma associated with the AIDS virus. Eustace said that one of the reasons that AIDS has grown into a pandemic is that many people in different African countries refuse to acknowledge the fact that they have the virus.

Eustace told stories of a man who refused to admit that he had the AIDS virus, and remarried several times, despite the fact that his previous wives had AIDS.

As a health care professional, Eustace was able to give first hand accounts about the lack of many basic medical supplies in African hospitals, including items as simple as medical gloves.

"In Tanzania, nurses will use the same glove for four hours," she said. "Not to protect the patient, but to protect themselves."

After Eustace spoke, Bikat Tilahun, a senior in psychology who was originally from Ethiopia, told about how the AIDS virus, and those infected with it, are looked down upon.

"People never openly tell when someone in their family dies from AIDS," she said. "It shows that they had sex outside of marriage."

The final speaker of the evening was David Norman, a professor in agricultural economics at K-State, who had spent 20 years living and working in African nations.

Norman spoke about the rich culture and heritage in African societies, and how, with the onset of the AIDS pandemic, these cultures are beginning to disappear.

"In African society, there is so much living and knowledge passed on from generation to generation," he said, "and they are losing this knowledge because they are not living long enough."

Norman also spoke about the vicious cycle in areas with high occurrences of AIDS. Norman said that when a person in a household becomes infected with AIDS, another member must quit working to take care of the infected family member. With one less person working to support the family, the household falls into deep poverty, and can not afford to put food on the table. Before long, other family members will fall ill due to malnutrition.

Duval noted that in Muslim nations, where AIDS is a less taboo subject, it is not as rampant in countries where it is. He also noted that in Muslim nations, abstinence is stressed, preventing the spread of the virus.

Katie Selders, a junior in public relations, organized the event, and said that she hoped that the panel discussion, along with the other events throughout the week, would help to educate people in the midwest about the AIDS crisis.

"I think the primary goals of this event are to raise awareness of the extent of the problems and suffering in Africa" Selders said.

Selders said that most of the financial support for bringing the speakers to campus came from a $7,500 grant through the Diversity Programming Committee.

David Jones, the campus pastor with CrossRoads, said that Selders has worked closely with CrossRoads and DATA (Debt, AIDS, Trade, Africa) to organize the event.

Other events scheduled this week for AIDS and Africa will be held Wednesday in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Events include Susan Guy, from DATA, who will present lectures at 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. and Bwalya Melu, a World Vision representative, will speak at 12:30 and 3:30 p.m. Wednesday evening, the United Black Voices will perform at 6:00 p.m., Dr. Myra Gordon, K-States Associate Provost for Diversity, will speak at 6:45 p.m., and the Freres Guisse vocal group from Senegal will perform at 7:30 p.m.

CITY COMMISSION

Officials accept proclamations

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The final city commission meeting for the 2004-2005 commission was brief and uneventful.

There were only two items of business on the general agenda, but many presentations and proclamations were made at the Manhattan City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

Col. Bart Howard and Sgt. Maj. Robert A. Moore said they were grateful toward the Manhattan community and presented a flag that was flown over Iraq to show their appreciation.

"This flag represents the sweat and toil of the first brigade," Howard said.

"On behalf of Ft. Riley, we would like to thank the community for the support that has allowed us to continue to do the best we can."

Mayor Brad Everett issued two proclamations for the month of April. Roy Fowler, registered occupational therapist, was present to receive the proclamation for Occupational Therapy Month.

Tina Long, director of communications for Kansas Children's Service League, accepted the Child Abuse Prevention Month proclamation and said the month was very important.

"We use the month of April to raise awareness that child abuse does occur in our community," Long said.

"Finding a solution to this problem is dependent upon participation from community members."

After the proclamations, the city commission addressed the demolition of property located within the boundaries of two historic structures.

In September, McCullough Development Inc. applied for a demolition permit for property located at 821 Poyntz Ave. containing the Woman's Club House and the Robert Ulrich House, which are both listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Kansas State Historic Preservation Act does not allow local governments to issue a demolition permit until the State Historic Preservation Officer reviews the project and determines that the action would not "encroach upon, damage or destroy" the historic property.

The State Historic Preservation Officer determined that the Woman's Club House would be harmed – prohibiting the city from issuing the requested demolition permit.

However, the Kansas State Historic Preservation Act also allows the local governing body to authorize the project if it finds there is no feasible alternative and plans are made to minimize harm to historic property.

Commissioner Mark Hatesohl moved to authorize the issuance of the demolition permit.

The motion passed with a 5-0 vote.

Iraqi parliament to choose president

By Traci Carl
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Ousted dictator Saddam Hussein will be able to watch from his Baghdad jail cell as Iraq's newly elected parliament chooses a new president Wednesday, the next step in building Iraq's first democratically elected government in 50 years, Iraqi officials said.

Lawmakers put the finishing touches Tuesday on an agreement making Kurdish leader Jalal Talabani president and Shiite Adel Abdul-Mahdi and interim President Ghazi al-Yawer, a Sunni Arab, his two vice presidents.

On Thursday, the 275 lawmakers elected Jan. 30 likely will name Shiite leader Ibrahim al-Jaafari prime minister, clearing the way for lawmakers to begin focusing their attention on writing a permanent constitution by their Aug. 15 deadline.

The new, interim government will lay the foundation for future elections and a permanent government – all key to an eventual U.S. withdrawal.

The U.S. military said four service members were killed Monday and Tuesday in one of its biggest losses in recent weeks. As of Monday, at least 1,536 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

In Washington, President Bush said Iraqis were increasingly joining the fight against terrorists like Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, the head of al-Qaeda in Iraq.

"The American people ought to take heart to know that we have now more allies in defeating these few, and those allies are the Iraqi citizens," he said.

TO THE POINT

Commissioners need to ensure rental safety

Dear Commissioners Hatesohl, Morris-Hardeman and Phillips:

Congratulations on your victories in Tuesday's election.

The people of Manhattan believe in you enough to put you on the City Commission, and there is no time to waste in doing your part to fulfill your campaign promises.

Too often, students' needs are neglected by community leaders.

While the university's economic importance is considered, individual students often get lumped under the same umbrella as transient citizens.

This is unfortunate not only for students, but also for the community as a whole. As commissioners, each of you should embrace the opportunity to utilize the city's resources to help the entire community – including students.

Most important is more stringent enforcement of codes on rental properties.

Students' health and safety are vital to community development, and allowing landlords to squeak by on safety issues is unacceptable.

We also ask that you remember the importance of students and consider their needs in your decision-making.

Respectfully,

Prince Charming again

Prince Charles right to marry Camilla despite criticism, controversy

AMY BOLTON

In 1936, King Edward VIII of Great Britain willingly abdicated the throne. He didn't lead the country into debt or war, nor did he have inappropriate relations under his office desk with an intern and resign out of shame.

No, Edward just wanted to get married. The only problem was, his fiancé, Wallis Simpson, was a divorced American woman, and the British government forbade their leader from marrying her.

So instead of giving up Wallis, he gave up the world for her. In a public address he gave on the radio, Edward announced his abdication, saying, "I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duties as King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love."

Wallis married her prince, and they lived "happily ever after" in Paris until Edward's death in 1972.

Not every prince is so lucky. This Saturday, Britain's Prince Charles, the oldest son of Queen Elizabeth and first in line to be the King, will marry Camilla Parker Bowles.

This couple has a history going back 35 years, and they have waited a long time to be together. They deserve to spend the rest of their lives together, free of the judgmental eyes of those who think they shouldn't be.

Charles and Camilla met in 1970 but broke up when Charles left for the navy the next year. In 1973, Camilla married another man, and in 1981, Charles gave in to mounting pressure to get married and took Lady Diana Spencer as his bride.

But Charles and Camilla's relationship was not over, and they carried on an affair throughout Charles's marriage to Diana.

Charles and Diana separated in 1992, and two years later, Charles publicly admitted to the affair with Camilla. The next year Camilla and her husband divorced, and Diana blamed Camilla for the breakup of her marriage in a televised interview, saying, "there were three of us in this marriage, so it was a bit crowded."

Charles and Diana divorced in 1996, but the next year, Diana was killed in a car accident. Charles and Camilla kept their relationship out of the public eye for a while, and in 1999 they finally appeared together as a couple for the first time. Camilla moved in with Charles in 2003, and in February they announced their engagement.

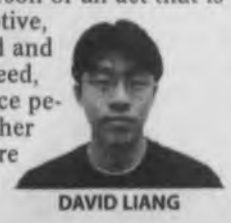
Some people don't think Charles should marry the woman who wrecked his first marriage, or that a re-married man should be King.

But they need to give the guy a break.

He has been in love with this woman for 35 years. They have endured public scandal and criticism of their relationship, but they've finally decided to make their love official.

If everyone else in the world has the opportunity to be in love and get married, why shouldn't they? Charles never asked to be a prince. If he was just a regular guy, no one would care about his divorce or upcoming marriage.

True, Charles and Camilla should not have committed adultery by restarting their relationship when they were still married to other people. But if it weren't for the gorgeous Prince William, I would say that Charles should never have even married Diana.



But they divorced nine years ago, and Camilla has been divorced for a decade. Diana is dead, and Camilla's ex-husband is remarried. Charles and Camilla are in love, and they deserve to spend the rest of their lives together so that they can be happy.

Practicality, skill important to overcoming obstacles

DAVID LIANG

The eponymous adjective "Machiavellian" is often used to describe a person or an act that is seen as deceptive, self-interested and immoral. Indeed, the renaissance period philosopher wrote an entire book dedicated to the prince of Florence, Lorenzo Medici, on how to run a country with tricks involving just that.

But the often misunderstood figure was not so much a teacher of evil as he was a political realist. Niccolo Machiavelli saw problems the way they were and thought of ways to getting around them using the most practical means possible.

An ideal prince, according to him, should be full of "virtue." It's important to point out here that Machiavelli didn't equate virtue with personal morality. Machiavellian virtue is defined closer along the lines of "ability" and "skill" rather than ethics. If a deed serves to further the goals of a prince, it is "virtuous."

In fact, Machiavelli would have flat-out scoffed at politicians of today for waxing lyrical about moral values all the time. Machiavellian morality falls in a broad gray category, and what is "good" is judged solely by its outcome rather than the method used in getting there. This is loosely defined as "ends justifying the means."

As cynical as this may sound, Machiavelli does have a point. History has shown time and again that people care more about the ultimate results but are quick to forget how we got there. A classic example of this would be the case of Yitzhak Rabin.

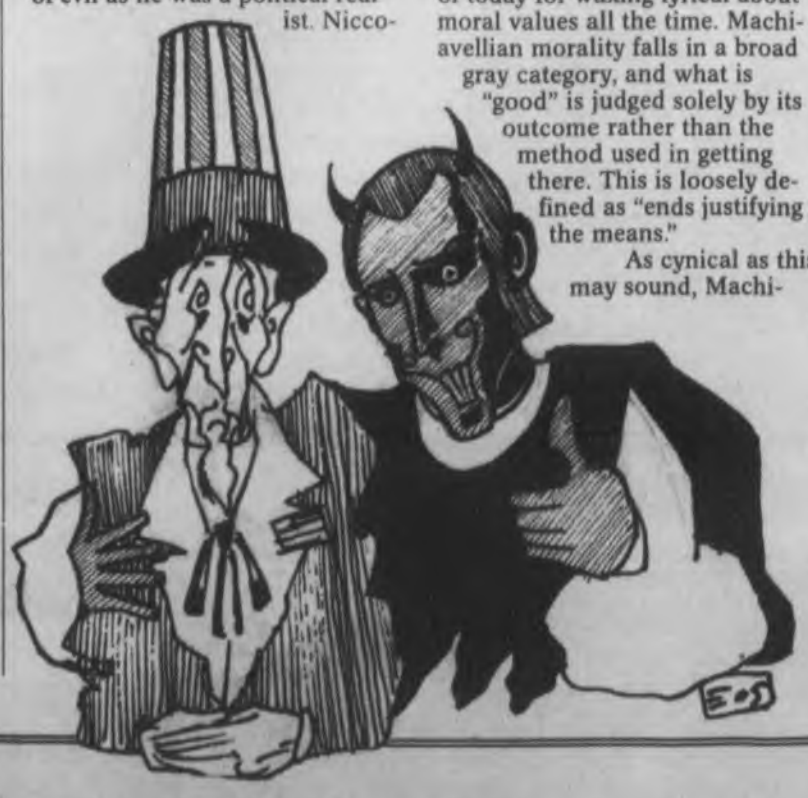
As the defense minister of Israel in 1988, Rabin reportedly told Israeli soldiers to "break the bones" of Palestinian demonstrators during the first Intifada. News of this got out and he was condemned by American and European liberals.

Meanwhile, Rabin's hard-line approach won him popularity in Israel and he was elected prime minister in 1992. Once comfortably settled in his new position, Rabin used his power to make peace with the Palestinians and Jordanians.

Ironically, he was assassinated by a right-wing extremist in 1995 and is now a martyred champion of liberalism all over the world.

The Machiavellian notion of using less-than-ideal means to accomplish a greater good has success stories elsewhere. Once among the poorest nations in the world, Singapore was transformed by its authoritarian government into an economic powerhouse within the span of a few short decades.

Not that it wouldn't have been socially beneficial, but had it adopted a western-style democracy such progress might not have been possible.



On the other hand, some nominally democratic countries like Sierra Leone and Benin have made little social or economic progress since the 1960s. With rampant corruption, anarchy and ethnic violence, optimism and hopes for a post-colonialism African revival have all but vanished.

As a "Prince" among nations, the United States could learn a lesson or two from Machiavelli's insights. The world is becoming increasingly complex and barring exceptions like North Korea, it is no longer possible to sanctimoniously label countries as "good" or "evil" solely based on their form of governance.

Though we would like to ease our conscience by creating a utopian society, our methods of compassion, morality and ethics are only solutions to simplistic textbook problems to a world that exists only in our dreams. If America genuinely wants to help a country, it must do so in a way that would benefit the country of interest in the long run.

Philosophers have long argued on whether or not a "greater good" exists in society. If we are to accept that it does, then perhaps adopting a Machiavellian outlook would be the quickest way to get there.

Hey, kid in the green shorts in the Nichols computer lab: you should watch out what you do at night, 'cause there are cameras around.

Is masturbating in a computer lab legal?

To the girl in our A&P class: pull up your pants. Crack kills.

Why do you not show girls groping each other on the front page?

So the Pope dies and you decide to put two guys fondling each other on your front page. Thanks.

Instead of 40 days, 40 nights, how about 40 girls, 40 nights?

I think the fraternity brother exchange is a great idea. TKE, you can keep the fat kid.

Hey, Tau Kappa Epsilon: if that kid pisses you off in the first two days as much as he does us every day, just send him to FIJI and do us all a favor.

Who's that tall, lanky tool riding around on the red Honda on campus trying to pick up chicks?

Hey, ladies, since it's warm out now and you're starting to wear less clothes, you might consider shedding those extra pounds you put on over winter.

Hey, I've made out with 40 fraternity guys, so I was wondering if we could meet up and make it 41?

To the girl that called me a jerk today in the Fourum: you're a big meanie.

Hypnotist entertains Pre-Vet club during 2005 AgFest

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twenty-five Pre-Vet Club members found out Tuesday night what it was like to be hypnotized.

Dr. Al Snyder, former veterinarian turned hypnotist, gave a performance sponsored by the Kansas Farm Bureau and Union Program Council for the Pre-Vet Club's annual AgFest.

Snyder, who performed at AgFest three years ago, has been hypnotizing crowds for 15 years.

Snyder said he enjoys hypnosis because each audience acts differently and it's a tasteful form of entertainment.

"No two shows are ever the same," Snyder said. "It's one of the last art forms that isn't X-rated. We can have fun without it having to be off-color."

If you go
AgFest 2005 activities

What: Cowboy Olympics
When: 7:30 tonight
Where: Weber Arena

What: Ag Policy Debate
When: 5:30 p.m. Thursday
Where: Umberger 105

What: Barbecue
When: 11 a.m. Friday
Where: Weber/Call Hall lawn
In case of inclement weather, it will be in Weber Arena

Leah Ridley, freshman in open option, said the show was entertaining and fun for the audience.

"It would have been worth paying money for," Ridley said.

A.J. Wilson, freshman in undecided engineering, was hypnotized to believe he was Kenny Chesney.

"I appreciate the fine ladies coming out supporting me tonight," Wilson said when he was hypnotized. After he was brought out of hypnosis, Wilson laughed and said he would do it again.

"It was enjoyable," he said.

Nick Levendofsky, sophomore in agriculture communications, was a preening tomcat when he was under hypnosis. Levendofsky found the experience to be a positive one.

"I don't remember anything from getting sleepy on stage to being in the back of the room," Levendofsky said after the performance. "I feel really good, like I just woke up from an eight-hour nap. Really relaxed."

Levendofsky said he would do it again because of the things he had heard he had done while hypnotized.

"Evidently, it was a lot of fun," he said.

Participants that were hypnotized to believe they were fishing and had caught Nemo (from the Pixar movie "Finding Nemo"), they were suddenly, unexplicable pregnant, they were aliens from outer space that spoke no English, and they were eating a piece of expanding rock candy that got stuck in their jaws.

Snyder said is affects everyone differently.

"People who remember dreams will probably remember what they did when hypnotized," he said.

Office of Greek Affairs trims list of potential directors to 4 candidates

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After more than a year without a director, the Office of Greek Affairs should have a new replacement sometime next week, said Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

From March 27 through April 1, four candidates for the position toured the campus, visited greek houses and met with leaders from different greek organizations.

The four candidates were selected from a pool of 34 applicants from universities across the country. In February, the search began in earnest when applications were read and reviewed. Then the selection committee narrowed the field down to candidates for phone interviews, after which the final four aspiring directors were chosen.

"It's definitely a two-way process," said Shanda Walker, senior in mass communications and president of Panhellenic Council. "We want to pick the best person, but we want to make sure that they will feel comfortable here."

Even though Bosco will be the one who makes the final decision as to who will be hired, he said that the undergraduate student leadership has been very important to the process.

"Our student leadership, not surprisingly, has taken this process very seriously," Bosco said.

Fast facts
Director of Greek Affairs Candidates

- David Hotz: Assistant director of campus activities and coordinator for Greek Life at New Mexico State University
- David Deggs: Education program consultant with the Division of Family, Career and Technical Education at the Louisiana Department of Education
- Anita Cory: Director of Greek Life at Washington State University
- Scott Jones: assistant director of student life and interim director of Greek Affairs at K-State

The screening committee, in charge of sorting through all the applications, conducting the phone interviews and finally meeting with and interviewing the final four candidates, was led by Walker and Brett Rundle, senior in finance and president of Interfraternity Council.

Now that the interviews are over, Bosco will meet with student leaders, members of both IFC and Panhellenic Council, chapter presidents, alumni volunteers and faculty members. After this, he will take into account all the feedback from these groups, and will make the final decision.

Scott Jones is the current interim director of Greek Affairs. He was appointed by Bosco after coordinating Greek Affairs with Laura Osteen – who was the assistant director of the K-State Student Union at the time – in 2003. Osteen and Jones took over after Angie Goodson, the director for four months in 2003, left citing personal reasons. Before Goodson, Barb Robel served as the director for 25 years.

In 2004, three candidates were interviewed for the director position.

However, once the final candidate was selected, an offer was made by K-State and declined by the candidate.

"These last two years have been a challenge," Rundle said. "We are looking forward to having a full-time person in the office."

The director of Greek Affairs will oversee the greek community and will be the administrative liaison between greek organizations and campus faculty and staff, alumni and the Manhattan community.

The director will also serve as an adviser for IFC and Panhellenic Council.

"It's an extremely important position," Walker said. "They are the ones who will help guide us. We couldn't have the community we do without them."

No matter who is selected for the position, Walker said she is truly optimistic about the work the new director will do.

"I'm really excited to see who it's going to be," Walker said. "I'm excited to see where the greek community is headed."

Outstanding senior award nominations due; 2005 awards given in 4 categories

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nominations for various categories of the 2005 Anderson Awards for outstanding seniors are due by Wednesday.

Andrea Bryant, associate director of the alumni association, said nominations for the awards can be sent by anyone, including advisers, faculty and fellow students.

The awards, currently in their eighth year, are presented by the president of the alumni association during senior send-off on May 5 and are recognition of the major contributions of seniors to the campus while they are here, she said.

The awards are presented to seniors deemed outstanding in four different categories: the Anderson Award for Outstanding Leadership, which is awarded to a senior who has provided extraordinary leadership for an organization, program or the university; The Anderson Award for Outstanding Service, which is awarded to a senior who has given time and energy to community service and/or campus service projects; The Anderson Award for Outstanding Academics, which is awarded to a senior who has excelled in their academic field; and The Anderson Award for Outstanding Inspiration, which is awarded to a senior who has been inspirational to others, Bryant said.

"These awards are highly popular and we receive nominations that are very diverse supporting seniors from different majors," Bryant said. "There are always students or faculty who recognize and appreciate all the hard work these seniors have put in and want to give them a pat on their back for it. These awards are a great way of doing that."

A committee consisting of faculty and students will review the nominations and decide the winners. The students who are chosen will receive plaques with their names and the category for which they receive the award engraved on them, Bryant said.

Jodi Weiberg, director of alumni programs at the alumni association, said the awards recognized four seniors who have done outstanding work for the campus and deserve to be credited for it.

"The awards are a great way for students to be recognized for all their hard work, and the fact that they will receive these awards in front of their peers and the people that nominated them will make it all the more special," Weiberg said.

Snyder sees improvement after 1st week of practice

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four practices into spring football, the K-State Wildcats were not claiming all their struggles and problems from the 2004 season had been solved.

But they did say progress was being made.

After two practices in pads and two without, Coach Bill Snyder said he was pleased with the team's progress.

"I think we're moving in the right direction," Snyder said on Tuesday. "It's a slow process. I've seen improvement. I've seen things that I like and things that I don't dislike."

Last week, in the first press conference of the spring, players attested to a rigorous winter workout schedule of strength and conditioning sessions beginning as early as 5:30 a.m.

Senior right tackle Jeromey Clary said the work ethic displayed during the winter has carried over so far into practice.

"Compared to last year, enthusiasm is totally different," Clary said. "I think we're kind of rejuvenated. We're ready to put 4-7 behind us, and now we're working on next year's goals. It's night and day. We get excited about scrimmages and excited about practicing, and it's a lot different."

In his first spring as a Wildcat, redshirt-freshman quarterback Allan Evridge said he liked the attitude he was seeing from his teammates.

"You always think you can have a little more intensity, but I definitely think we're doing a good job as a whole, and the guys are upbeat and doing well," Evridge said.

Snyder has said nearly every starting spot on the team is up for grabs, and on Tuesday that tune had not changed for the Wildcats.

"Coach came in before our first practice and let everybody know nobody had a position sewed up," senior fullback Victor Mann said.

Although the two-deep depth chart is common fodder for debate among fans as to who will end up where in the fall, Snyder said it is something that is far from stable.

"The depth chart really changes daily," Snyder said. "That just says if you practice well and are better than the guy of ahead of you, you need to be rewarded, so you will. So it changes back-and-forth and day-to-day."

The message of battling hard for a spot is one Mann is trying to spread, as the Wildcats move forward from a disappointing season.

"Competition is the biggest thing that's going to help our team grow," Mann said.

Spring Football

Grading the first week of spring practice

At the start of Tuesday's press conference, Head Coach Bill Snyder was asked to grade his team's performance through the first four practices of the spring.

After going through a somewhat lengthy assessment of his team's strengths and weaknesses, Snyder was asked if his outlook equated to a B minus.

"That's really all you wanted wasn't it?" Snyder asked, filling the room with laughter. "Let's define these questions, if you just want the one-word answer, which I'm really pretty good at."

Snyder's grade so far: C plus.

Defensive back Williams

Snyder indicated that junior defensive back Kyle Williams has been practicing at two different positions this spring.

"He's developed into a pretty good young player," Snyder said. "He plays hard, he practices hard, he's a good athlete, he's knowledgeable to a fair degree considering how limited he has been in our program."

Williams came to K-State as a cornerback out of Navarro (Texas) Junior College, and he continues to work at that spot. However, Williams has also been splitting time at safety.

His efforts this spring have caught the eye of his teammates.

"Kyle Williams is a very hard worker," junior free safety Maurice Mack. "He's determined to make an impact. He's going to help us out a lot."

Gaskins working at linebacker

Sophomore Greg Gaskins, a defensive back from Manhattan High School, has been working out at the strong side linebacker spot this spring, joining the ranks of several Wildcats who have switched positions or are working at multiple spots.

Gaskins' athleticism and knowledge of the defensive schemes made Snyder take notice.

"(Monday) was the first day that he was involved in that position, and I was impressed with his ability to have some understanding about what he was supposed to do, which tells me that as a secondary player, he did a good job of learning the grand scheme of things," Snyder said.

Looking good

Snyder mentioned several players who caught his attention during the first week of practices.

They were defensive tackles Quintin Echols and Jordan Bedore, defensive end Blake Seiler, offensive tackles Jeromey Clary, quarterback Allen Webb, wide receivers Yamon Figurs and Jordy Nelson and tight end Brett Alstatt.

Track & Field | Lancaster earns USTCA weekly honor

The United State Track Coaches Association named K-State junior Kyle Lancaster the Athlete of the Week on Tuesday.

Lancaster

Lancaster produced the second-best high jump in the world last Saturday at the UTEP Springtime Invitational with a height of 7-07. The jump set a new K-State record, which previously was 7-06 1/2, held by 1996 Olympian Ed Broxterman and former NCAA All-American Nathan Leeper.

The honor is the first national weekly honor for K-State this season.

Volleyball | K-State to host spring tournament

The K-State volleyball team will be host to its annual spring invitational this weekend, as teams from Florida, Wichita State and Nebraska-Kearney will travel to Ahearn Field House on Saturday.

K-State will begin play with national power Florida at 9 a.m. in a three-game match, which will be followed by Nebraska-Kearney at 10:30 in two-games. The Wildcats will finish play at noon for a two-game match against Wichita State.

The matches are free and open to the public, and will take place in the upstairs gym at Ahearn Field House.

NFL | Jacksonville signs former Wildcat David Allen

The Jacksonville Jaguars announced the re-signing of second-year running back David Allen.

Allen, a former punt returner and running back at K-State, played in five games for the Jaguars last season after being signed on Dec. 1.

He returned 15 punts for 144 yards and 11 kickoffs for 210 yards. He also grabbed two receptions.

NCAA | Wildcat named most extreme fan

After K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was named the Bayer Advantage Senior CLASS Women's Award winner, another K-Stater picked up an honor from Bayer, as K-State freshman Tyler Mills, 18, of Bonner Springs, Kan., was named the winner of the first Extreme Fan Award.

A pre-journalism major, Mills submitted a photo and essay to the site on why he was an extreme fan. Fans from across the nation then voted between four finalists. Mills was chosen as the winner over students from the University of Vermont, the University of Kansas and the University of Minnesota.

Mills and Wecker, along with men's winner, Wayne Simien of Kansas, will be recognized at the Fourth Annual Tribute Gala April 30 in Kansas City, Mo.

North Carolina hope of a repeat up in the air

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Illinois did not have a chance in the NCAA Tournament game Monday night, as soon as the North Carolina players remembered Sean May was on their team and started passing him the ball in the post again.

May finished with a double-double, scoring 26 points and pulling down 10 rebounds on his way to being named the Most Outstanding Player of the tournament. All this on his 21st birthday in the biggest, most-hyped game of the year.

A game built around the notion of "Can Roy Williams win the big one?" did not disappoint. Williams and the Tar Heels got it done, but not without a scare from the Illini, the No. 1 team in the nation for most of the season.

Trailing by 15 points, the Illini, like they did against Arizona in the regional final, battled back. The only problem this time was they were not playing Arizona, but North Carolina, an all-around team with a post presence.

It was that kind of "never-say-die" attitude that got me thinking about how these two teams will recover from this game. Sure, the Tar Heels cut down the nets, but will the nucleus of the team be cut away in what will be a Carolina blue-laden draft come this June in the annual NBA millionaire sweepstakes?

Speculation about a possible national championship repeat is replaced with the notion of completely rebuilding the team, one year after being at the top of college basketball.

It's the reason it is so hard to get comfortable with college basketball, and another reason to hate the professional game – which will soon begin its developmental league that will be more of an incentive for for players to leave college or not even start.

Looking at the North Carolina roster, the Tar Heels have four solid players who are eligible to return next season, but most likely, none of them will.

Sure, the Tar Heels cut down the nets, but will the nucleus of the team be cut away in what will be a Carolina blue-laden draft come this June?

North Carolina junior Rashad McCants already announced he will be holding a press conference within the next few days.

Junior point guard Raymond Felton played himself into the lottery during his all-around solid performance in the championship game. He showed the ability to knock down the 3-pointer and to lead the fast break and the basketball smarts to play with four fouls for an extended period of time without picking up a fifth.

Then there is freshman Marvin Williams. Even before the tournament started, Williams was touted as one of the top three picks in the draft, not based on what he has done on the court, but his potential. Now that he has a national championship, there is a good chance he will go the way of former Syracuse freshman Carmelo Anthony, and not be back for his sophomore year.

The last piece to a potential Tar Heel rebuilding year lies with May. A match-up problem in college, but just another undersized power forward in the NBA, May's draft status has never been higher. He said he wanted to return for his senior season, but if his two other junior running mates or Williams aren't back, he's going to have to consider jumping ship as well.

It would be nice to be able to savor the championship for more than two days and think about the possibility of a repeat, but players leaving early is a reality, one that all good teams must learn to recover from in order to become great.

Baseball cancelled

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's baseball game against Washburn was cancelled last night, due to heavy rains and lightning in the Manhattan area. As of last night, no makeup game has been scheduled.

The Wildcats will return to action this Saturday when they head to Waco, Texas to resume conference against 15th-ranked Baylor.

First pitch in the three-game series is set for 7 p.m. Friday. Saturday's game is set for 6 p.m., with the series set to conclude on Sunday at 1 p.m.

On Tuesday, Baylor fell to Houston 9-3 in mid-week action.

Baylor starter Andy Pape suffered the loss. He allowed five runs on four hits and three walks with three strikeouts in 2.1 innings.

WBB | Baylor women win 1st-ever national title

INDIANAPOLIS — The Baylor Lady Bears simply wanted to be a shining light for a university that needed something to applaud. One dazzling national championship ought to do.

Sophia Young's 26 points, Emily Niemann's precise 3-point shooting and the energetic play of guards Chameka Scott and Latoya Wyatt carried Baylor to a 84-62 victory over Michigan State on Tuesday night for the school's first NCAA title by a women's team.

Five years after coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson took over a team that went 7-20 and was at the bottom of the Big 12, the Lady Bears now sit at the top of their sport by winning a game between two teams playing in the finals for the first time.

NFL | Chiefs acquire free agent Hall from Titans

KANSAS CITY, Missouri — The Kansas City Chiefs acquired restricted free agent defensive end Carlos Hall from the Tennessee Titans on Tuesday for an undisclosed draft pick in 2005.

Hall, 26, started 31 of 45 games in three seasons with the Titans. Last season, he recorded 41 tackles, 2 1/2 sacks and one fumble recovery.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For some, it's a procrastination tool.

For others, a party hookup.

And for far too many, it's an obsession.

Thefacebook.com, a Web site that college students can use to network at their university and across the country, has started a craze with more than 2 million students from 430 universities as registered users.

"College students return to the site to find information on their peers, to make connections with friends and acquaintances and to communicate with one another," Chris Hughes, co-founder of thefacebook.com said. "It's a reference tool and a means for communication. I think that combination – and the fact that it's fun to use – keeps people coming back."

A staff of eight maintains the site and has recently turned a profit through advertising and a fee charged for campus-wide messages.

In addition to personal profile information and a messaging system, thefacebook allows students to create groups based around any interest. K-State students have created groups ranging from those announcing the weekend's parties, girls named Amy and the "Derek Zoolander Center for Kids Who Can't Read Good (And Would Like To Do Other Things Good Too)".

Ashley Payson, sophomore in mass communications and K-State cheerleader, founded the "I Wish I Were a Little Bit Taller, I Wish I Was a Baller" group, which has 42 members.

"That group was actually started for my friend Joe who cheers with me here at K-State," she said. "He is a little guy so it is just kind of an inside joke. I never knew that anyone else would actually end up joining the group."

Payson said she joined thefacebook to humor a friend, but now she checks the site two or three times a day.

"That is nothing compared to some of my friends," she said. "They log on about 10-15 times a day."

Brian Casad, sophomore in open option, is the Party Room's "prez fo sho" and founder. The group, which includes a message board of parties for the week, now has 1,683 members.

"I was just sitting around one day and the idea popped in my head to start a group like that," Casad said. "I figured since there were so many Kansas State students on thefacebook, that having a party room would benefit the party scene here and people would become more sociable and parties would be a lot bigger."

An even bigger group at K-State isn't for people with common interests but only for not being named Todd Zeller. Alex Zanatta, freshman in political science, created the group, which now has 944 members.

Zanatta said he got the idea for the group after a guy on his floor in Marlatt Hall refused to join thefacebook.

"We were bored one night and we thought we'd make a couple jokes out of people's names, then it just kept going from there," Zanatta said.

Zeller, sophomore in open option, eventually gave in and joined.

"I actually joined thefacebook because of the group. I had no involvement in its creation and was unaware of its existence for several days. I found out about it after several people had come up to me and said, 'I'm not Todd Zeller!'" he said. "I asked one of them what he was talking about and he told me about thefacebook. I signed up and soon found out that some of the guys across the hall from me were responsible."

The group description encourages thefacebook users to visit Zeller's dorm room or call him.

"I did actually get phone calls from people in the group as well as visitors to my dorm room. Some of my friends wanted to make 'I'm Not Todd Zeller' t-shirts but, as far as I know, nothing has come of it," he said.

"Every once in a while I will visit the group page just to get a laugh. I don't know why John, Alex and the others picked me for their group, but it has made my first year at KSU interesting, to say the least."

John Duggan, freshman in architecture, and another founder of the Zeller group said the popularity of thefacebook and its groups is amazing.

"I am really just fascinated at the power of thefacebook," he said.

Embarrassing situations can teach life-long lessons

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: What is the most embarrassing thing that has happened to you in college?

A: It is safe for me to say that I have found myself in more embarrassing situations over the course of my college career than I could even count.

I must also say that I have put myself in many of these embarrassing situations simply to make other people laugh.

If you saw the Daisy Dukes that I was wearing at the bars on Friday night, you know what I'm talking about. If not, you are part of the majority of my audience I have just alienated and who have probably flipped back to the crossword puzzle by now.

I will exclude those types of situations here because most people don't do ridiculous things like I do just to entertain the people around them.

Having said that, the most recent embarrassing thing that I can remember happening without my consent was about a year ago. I was riding my bike to an evening class on campus. I was heading for the bike racks that are just south of Calvin Hall. If you are familiar with that part of campus, you know that the bike racks are on a downward slope and there is an abnormally large curb you must jump to get to them.

I realized that I was riding a little too fast. I had all of my fingers on my brakes, leaving only my thumbs on the handle bars. For some reason I didn't pull my bike up high enough to clear the curb. When my front tire hit the top of the curb, I jerked forward and my hands instinctively snapped shut on the handlebars.

In doing so I inadvertently squeezed the brakes much harder than I should have. My bike stopped instantly. I kept going. The first contact was my pelvis slamming into my handle bars. The second contact was my body flipping over my bike and landing face up on the cement.

After I was able to shake the stars out of my head I looked up to see who had seen me. There were a few people around, but luckily it was 5:30 p.m. and not earlier in the day when campus would have been much more crowded. One guy that I noticed was trying not to laugh until he saw me smile and give him the thumbs up that I was OK. He and everyone else around burst into laughter.

"One guy that I noticed was trying not to laugh until he saw me smile and give him the thumbs up that I was OK. He and everyone else around burst into laughter."

How could anyone help but laugh at such a ridiculous thing for an adult to do? I hadn't had an accident like that since I was in seventh grade.

I pulled myself off the ground and tried to regain my composure. When I went to lock my bike up, I realized that I had bent the right side of my handle bars to a 45 degree angle. This made me look like even more of an idiot when I had to ride it home from class later. As I walked toward the building, the adrenaline rush started to wear off and I noticed a slight cold draft.

I looked down to see that my jeans were torn from my belt line just next to my zipper all the way down to my knee. This was the single worst day for me to have been doing laundry as I was currently going "commando."

Yes, that's right. I was standing on campus with my junk hanging in the wind. Side note: I also discovered that day that it is never a good idea to go without underwear while riding a bicycle.

I spent the next five minutes standing in the bushes trying to call my roommate to come pick me up, hoping that no one would notice me. I got home safely and even made it back to class in time to take a quiz.

The moral of this story is – don't be an idiot. But if you are going to be an idiot, wear a good pair of underwear. Write that down.

CELEB NEWS

Peter Jennings announce cancer diagnosis

Peter Jennings revealed Tuesday that he is suffering from lung cancer and plans to continue on "World News Tonight" as much as possible after beginning chemotherapy next week. Jennings, ABC's chief anchorman since 1983, was replaced by Elizabeth Vargas on Tuesday but taped a message telling viewers about his diagnosis.

Jennings

"I will continue to do the broadcast," he said. "On good days, my voice will not always be like this. Certainly, it's been a long time. And I hope it goes without saying that a journalist who doesn't value - deeply -the audience's loyalty should be in another line of work."

A former smoker who quit 20 years ago, Jennings resumed smoking briefly after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. The 66-year-old anchor was too ill to work Saturday during the network's special report on Pope John Paul II's death. He hasn't been feeling well the past few months, and didn't travel under doctor's orders after December's tsunami because of what was described then as an upper respiratory infection. He did go to Iraq in January for the elections.

Jennings said he was surprised at how fast the news traveled and at the kindness he had received from so many people.

Maid testified Jackson showered with boy

Jackson

Jackson is on trial on charges of groping a 13-year-old boy in 2003 at his Neverland ranch. The former maid testified as part of a prosecution effort to show that the pop star had a pattern of molesting or otherwise behaving inappropriately with other boys.

The former maid's own son received a $2.4 million settlement from Jackson in 1994 after claiming the pop star groped him. Before the woman took the stand, defense attorney Thomas Mesereau Jr. raised the issue of whether she also had a financial stake in his story by showing she had been paid $20,000 to appear on the TV show "Hard Copy."

The woman, who was Jackson's personal maid for about five years, told of seeing Jackson in the shower with a boy about 8 years old who frequently stayed at Neverland and slept in the singer's bed.

Pastore told to stay away from girlfriend

Vincent Pastore, the actor who played a gangster on the HBO hit series "The Sopranos," was ordered by a judge Tuesday to stay away from the girlfriend he was accused of beating last weekend.

Pastore

Judge Karen Lupuloff told Pastore, 58, that he was to refrain from writing, e-mailing, calling or trying to see Lisa Regina, 44, the woman he allegedly assaulted in his car Saturday.

The actor's lawyer, Dominic Barbara, said his client was pleading not guilty to the four misdemeanors with which he is charged — two counts of assault, one of attempted assault and harassment.

The judge issued the order after prosecutor James Zaleta said Pastore had punched Regina in the back of the head, grabbed her hair, and forced her head down so that she struck her eye on the gear shift.

Zaleta said Pastore grabbed the woman tightly by the arm and jerked her out of the car, causing her to hit her head on the door frame. He said she fell out of the car backward into the street and hurt her lower back. Pastore allegedly drove away.

The prosecutor said Regina was treated at a hospital for cuts and bruises. He did not say why the alleged assault occurred, but published reports said the two argued because Regina was late for a trip they were to take.

The defense lawyer refused to comment as he left court, but on Monday he issued a statement saying, "Mr. Pastore regrets what happened the other night. He and Ms. Regina were in love for a long time and he will have nothing else to say about this. We will not be goaded into a public debate."

Rare books donated to Hale

Collector's fascination helps history

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When 9-year-old Scott Price moved to Alabama with his family in 1960, he noticed that everything was black and white.

"There were different drinking fountains for blacks and whites," Price said. "Blacks were not served in restaurants, and they would sit in the balconies of the theaters."

In 1961, the United States honored the centennial anniversary of the Civil War by issuing a reprint of a special collection of rare anti-slavery books.

"I would cut grass and wash cars and things like that until I could get those books," Price said. "I knew if I had those books, I would have knowledge. I was wealthy in a sort of way."

After acquiring this initial collection, Price became completely engrossed in the Civil War, the anti-slavery movement and the South.

Over time, Price's collection grew to include compact discs, microfilm, cassettes, and recordings. Searching through bargain bins, bookstores and everywhere in between, this collector can find a rare book in the most unlikely place.

"I always look for these dinky, old, rundown bookstores," Price said. "There's some compulsive behavior behind that I don't even want to know about."

Though he amassed an extensive collection, it was not until Price suffered a heart attack in 1997 that he realized he had to share his wealth of knowledge with others.

"It was a slap in the face, as far as mortality went," Price said. "I could see, in my worst nightmares - I could see my books in boxes being sold at a garage sale for a dollar a box."

Price began to donate books to a variety of schools, libraries and organizations across the state, including rural communities. His desire to share the history of the Civil War, the anti-slavery movement and the part Kansas played in both, has resulted in more than 4,300 donated books around the state.

Of the materials donated, more than 900 rare books have found a home in Hale Library's special collections and archives section.

"I felt like those books should stay here in Kansas and should be the cornerstone of Hale Library," Price said. "I would love to see it draw scholars to read about Kansas' unique gift."

Roger Adams, rare-books librarian in the Special Collections Department at Hale Library, said Price's donation stems from his dedication to the history of the Civil War and the effect it had on a divided America.

"What he collects is so personal to him," Adams said. "He has experienced it firsthand, and for him, it's personal."

Price's donated research collection in Hale includes information on the anti-slavery and Civil Rights movements and black literature.

"His collection really supplements Kansas history," Adams said. "Donations like this tend to attract other collections - I can see it as a seed that's going to grow."

Troops request more humvees

By Robert Burns
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For the fifth time in the past year, U.S. commanders running the war in Iraq have told the Army to send more armored Humvee utility vehicles to protect U.S. troops.

Just as the Army was reaching its target of 8,279 factory-built armored Humvees for delivery to Iraq, last month U.S. Central Command raised the bar again, to 10,079, Army officials disclosed Tuesday.

The Army has been accused by many in Congress of lagging behind in providing armor protection for troops, hundreds of whom have been killed or wounded in ambushes and roadside bombs in Iraq. The Army said it has pressed the vehicle manufacturer for as many as possible, and it has been chasing a moving target set initially at 1,407 by commanders in Iraq in August 2003.

When the war began in March 2003, few might have imagined that the all-purpose Humvee, the modern version of the unarmored Jeep, would need to be reinforced in large numbers. But soon they became a prime target of the insurgents' roadside bombs and rocket-propelled grenades.

By April 2004 the requirement for factory-built armored Humvees had reached 4,454, and commanders in Iraq subsequently raised it to 6,223 in June, 8,105 in August and then to 8,279 in December.

Those are in addition to thousands of regular Humvees to which makeshift armor and ballistic glass have been added to reinforce their doors and windows against blasts from roadside bombs and land mines.

Armor also has been added to supply trucks and older troop carriers.

The new armored Humvee target of 10,079 is not expected to be achieved before July, according to Army projections based on the factory's recently increased production rate of 550 vehicles per month. It will take a few weeks beyond July to ship the extras to Iraq.

The increase of 1,800 Humvees includes about 200 for U.S. troops in Afghanistan, where roadside bombs also are a serious threat, according to a defense official who would discuss details only on condition of anonymity. Some of the Humvees for Iraq are to replace those destroyed in battle, the official said.

For one thing, it has added to the wear-and-tear on the heavier vehicles and increased fuel consumption, thereby requiring even more supply convoys that are a common target of insurgents.

"No amount of effort in armoring will make our soldiers completely invulnerable, but we owe it to them to provide the best possible protection," marriage since there is a statute prohibiting gay marriage in Kansas.

"It's unfortunate that the gay community was used to deny heterosexual couples' rights," he said.

Voter Turnout
Riley County City/School elections
- Tuesday 11,778
- Spring 2003 6,270

Jason Dockins, activism chair for QSA, said he is disappointed Kansas voters are willing to embed discrimination, bigotry and hate into the Kansas Constitution.

"I just hope that people realized this is going to affect more unmarried heterosexual couples than gay couples," Dockins, freshman in political science, said.

Lona Mae Ukena, Manhattan resident, holds an "I voted" sticker for voters to pick up after voting Tuesday afternoon.

But Paul Barkey, co-pastor at Ashland Community Church, said the amendment will be good for the state, despite opposition in some areas, including Manhattan.

"The opposition here in Riley County certainly ran a good campaign to have that close of a race," Barkey said.

"I'm very thankful for it passing," he said.

knocking on doors," he said.

Morris-Hardeman said support was key to her campaign.

"I just had a great base of supporters who really worked very hard," she said.

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board election was still close, but not as close as city commission election.

Beth Tatarko won the most votes with 6,648. Walt Pesaresi finished second with 4,654 votes. Peter Paukstelis took the last seat with 4,190.

Not taking a seat was Keith Miller, who finished with 3,869 votes, and Dan Morin who received 3,319 votes.

Tatarko said she is excited voters chose her.

"They want people who are going to work towards solutions," she said.

"I also think that voters wanted stability, and they knew that I wanted to make that a priority."

Riley County Results
USD 383 School Board
- Beth Tatarko 6,648— 29.31 percent
- Walt Pesaresi 4,654— 20.52 percent
- Peter Paukstelis 4,190— 18.47 percent
- Keith B. Miller 3,869— 17.06 percent
- Dan Morin 3,319— 14.63 percent

Riley County Results
City Commission
- Tom Phillips 4,040— 18.81 percent
- Mark J. Hatesohl 3,953— 18.41 percent
- Jayme Morris-Hardeman 3,483— 16.22 percent
- James E. Sherow 3,478— 16.2 percent
- Sam Robinson 3,469— 16.16 percent
- Brad McCune 3,050— 14.2 percent

Paukstelis said he is glad he will be able to have his say on school board.

"I'm looking forward to working hard on school district issues over the next four years," he said. "I'm very pleased with the results."

Bells to join smoke to announce election of new pope by cardinals

By Victor L. Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY – For centuries, white smoke billowing from the chimney of the Sistine Chapel has been the signal to the world that the cardinals have chosen a new pope. This time – lest anyone be confused over the whether the smoke is really white – bells will ring too.

The smoke comes from the burning of the secret paper ballots, and chemicals are added to heighten the color. Black smoke means no decision has been made after a papal ballot.

The bells are an innovation to honor the late John Paul II's wishes, the Vatican said Tuesday.

"This time we plan to ring the bells to make the election of the pope clearer," Archbishop Piero Marini said, recalling wrong calls in past elections. "This way even journalists will know," an acknowledgment of the Vatican's interest in using the media to get its message across to a worldwide audience.

Before he died Saturday at age 84, John Paul also made his wish known "to be buried in the ground" and not placed in an above-ground tomb, Marini said. He will buried in the tomb left vacant after the remains of Pope John XXIII were exhumed from the cramped grotto under St. Peter's Basilica in 2001 and moved to the main floor following his beatification.

John Paul will be laid to rest with a white silk veil on his face, a rosary in his hands and his body clad in liturgical vestments and the white miter. Following the centuries-old custom for burying popes, his body will be placed inside three coffins – wood, zinc and wood – a design meant to slow decomposition, the Vatican confirmed.

"This time we plan to ring the bells to make the election of the pope clearer."
Piero Marini
ARCHBISHOP

A small bag of commemorative medals issued over the course of his 26-year pontificate, as well as a sealed document featuring a brief description in Latin of John Paul's life, will be buried with him near the tomb that is traditionally believed to be that of the first pope, St. Peter.

John Paul's personal physician told La Repubblica newspaper that the Polish-born pope "passed away slowly, with pain and suffering which he endured with great human dignity."

"The Holy Father could not utter a single word before passing away," said Dr. Renato Buzzonetti. "Just as happened in the last days he could not speak, he was forced to silence."

Marini brushed off rumors that Polish soil would be placed in the coffin, as many Poles had hoped.

"Everybody has wishes. It is impossible to fulfill them all," he said.

At least 1 million people have flocked to St. Peter's Square.

An estimated 600,000 mourners streamed past John Paul's crimson-robed body in the basilica during the first 24 hours of viewing, city authorities said. Millions are expected in Rome for Friday's 10 a.m. funeral (4 a.m. EDT), including an estimated 2 million Poles hoping to pay last respects to their native son.

Italy called extra police to Rome and planned to seal off much of the Eternal City to protect a VIP contingent that will include President Bush, former presidents Bush and Clinton as well as the presidents of Syria and Iran.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said the cardinals had yet to decide on a date for their conclave to choose a new pope. According to church law, it must start 15 to 20 days after a pope dies.

The next pope is likely to follow John Paul's conservative bent closely – the late pontiff appointed all but three of the 117 cardinals who can vote in a conclave.

Brazilian Cardinal Geraldo Majella Agnelo told Italian state radio Tuesday that he thought a new pope would be chosen quickly.

"I don't think it will be a long conclave," he said, adding that cardinals have had time to reflect beforehand and already should have "clear ideas" when they begin the balloting.to the cardinals.

48th Fort Riley soldier dies Sunday in Iraq

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 48th Fort Riley soldier to be killed in Iraq was reported Sunday after falling into a canal during an attack.

Cpl. William D. Richardson, 23, was killed in Baghdad and had been deployed in Iraq since January, according to a news release from Fort Riley Public Affairs office. Richardson was an infantryman in Company A, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division and was enlisted in February 2002.

The incident is still under investigation.

Rain brings relief; burn ban lifted

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last night's rain gave the local fire departments an opportunity to regroup and reload after dealing with a record breaking weekend of out-of-control burns.

On Sunday afternoon, a burn ban had been implemented in many areas, but with the recent rainfall it has since been lifted.

John Boyd, Pottawatomie County emergency management director, said that this is the time of year that many property owners look to burn vegetation for growth purposes.

"I anticipate many landowners will look to continue to burn, so hopefully it will be with a more cautious attitude after the weekend we just had," he said.

Blue Township Fire Chief Eric Ward said that by last Sunday afternoon all equipment available to his department was in use. Ward said that the number of fires on Sunday used all volunteers and that the fires had spread extremely quickly in some areas.

"The conditions of this past weekend made it very easy for the situation to get out of hand," he said.

Ward said that when warm temperatures combine with low humidity and fast winds, dangerous results can develop.

"In those kinds of conditions, after the slightest spark, the fire can just outrun you, creating hostile situations," he said.

Of the 16,000 acres of land that was hit by fire on the year, 13,000 were in Pottawatomie and Riley County over the weekend.

Riley County Fire Chief Pat Collins reiterated the amount of out of control fires that took place over this past weekend.

"We dealt with 18 calls up to this past Monday for numerous fires, and the exact total on damage estimates is still not completely known. Ten of 16

Keeping her faith in war-torn Africa

Student discovers true 'faith in action'

By Lacey D. Mackey

A rebel soldier barked at the young girl as he waved a machine gun in the air. Looking quickly to her father in the back of the jeep, the girl was hesitant to move – to breathe – to think. Walking around the front of the vehicle, she looked out on open warfare playing out before her eyes. The 12-year-old would later say it would be the farthest distance she would ever have to walk.

Melissa Dorsch's parents began working with Campus Crusade for Christ Ministries about 27 years ago. When she was 2, Dorsch's parents decided to go overseas to the Central African Republic to help share their faith with students and people in Africa.

But they had just one problem – they didn't speak the native French.

So, the family went to France for nine months to immerse themselves in the language before traveling to the CAR.

After living in France, the family went to Africa to begin working. But it was hard to move to a place filled with pain and need.

"No one was in Africa – no one went out of fear," Dorsch said.

This did not dissuade the family. Dorsch said her family felt a deep compassion for the people in Africa who would never have the chance to hear about Jesus and what he had done.

"My parents knew that because they had experienced a life change through their relationship with Jesus Christ, they wanted to offer people that might not have a chance to know," Dorsch said.

Dorsch and her family moved to Banqui, the

K-State plans events to recruit new students

Potential students encouraged to explore campus on visits

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of events aimed at recruiting new students to K-State are scheduled for the fall 2005 semester.

The university sponsors Senior Days, Junior Days, Multicultural Days, ACT Workshops, Scholarship Days, events targeted at specific majors and numerous other activities to get prospective students interested in attending K-State.

"There's probably 100 targeted events both on and off campus in the months of January, February and March, leading up to the All-University Open House, which is April 9," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

Campus visits are a common way to show prospective students what life at K-State is like. Admissions Representatives Mandi McKinley and Emily Ripple said they recommend to anyone thinking of attending K-State to visit the campus.

"People can come on campus and visit anytime," Ripple said.

In addition to pre-scheduled events like Senior Days, where many prospective students visit K-State on the same day and follow a group schedule, personal visits can be made any time.

On these personal visits, the admission representatives plan a personal schedule for the visitors, where they have the opportunity to meet with academic advisers in different programs, admissions representatives and financial advisers.

They can also meet with Greek Affairs if they're interested in joining a greek house, the band director if they want to join a band, or a representative from any other program they may be interested in joining.

"One of our most important strategies is to encourage students and their families to visit K-State and Manhattan," Bosco said. "There's no question the campus visit is a critical part of our success."

Another event held for prospective high school seniors are pizza parties. At K-State enrollment expected to decline

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite reaching an all-time high enrollment of 23,151 students last fall, K-State expects to see declining numbers in the future.

"High school enrollments have peaked and are going down in Kansas," Pat Bosco, Dean of Student Life, said.

He said the university has reached its high point and that although K-State is the most attended university by Kansas high school students and by Kansas community college transfer students, the numbers will go down because there aren't enough students available to keep the numbers up.

Kathy Toelkes, director of communications with the Kansas Department of Education, said from the 2000-2001 school year to the 2004-2005 school year, there has been a decrease of less than 1 percent in high school enrollment throughout the state of Kansas.

"We've seen a gradual and steady decline in those numbers," Toelkes said.

SCHOOL BOARD

Funds to be used on maintenance

School board agrees to partnership with university

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The day after Manhattan-Ogden USD 383's sales tax was passed in the April 5 election, the school board had a lot to discuss.

School board Vice President Dave Colburn said he thanked the community, the staff and fellow board members for all the work that was done to get the sales tax passed.

"I'm humbled and gratified that 5,247 people believed in us and voted yes to the sales tax," he said. "I'm also aware that 3,363 said no, and we have to prove to them that we are worthy."

School board member Nancy Knopp said she would like to also thank the City Commission for their support on the issue.

"It was because of a 4-1 vote by them that allowed the sales tax to be put on the ballot," she said.

The school board is going to have to work much harder now that they have the money and can't just begin to cut things from the budget that would have had to otherwise, Colburn said.

School board member Randy Martin said he hoped they would continue to have the community's involvement with all of their work.

"I'm more scared today than celebratory because now we have to make the right decisions," he said.

Some of the decisions they will have to make for the money were brought up by John Maberry, director of maintenance and transportation.

Among these problems are a leaking roof at the Ogden Elementary School building and the need for on-demand water heaters.

The roof at Ogden Elementary was installed in 1984 and, after 22 years, it's beginning to have problems, Maberry said.

"It's starting to leak primarily in the principal's office," he said.

The school board also voted 7-0 to allow a partnership between the STAR lab of K-State, USD 383 and USD 383 Foundation to continue their studies with driving simulation.

Renee Slick, assistant professor in psychology and the director of the STAR, or simulation, training, assessment and research lab at K-State told the school board some of the positive effects that this program has on teens.

The program can allow teens to drive without distractions and then with distractions of things such as cell phones, opening pop bottles or a discussion with the program, she said.

It takes all the data from both drives and lets the teens see how poorly they drive with the distraction.

There are a large number of teen deaths associated with car accidents, Colburn said.

"This, to me, is very important. This is the kind of stuff we all need to be supporting," he said.

Blood drive on track to goal

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thirty minutes of a person's time can save three lives. That's how quick and easy it is to donate blood.

The Central Plains Regional Red Cross is collecting blood from K-State students, faculty and members of the Manhattan community. The blood drive will run through Friday.

Stations have been set up for donations in the K-State Student Union as well as Peters Recreational Center. Turnout for the drive has been good, at least at the Union.

Zona Tull, Red Cross employee, said there has been a steady stream of people going to the Union to donate blood.

"We have a goal of 125 everyday this week," Tull said, "which we've pretty much been making it so far."

Tull said she estimated that there have been between 120-130 people donating each day. This is good, Tull said, because each donation helps out.

"We only have five percent of the population that donates blood, so every person really makes a big difference," Tull said.

For many students, the idea of helping others is what makes donating blood appealing.

Susan Blake, junior in English, said this was why she decided to give blood as she was walking through the Union.

"It's just such an easy way to help people," Blake said.

Blake said giving blood isn't bad, as long as she doesn't watch the needle go into her arm.

For Eric Burton, freshman in mechanical engineering, it's the thought of someday needing blood himself that drives him to donate.

"Someday I might need it, so hopefully by giving now, there'll be some life for me later," Burton said.

For some students, giving up a half hour or more of their time to fill out a questionnaire and get pricked with a needle is hard to do. But Kyla Scott said people should think of the bigger picture if they are hesitant to donate.

Not everyone who goes to donate blood is successful. Some students who try to give blood are told they are not eligible to donate.

"We've had a few each day," Tull said. "But considering we have 120-130 people that give a whole unit of blood, 10-15 that are turned away is not bad."

For example, if a person has recently returned from a country that has certain risks of illness, like malaria, then they would be deferred from donating blood, Tull said.

People on certain types of medications might also be turned away. Taking experimental drugs, where the effect on the blood isn't known yet, or any drugs that could be hazardous to the perceiving receiving the blood can cause someone to be ineligible for donation.

The Red Cross also has strict regulations on how healthy potential donors are before they give blood. Donors must weigh at least 110 pounds, have normal temperatures, pulses, blood pressure and iron levels.

"We have to make sure it's safe for both the donor and the recipient," Tull said.

Fall semester to start on a Monday

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first day of fall classes will now begin on Monday, as a result of new policy making changes regarding the academic calendar.

Faculty Senate will vote on 14 operating guidelines Tuesday. The guidelines will be followed to develop future academic calendars.

Part of the guidelines is establishing Monday as the first day of class permanently.

Jackie Spears, faculty senate president, said these guidelines will help both the students and faculty.

"Every year new members ask questions about why we did what we did," she said. "These guidelines would help the committee work more efficiently."

Faculty Senate is proposing that fall semester begins in August on a Monday, 10 days following the last class day of the summer semester.

Spears said concerns about making the gap longer could greatly benefit the faculty.

Some faculty members are unable to go to sites for research because there is not enough time between the summer and fall semesters, Spears said. The guidelines will make the fall semester 75 days, and the spring semester 76 days, as it is now.

Another item is the issue of Thanksgiving break. A proposed guideline will allow students to be dismissed on Tuesday to allow for travel time.

Erik Ankrom, academic calendar committee student representative, said these guidelines are important in order to provide some consistency.

"Knowing for certain when school starts and when we're going to have breaks can help for better planning," he said.

Some benefits for students are to be gained from the guidelines, Spears said.

"Some students want to work for as long as they can before they return to school," she said.

These guidelines can ensure that students know how long they can work or intern before school starts.

To gain ideas for the calendar, the academic calendar committee looked at other universities.

"We didn't follow theirs, but we modified our university's calendar," Ankrom said.

TO THE POINT

Fall semester should begin in middle of week

There are great advantages to starting school in the middle of the week.

Faculty Senate should leave the university calendar as it is and allow classes to begin on a Wednesday each semester. In Fall 2005, K-State's classes will begin on a Monday.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The proposal to set a Monday start-date as a guideline goes to vote April 12.

One primary advantage of starting in the middle of the week is that students can introduce themselves to new schedules, instructors and expectations, then have the weekend to prepare for a heavier workload.

Proponents of the plan in Faculty Senate said postponing the start date would allow faculty more time to travel and perform research between the summer and fall semesters. Students, too, could benefit from this longer break by spending extra time at home or staying a little longer at their jobs.

Faculty Senate said last year that students should be expected to come to the first days of class during the initial half-week, or the students could face being dropped from the class.

While longer breaks before the fall semester and during the Thanksgiving holiday would be enjoyable for faculty and students, extra vacation simply is not worth the sacrifice.

The university should keep the best interest of the students in mind when planning the new calendar.

March Madness, phase two

Columnists serves as graduate assistant for forensics tournament

AARON DUNCAN

The first Monday of every April, two collegiate national titles are contested. Most people are aware that March Madness ended on April 4 with the crowning of the nation's top college basketball team.

However, many do not know that on Monday, 13 other national championships were up for grabs. Each year the American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament (AFA-NIET) crowns the top individual and team speakers in the nation, the same day March Madness draws to a close.

This year Kansas State played host to the AFA-NIET, and as a graduate assistant coach for the K-State team, I had the privilege of being a part of it. What follows is an insider account of the tournament and K-State's performance.

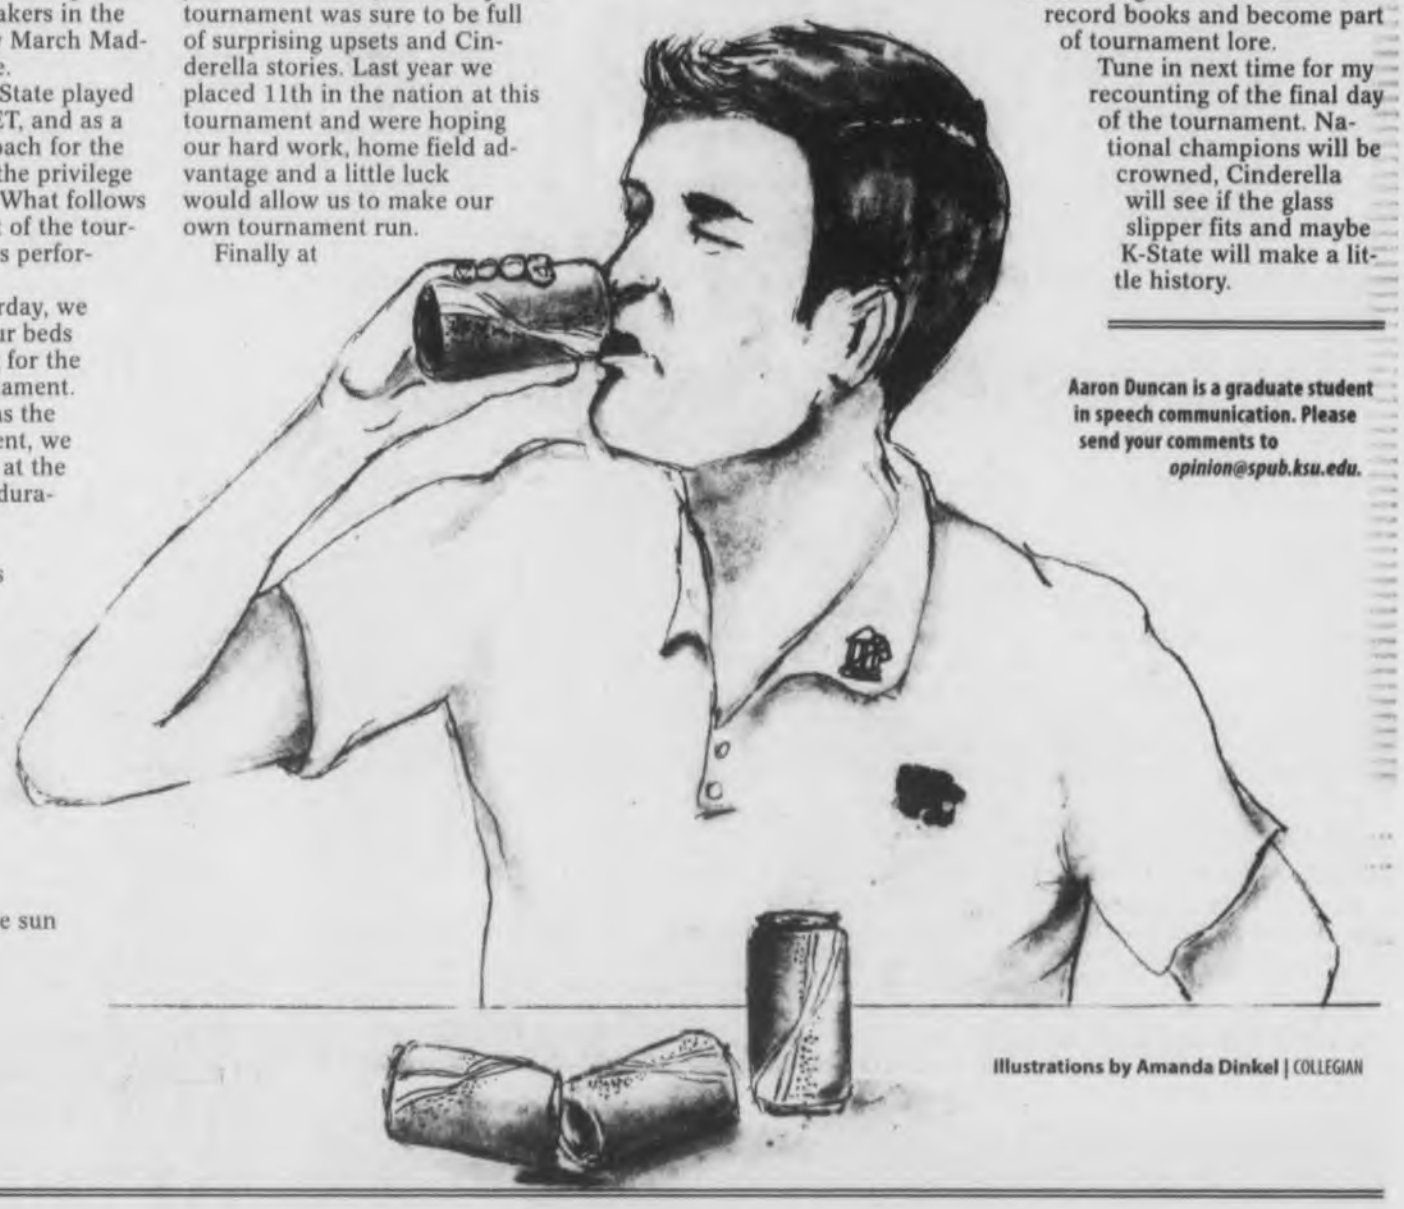
At 5:30 a.m. Saturday, we drearily rose from our beds and began preparing for the first day of the tournament. Although K-State was the host of the tournament, we were all sequestered at the Holiday Inn for the duration.

By 6:30 a.m., we loaded into two vans and made the arduous five-minute drive to campus – it would have been three minutes, but we hit a red light. It was a picturesque Kansas morning, and the sun was just beginning to peek through the clouds. We hoped the sun and good fortune would continue to smile upon us.

While the students readied themselves for a long day of performing, I shotgunned Diet Cokes in an attempt to wake myself up before morning rounds.

Students spend the entire year going to tournaments in hopes of qualifying for the AFA-NIET. Unlike the NCAA, there is no BCS or selection committee that decides who makes it into this national tournament. Students earn their way in by placing highly at tournaments throughout the year.

However, like March Madness, the whole season comes down to just a few rounds, and this year's tournament was sure to be full of surprising upsets and Cinderella stories. Last year we placed 11th in the nation at this tournament and were hoping our hard work, home field advantage and a little luck would allow us to make our own tournament run.

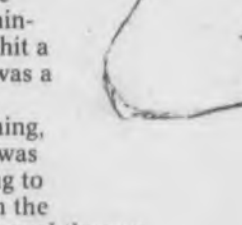


Finally at 7:30 p.m., the first day of competition drew to a close. Six rounds of grueling competition against the top speakers in the nation took their toll, and everyone looked a bit weary. We headed to the hotel for pizza and to regroup. With stomachs full, we went to the Alumni center for a reunion with former coaches and members of the team.

President Wefald graciously agreed to foot the bill, and deciding that his money should not be wasted, I headed straight to the dessert table. After an hour of tearful reunions, introductions to new friends and recounting of countless stories, we returned to the hotel to rest for the next day.

Waking wearily at 6 a.m., I cursed the inventors of daylight savings time for stealing an hour of our precious sleep. The students were now battle tested and were ready for another day of fierce competition. The tournament was in full swing and things were going well.

After all the postings for quarterfinals were up, we had four competitors in seven events still in the mix. Sophomore Julia Stoskopf, and seniors Neal Stewart, Nick Barton and Hillary Hoover were all vying for a chance to get their names in the record books and become part of tournament lore.



Tune in next time for my recounting of the final day of the tournament. National champions will be crowned, Cinderella will see if the glass slipper fits and maybe K-State will make a little history.

Right to protect oneself against zombies

GRANT REICHERT

Unbeknownst to most constitutional scholars, the Second Amendment has Biblical origins. Remember when Noah bagged two of every animal to stock the minibar on his Carnival Cruise?

Saints Smith and Wesson had a hand in that one. There was also David's sniping of Goliath, which showed it was indeed possible for the meek to inherit the earth – with extreme prejudice.

And remember when St. Peter gunned down Pontius Pilate, gangsta-style? (Source: Passion of the Christ, DVD extra: "The Fourth Denial of Peter: First Blood").

"The Rock" went to totally Old Testament.

The second amendment is a God-given right. And thank God for that, because Manhattan is going to put chloramines in our water.

That's right, chloramines. Chlora- as in chlorine, and -mines as in, uh, chloramines.

Now, I'm not being tin-foil hat here, but did you know that some of the very same vowels in "chloramines" also appear in "government sponsored zombie-virus?" Which can mean only mean one thing: after the transition is made to chloramines it will only be safe to drink either your own urine or Natural Light unless you want to turn into the undead.

Fellow right-wing wackos and assorted nutjobs: this is our time to shine. I've been stockpiling guns for just such an occasion.

Of course, as a responsible columnist, I should make a side note that one must be careful with guns. Be sure to lock up guns or put them on high shelves or else children might choke on them. Or, even worse, attempt a violent coup d'etat of the house. You don't want to end up with a funnel full of mashed peas shoved down your throat as you're forced to listen to endlessly looped Raffi tapes, do you?

Our founding fathers, realizing that guns themselves without operators are useless against zombie hordes, also included in the second amendment a "well regulated militia." Which is great news; not only can we have guns but we can start our own militias (militii?)!

Mine's going to be called the Prancing Ponies, and we're going to have matching screen print t-shirts and a secret-handshake and a secret hideout and icky girls won't be allowed! Hot ones, however, will.

Like any aspiring militia leader, I took the next logical step: I joined thefacebook.com. Unlike most people who join it in order to see hundreds of totally nude faces or because actual stalking requires such a time investment, I wasn't joining for weird reasons, but rather to form a small army to protect Manhattan from waves of chloramine-generated Zombies.

In thefacebook, I quickly networked my twin interests in Aaliyah and herpes into a network of friends, who made an electronic pledge of undying loyalty. No one would flippantly commit to something like "friendship," so I can only assume these people have promised to join me in the inevitable struggle to figure out whose blood we drink first when we get tired of drinking urine but before we resort to the Natty Light.

To get things off the ground, I met with some fellow facebookers to discuss Zombie contingency plans, but we didn't get much done. Because of thefacebook.

My militia members and I just stared blankly ahead and clicked through page after page of pictures, every once in awhile moaning "she's hot" or the like. Hours stretched on hours, but no one moved a muscle, just sat and stared and moaned lifelessly – much like a Cure concert, I would imagine.

Then, abruptly, someone knocked on the door and interrupted our facebooking.

So we shambled over and ate his brains.

Notice how it's hailing and raining? I think that's God throwing things at us for trying to make discriminatory laws. Cool, huh?

Hey Collegian: more respect for the Pope's death, OK?

Kansas: as bigoted as you think.

If Kansas wants to discriminate against me, that's fine. I'll just take my gay tax dollars and go elsewhere.

I swear, rumors spread in a fraternity like they do in a third grade girl scout troop.

My roommate has dandruff the size of mice.

It's interesting that the student senate chair was quoted promoting diversity, when her employees were all white and almost entirely greek. Well, actions speak louder than words.

Kansas State University is an agricultural and engineering school, not a liberal arts and man-scaping school.

Did you know the word "pooper-scooper" is in the dictionary? I always thought that was self-explanatory.

Just so you know, they're not the only gay couple in Aggieville.

I don't think it's fair that just because one family owns all the gas stations in Manhattan that they can keep raising the prices on us and we can't do anything about it.

Thank God I'm from out of state, because I hate being associated with all of you narrow-minded people.

So gay marriage isn't legal but gay bashing is. Which one do you think God is going to punish first?

STUDENT SENATE

Office roles to be specified

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate is considering specifying the roles of senate secretary and parliamentarian tonight.

Both positions' roles are not adequately outlined in Student Governing Association By-Laws.

Sarah Laib, senate operations committee chair, said the proposed changes will help senate run more smoothly.

"It just helps to get senate more organized," Laib said.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said there has been some confusion that these changes could help.

If you go
What: Student Senate meeting
When: 7 tonight
Where: Big 12 Room, Union

For instance, senate made changes to the SGA Constitution last year. The changes moved the turnover date for newly elected students from three to five week. College councils did not ratify these changes until this semester after students had already been elected to office.

If the changes are passed, it will be the secretary's duty to present all constitutional changes to the councils for ratification.

Urkevich said the changes are reasonable.

"They were never explicit duties," she said. "It makes sense, and it will give a little more responsibility to those rules."

Also before senate are several allocation bills.

Eleven allocations are in final action and eight are being introduced to legislation.

Erik Ankrom, student body vice president, said it is common for senate to review many allocations before the end of the term.

"It's typical," Ankrom said. "At the end of the senate year, you'll see a lot allocations due to a lot of clubs putting it off."

Putnam's board proposes bill of rights

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Putnam Hall's Governing Board is taking a step to help residents know their rights.

The hall's HGB is proposing a bill of rights to add to their constitution, which will let residents know what they can and can't do.

"Our proposed bill of rights will help our residents know their rights within the protections of our own constitution and the protections of the fourth amendment of the United States," Winston Wells, president of Putnam Hall's HGB, said.

The fourth amendment states that officials cannot search a person's place of residents without a warrant. Wells said he wants Putnam Hall's proposed bill of rights to ensure just that.

"It is not acceptable, and when I ran for office almost a year ago, it was part of my platform to inform residents about their rights," he said. "Many residents, not thinking, have let staff come into their rooms believing that they have complete authority to do so."

The proposed bill of rights would let residents know that staff members do not have authority to do so without applicable cause.

Wells said the proposed bill of rights would also ensure the residents' rights to free speech and their right to an audience with Putnam staff members.

"This provides an opportunity for our residents to vent and express their frustrations with many issues in the hall," Wells said. "Since the hall governing board meets once a week, a resident wanting to air a grievance will not have to wait long for a public forum in which to speak and express themselves."

If the proposed bill of rights passes, Putnam will be the first residential complex with such a document.

"Putnam has done its share of social programming this year," he said. "However, much of our focus has been on truly being advocates for our residents. As important as it is to provide social programming and community opportunities for our residents, we feel it is more important to protect our resident's interests through representation."

Residents of other halls say they know their rights.

"I know that staff can't come in without knocking and they can't come in unattended," Brittney Minson, sophomore in marketing, said.

Even so, Minson said a bill of rights for residence halls is a good idea because some residents do not completely know their rights.

"If there weren't any written rights, people could make things up to fit their specific situation," she said.

Zach Nelson, freshman in agriculture economy, said a bill of rights would be beneficial for incoming students.

"Not knowing what can and can't happen confuses some students," Nelson said.

Wells said from now on, any resident moving into Putnam Hall would be informed of their rights. If they do not receive a letter within the first two weeks of entering the hall, impeachment hearings will proceed for the president of the hall governing board.

The proposed bill of rights is currently being edited and will be presented to the governing board for approval 8:30 p.m Sunday.

Bracelets on wrists everywhere

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What Lance Armstrong started with one yellow bracelet as a way to support cancer victims soon turned into many bracelets supporting numerous causes.

There are bracelets for breast cancer, leukemia, child abuse and even one for K-State.

But until recently, there wasn't a bracelet that let people show their support of gay rights. In February, the Flint Hills chapter of Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays received its first batch of 5,000 bracelets to sell for this very purpose.

Multi-colored and sporting the phrase "Love Includes!" the bracelets are a way of showing support for gays and lesbians.

"So many public messages are alienating gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender folks, it's important to combat that and to support them," Susan Scott, public relations chair for the Flint Hills PFLAG, said. "That's why affirmations like 'Love Includes!' are so important now."

Scott, director of leaderships studies and programs, said the bracelets were part of the Safe Zone program, in which university faculty and staff designate their offices as places where students can feel safe talking about issues such as homosexuality.

The bracelets let students know they have allies outside of offices.

"Where people really need to know they have allies, if they're gay, isn't in an office, it's in the classroom, in a restaurant, in church," Scott said. "If they wanted to know allies supported them, they needed to know that everywhere they went."

The concept for the bracelets began taking shape last November. There was no bracelet like this on the market, so the members of the Flint Hills PFLAG brainstormed over colors and phrases before taking the design to a designer.

The money to pay for the bracelets was donated by members of the Flint Hills PFLAG, which will be repaid.

Since their debut in February, the bracelets have been a success. Selling for $3 each online, through PFLAG and at Varney's, almost all of the first 5,000 bracelets were either sold or spoken for within the first four weeks of sales.

And they're not just popular in Manhattan. Tammi Hawk, president of the Flint Hills PFLAG, said there have been buyers from 20 states. Hawk said the PFLAG members had a feeling the bracelets would be popular.

"We thought we had a market for it because there are a lot gay advocacy events and a lot of PFLAG chapters," Hawk said.

For more information
For information on how to buy a bracelet, go to www.loveincludes.com.

Hawk said she thought the recent gay marriage amendments proposals, in Manhattan and around the country, encouraged people to purchase the bracelets to show their stance against the amendment.

Leigh Fine, senior in chemical science, said this was the reason he bought one. Fine said he thought it was an easy way to show he supports diversity and gay marriage.

"The timing with the bracelets and the amendments has been impeccable," Fine said. "It has allowed us to show our unification against the amendment."

After purchasing his bracelet, Fine began selling them to others through the K-State's Queer-Straight Alliance chapter.

So far, Fine said, students at K-State have responded well to the bracelets, and have spread the diversity.

"We have people buying them in bulk and sending them to family and friends," Fine said. "I think it shows that our campus is working on being a safe community and that we're embracing diversity, particularly diversity in sexuality."

Cats finish regular-season play

Women golf this weekend at Norman, Okla., Tourney

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hoping to end the regular season on a high note and add to the improved performances over its last three tournaments, K-State's women's golf team wraps up the regular season this Friday at the Susie Maxwell Invitational in Norman, Okla.

Head coach Kristi Knight said the Jamie Austin Golf Course may play to some of her squad's strengths.

"We tend to drive the ball well," she said. "So I think that's good because this is a golf course where you do have to drive the ball well. It's not terribly long, but it is a golf course where the players will have to pick their places to be aggressive.

"That will benefit a team on this course."

Freshman Kali Quick echoed Knight, saying the course may play to her advantage off the tee.

"Since I'm a freshman, I've never played there," she said. "But I guess the course is kind of tight, which I think is a strength for me, because I'm pretty accurate off the tee."

Quick has had a strong freshman season for the Wildcats, consistently finishing in the top three on the team.

She said another top finish would amount to a successful weekend and end to the regular season.

"I would say finishing in the top 15 would be a good finish," She said. "And just having consistently low rounds."

This weekend marks the last chance for K-State to shoot low scores before the Big 12 Tournament April 22. Knight said she thinks this weekend is a good opportunity to prepare for Big 12 postseason play.

"It's good competition, it's a good field," she said. "At the Big 12, we usually face some crazy weather conditions, and any time you go to Oklahoma in the spring, it's a lot like being in Kansas in the spring.

"We could get some wind and some different kinds of weather, so I think it is a good test before the Big 12."

Chipping the ball onto the green, K-State's Kali Quick competes in a golf tournament on October 12, 2004.

K-State athletes swept the Big 12 Conference Athlete of the Week honors for the week of March 28-April 3, as juniors Breanna Eveland and Kyle Lancaster each picked up the honor for the first time in their careers.

Lancaster leapt to the second best high jump mark (7-07) in the world at the University of Texas at El Paso Invitational last weekend.

Eveland tied the school record in the women's pole vault with a height of 13-09 1/4, also at the UTEP Invitational.

The pair joins distance runner Mathew Chesang as the Wildcats who have earned the honor this season.

Francona, who turns 46 on April 22, said all morning he was not feeling well, according to general manager Theo Epstein. Francona was taken by ambulance to New York Weill-Cornell Medical Center in Manhattan, where he has relationships with several doctors.

Francona took the 8 a.m. team bus to Yankee Stadium and began his routine, even fulfilling media obligations despite not feeling well.

MLB | 3 Pirates minor leaguers fail drug tests

PITTSBURGH — Three Pittsburgh Pirates minor leaguers were suspended Wednesday for failing drug tests last year, with Triple-A pitcher Brian Mallette drawing a 30-game penalty as a two-time offender.

Outfielder Jon Nunnally, also with Pittsburgh's Indianapolis farm team, was given a 15-game suspension as a first offender, as was infielder Tom Evans, who plays for Double-A Altoona.

Mallette and Nunnally were with other organizations when the tests were conducted before signing minor league contracts with Pittsburgh. Both attended the Pirates' spring training camp as non-roster players but did not make the opening-day roster.

Evans is the only Pirates farmhand to date to fail a drug test, though results of tests conducted this year among Florida-based spring training teams have not been released.

NFL | Scalping investigation shows Tice violated policy

BLAINE, Minn. — An NFL investigation into ticket-scalping has found evidence that Minnesota Vikings coach Mike Tice violated league policy, Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said Wednesday.

Tice

Tagliabue, speaking at a news conference, said he would discipline Tice soon for his handling of Super Bowl tickets. Tagliabue said the discipline likely will include fines for reselling tickets, but no suspension.

Tice acknowledged last month that he resold some of his allotment of 12 tickets.

Tice didn't immediately respond to a message left with team officials seeking comment.

NBA | O'Neal still sick, will miss at least 1 more game

O'Neal

O'Neal didn't practice Monday or play in Miami's 104-86 win over Chicago on Tuesday, and has since been diagnosed with an infection that is affecting his stomach. He was examined at a Miami hospital but not admitted, coach Stan Van Gundy said.

Van Gundy said he wasn't told specific details of the infection. He said O'Neal was home Wednesday.

Opening day for Royals is time for reflection

NATHAN RYERSON

The Kansas City Royals home opening day is just around the corner. Kids will be calling in sick to school and the adults will be calling their bosses and telling them "I won't be in today."

Attending opening day is almost like a religion to some Royals fans.

I haven't missed a Royals opening day in 13 years and I don't plan to stop anytime soon.

An opening day in Kansas City is not like a normal game someone may attend during the year.

It has more anticipation due to the six-month break in the baseball season. The crowd is crazier and the atmosphere is more intense.

Throughout my years of skipping class to go to opening day in Kansas City, I have seen things and done things that have stuck with me over the years – memories I'll never forget.

GATES BARBECUE

Every year before the game, the Ryersons have a pre-game meal at Gates BBQ.

It's a Kansas City tradition – not just for the food, but for the atmosphere.

Now don't get me wrong, Gates has great food.

Whether you get the variety platter or ham on bun with fries, you will not be disappointed.

The best part, however, is when you walk in the door and hear those five words you have been dying to have screamed at you all off-season, "Hi, may I help you?" Now that is service.

WE'RE GOING STREAKING

One thing you have to love about opening day is the drunks. Every opening day has them, and they do not disappoint.

It almost never fails that around the seventh inning, someone will have shed their clothing and jump onto the field.

You would just hope that during the planning, one of their buddies offered to bail them out of jail, because it's obvious they spent all their money on booze.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While golfers such as Vijay Singh and Phil Mickelson are teeing off in the first round of the Masters tournament today, the K-State men's golf team is preparing for Friday and the first round of the two-day Arizona State Thunderbird Invitational.

The Thunderbird Invitational, held at ASU's campus course in Tempe, Ariz., will boast arguably the toughest competition of the year, Coach Tim Norris said.

"It's a real step up and a great opportunity," Norris said. "The guys are looking forward to this one – especially the strength of the field."

In the 14-team field, six teams hail from the top-20 in the nation.

Senior Matt Van Cleave, who has paced the Wildcats with three top-10 finishes this spring, said he is excited about the trip to Arizona. One reason fueling his excitement, Van Cleave said, is he sees Arizona in his future.

"This tournament will be a chance for us to beat some top seeds and solidify a spot for regionals," Van Cleave said. "It'll also be fun because I'm planning on moving to Arizona in the fall and trying to play professional golf."

Although forced to think about the future because he is a senior, Van Cleave is still focused on the present and the Thunderbird Invitational.

While the competition is expected to be rigid, the course is not known for being terribly challenging, Van Cleave said.

Norris said he agreed.

"It's not an easy course, but it's fair," Norris said. "If you put in some Arizona weather, it usually yields low scores," Norris said.

Wildcats leave to face Tigers, Cyclones this weekend

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia found out she had debuted at 89th in the latest Intercollegiate Tennis Association rankings, her eyes widened and she took a step back, obviously surprised at the bit of information she had just been told.

"Is that good?" she asked. "I don't know if I should be happy or not. Eighty-nine is kind of a big number."

With a 25-4 record this season, Kvaratskhelia has jumped onto the national stage, becoming the second Wildcat to be ranked in the top 125 players in the country.

"Actually, it's a big surprise to me," she said. "I need to keep working to stay in this position or move up."

Kvaratskhelia said her success is due in part to the feeling of easiness she gets when she is on the court.

"When I am playing a match, I think this is the best time of my life," she said. "It's when I'm really happy and when I am really enjoying something. I'm just trying to do my best and just win."

Kvaratskhelia will take her new ranking on the road with the rest of the K-State women's tennis team this weekend, as the Wildcats travel to Missouri and Iowa State on Friday and Saturday, respectively.

Missouri (11-5, 2-4) comes into the match ranked No. 47. This is the first meeting between the two teams this season, with the last matchup coming in last year's Big 12 Championships, which Missouri won 4-3.

K-State is 19-6 all time versus the Tigers.

Beck grabs us with his irony

Inventive, influential Beck is the spokesperson for a whole generation

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Beck Hansen is perhaps one of the most inventive and influential artists of our times. I could probably go so far as to say that he was (and still is) the spokesperson for Generation X.

Don't believe me? Think way back to 1994 when Beck dropped his first single, "Loser." That song was a national phenomenon. It was one of the first instances of successful cross-pollination of rap and rock (including Run-DMC and Aerosmith a few years earlier).

I can swear that I once saw a I saw a correspondent questioning the value of 'our kids' listening to a song that promotes a slacker lifestyle; surely not! Beck has a way of speaking to this generation in ways few contemporary artists have. Beck had the chops and humor to keep us hooked, and he had enough weirdness to keep the parents away.

The darkness of grunge was over, but we weren't ready to grow up, we were just ready to stop being downers.

So we got "Loser;" a generation riddled with irony (Nirvana had a lot too) got an upbeat song just full of it.

And Beck got to all of us. The preppy kids could get a song with 'cool noises' that everyone could sing while getting drunk; the hipsters realized how studied Beck was and how well he could mix the styles into something original. Plus there is the irony.

Beck wasn't finished; he was just getting warmed up. In 1996, Beck released "Odelay," an album that was co-produced with the Dust Brothers (from The Beastie Boys' "Paul's Boutique").

"Odelay" blew our collective minds. Tracks like "Devil's Haircut" and "The New Pollution" didn't stop playing, and we didn't want them to leave. Then there was "Where It's At." I still don't know anyone to this day who won't immediately pick up their 'two turntables and a microphone.'

Beck was rightfully awarded with a Grammy for that single, and the album won Best Alternative Music Performance. Our slacker-leader was adored by all.

1998 saw Beck release "Mutations," a fairly straightforward, low-key album. It wasn't the follow-up to "Odelay" that everyone expected, but Beck wasn't promising a return to the form everyone wanted and he is better for it. Beck won a Grammy for Best Alternative Music Performance for "Mutations."

In 1999, Beck said he would come back to his anything-goes production and kitchen-sink party anthems. "Midnite Vultures" was the album, and it couldn't have been released at a better time.

It was right before the turn of the millennium, so what better to have blaring at 11:59 p.m. than heavy Prince-driven funk?

After "Midnite Vultures," Beck did some collaboration work with Timbaland in a cover's album of David Bowie's "Diamond Dogs" and was one of the featured artists on Air's "10,000 Hz Legend."

In 2002, Beck shocked everyone again with his mostly acoustic album, "Sea Change." Even though it was a subdued affair, there was no doubt this was Beck.

The "Sea Change" tour consisted of Beck with the Flaming Lips as his back-up band. According to many at the show, the pairing was perfect.

Few contemporary artists have such a diverse and successful musical catalogue as Beck Hansen.

Fetishes go beyond feet; include stuffed animals, latex

LACEY STORER

We all have certain things that makes us feel sexy. Perhaps a certain outfit we wear or a certain perfume or cologne. But most likely these things don't turn you on more than your partner does.

That is, unless you have a fetish. Defined by Webster's Dictionary as "any non-sexual object that abnormally excites erotic feelings," fetishes can make some people go crazy over crazy things.

There are the "usual" ones that most people know about, like foot fetishes and bondage fetishes. But the world of fetishes goes far, far beyond that. I did a little research and found some of the more, um, interesting fetishes out there.

For some of you, these descriptions might be a little intense. They are a bit off the sexual beaten path, so you could get a bit weirded out by some of them.

For you kinky ones out there, perhaps you might recognize one or more of these characteristics in yourself or see something that turns you on.

Either way, here is my abbreviated guide to a few fetishes.

PLUSHIES

This name refers to people who get turned on by stuffed animals. People who are into this sort of thing may modify stuffed animals so they can be intimate with them. Or they may just look at the animal or rub it on themselves while masturbating.

A sub-sector of this fetish is people called furries. These are people who dress up in or have sex with people in fursuits (think mascot costumes).

INFANTILISM

This is when people get pleasure from acting like or being treated like a baby. This may include wearing and/or using diapers, wearing baby clothes, using bibs or pacifiers and being bottle or spoon fed by your lover.

HAIR

People who have a hair fetish generally choose partners whose hair they are attracted to. Yes, hair. Usually the desired partner has longer hair. Guys who have a hair fetish might want to get with a woman who has long underarm hair or hairy legs.

LATEX

This synthetic fabric causes people sexual excitement just bY wearing it, or having their partner wear it. Latex fashions come in a variety of outfits, from regular top and bottom sets to suits that cover the entire body.

As I said before, this is just an abbreviated guide to just a few of the fetishes out there. Type the word into Google and you'll find a lot more, including some dealing with robots.

Some are kind of sexy, some are kind of scary, but (apparently) they all have the power to turn someone on.

Talabani elected as Iraqi president

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – From Saddam Hussein's jail cell, it was a world turned upside down.

He sat in front of a television set watching as one Iraqi lawmaker after another voted Wednesday to give the presidency to Jalal Talabani, a Kurdish leader who spent a lifetime fighting Saddam's dictatorship.

And on Thursday, the Shiite Arab majority – another group that has risen to power after years of suppression under Saddam – expects to see one of its leaders, Ibrahim al-Jaafari, named prime minister, the most powerful post in Iraq's first democratically elected government in 50 years.

Two months after elections, the government finally began taking shape with the election of Talabani to the largely ceremonial job of president, while Adel Abdul-Mahdi, a Shiite, and current interim President Ghazi al-Yawer, a Sunni Arab, were selected vice presidents.

In a gesture meant to send a message to the old regime, Saddam and 11 of his top aides were given the choice of watching a tape of the National Assembly session in their jail cells, and all chose to do so, Human Rights Minister Bakhtiar Amin said.

He said Saddam watched by himself, while the others viewed it as a group at their undisclosed detention center, which is believed to be near Baghdad's airport.

"I imagine he was upset," Amin said. "He must have realized that the era of his government was over, and that there was no way he was returning to office."

Talabani's selection and the expected choice of al-Jaafari as prime minister further consolidate the power shift in Iraq, where both the Shiite Arab majority and the Kurdish minority were oppressed, often brutally, under Saddam's Sunni-dominated regime.

Talabani, 71, reached out to all sectors of the country, appealing for them to join with fellow Iraqis who are working "to found a new Iraq, free of sectarian and ethnic persecution, free of hegemony and oppression."

He also urged Iraqi insurgents, who are believed to be mostly Sunni Arabs, to sit down and talk with the new government.

President Bush called Wednesday's session a "momentous step forward in Iraq's transition to democracy."

"The Iraqi people have shown their commitment to democracy and we, in turn, are committed to Iraq," the president said in a statement. "We look forward to working with this new government, and we congratulate all Iraqis on this historic day."

Helicopter crashes in Afghan desert, killing at least 16

By Stephen Graham
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan – A U.S. military helicopter returning from a mission smashed into the southern Afghan desert Wednesday, killing at least 16 people in the deadliest military crash since the fall of the Taliban in late 2001. An Afghan official said most of the dead appeared to be Americans.

The CH-47 Chinook was returning to the U.S. base at Bagram from a mission in the militant-plagued south when it went down near Ghazni City, 80 miles southwest of the capital, Kabul.

"Indications are it was bad weather and that there were no survivors," said a U.S. spokeswoman, Lt. Cindy Moore. An Afghan official said there were no signs the craft was shot down.

A U.S. military statement said 16 deaths had been confirmed and two other people listed on the flight manifest were "unaccounted for" when the recovery operation was suspended at nightfall.

U.S. officials said the four crew members killed were Americans, but declined to give the nationalities of the passengers. The names of the victims were being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

Moore said the transport helicopter was returning from a "routine mission" when controllers lost radio contact. A second Chinook made it safely back to the base north of Kabul.

Associated Press Television News footage showed dozens of Afghan security forces and officials scurrying round burning wreckage. Strong winds that had whipped thick dust into the darkened sky fanned the flames.

Abdul Rahman Sarjang, the chief of police in Ghazni, said the helicopter crashed about 2:30 p.m. near a brick factory 3 miles outside the city and burst into flames. U.S. troops rushed to cordon off the area, he said.

Sarjang said he saw nine bodies. "They were all wearing American uniforms and they were all dead," he told The Associated Press by cell phone from the crash site.

Sarjang said that the weather was cloudy with strong winds and that witnesses reported one of the helicopter's two rotors looked damaged before it hit the ground. He said he saw no sign of enemy fire, and militants issued no immediate claim of responsibility

According to U.S. Department of Defense statistics, at least 122 American soldiers had died before Wednesday's incident in and around Afghanistan since Operation Enduring Freedom, the U.S.-led war on terrorism, began after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

Police turn back mourners hoping to see pope's body

By Victor L. Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY – After electronic highway signs and cell phone text messages failed to staunch the flow of pilgrims, police stepped in Wednesday to turn back mourners hoping to join the 24-hour line to view the body of Pope John Paul II, on a day that brought almost 1 million people to the Vatican.

Using a special entrance for VIPs, President Bush viewed the body with his wife, Laura, along with his father, former President Clinton and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, shortly after the U.S. delegation reached Rome. They knelt in a pew in front of the remains, bowing their heads in prayer, joining a million pilgrims who had filed solemnly through St. Peter's Basilica.

Seeking to clear the basilica by this evening so the Vatican could prepare for John Paul's funeral the following day, police announced they were closing the line at 10 p.m.

Text messages were sent over Italian cellular phone lines. Those at the back would wait 24 hours before entering the basilica.

"We're just hoping the order can be reversed," said Federica Bruni, a 20-year-old student who came from northern Italy and was one of the first to be told to go away Wednesday night.

It took more than an hour after the deadline to set up the barricades and establish the cutoff point.

"You tell these people!" said one Civil Defense officer in frustration as the time passed for the line to end. "How can we close?"

"It's possible there are 1 million people out there," said Luca Spoletini of the Civil Defense Department. "They are all concentrated outside St. Peter's ... We are all working to ensure maximum tranquility."

The crowd control problems developed hours after the College of Cardinals set April 18 as the start of its conclave in the Sistine Chapel to choose a successor to John Paul, a papal election with new rules and new technological challenges.

The Vatican is a keeper of secrets without parallel, but there were questions Wednesday about whether the deliberations – and the name of the new pope – could be kept within the frescoed walls in an era of cell phones and now that the cardinals will be allowed to roam freely around the Vatican.

"They've assured us there are ways to block all communications and conversations," Chicago Cardinal Francis George said. "They're taking precautions to prevent outside interference. ... No cell phones, no laptops, nothing."

potentially in K-State's favor, Van Cleave said he is optimistic about this tournament, as well as the nearing end of the season.

"Everyone's game is coming around, now that we've been able to practice more consistently," Van Cleave said. "We're just trying to go out and play better each tournament."

As far as team expectations for the Thunderbird Invitational, Van Cleave said the lineup of himself and fellow senior Nick Schumacher, juniors Ben Kern and Tyler Cummins and freshman Clay Hodge, have none.

"Our goal is to go out and just play as well as we can," Van Cleave said.

In an interview with Bill Payne Tuesday at the Masters, Mickelson spoke of his goal for the tournament, and it echoed Van Cleave's outlook for this weekend.

"My goal is to try to compete the best I can in the major championships," Mickelson said.

ranked team, but not too highly ranked," senior Maria Rosenberg said. "They are beatable. We would benefit from beating them, and we can do it."

The Cyclones (1-10, 0-8) have lost seven straight. Last year, K-State swept Iowa State 7-0 in Manhattan. The Wildcats have an overall record of 7-4 in Ames.

K-State has been a streaky team at times throughout this season. So far, the Wildcats have gone on streaks of three losses, three wins, another streak of three losses and the current streak of two victories.

"Some of our results, if not a lot of those results, have more to do with the teams we're playing at the time," Bietau said. "As far as our team is concerned, I think we've played at a similar level (throughout the season), and have probably picked it up a little bit better. There's a lot of factors involved."

The Wildcats will need a complete game from the entire lineup if they hope to come away with two victories this weekend, Rosenberg said.

"Hopefully we will play well in the bottom of our lineup," Rosenberg said. "Everybody needs to do their job, but that is where we can really score a lot of points."

AFRICA | Faith helps student to adjust

capital of the CAR and started working with university students.

Five-year-old Dorsch began going to an all-French school. Being the only American in her school, the young girl had to learn to adapt.

"I learned French very quickly," Dorsch said. "I learned to read and write in French before learning in English."

Life in Africa was unstable while Dorsch and her family worked in the CAR, and in 1996 a civil war broke out when rebels tried to overthrow the government.

Dorsch said her house was "a hot spot" where they could hear shooting and "there were bullets falling around in our neighborhood."

But it wasn't until her world turned upside-down that Dorsch found out what "faith in action" really meant.

While driving home one afternoon after dropping off a friend, Dorsch and her father approached an intersection where a group of rebels were shooting machine guns.

Dorsch said the rebels pointed their guns at her father and her and told them to get out of the car. The rebels took the vehicle, and Dorsch and her father continued on foot.

Another group of soldiers happened upon the two walking and commanded them to get into their vehicle.

"These other soldiers hollered at us and told us that they would take us home," Dorsch said. "I sat on live bullets and machine guns on the way home."

Dorsch said her father was extremely calm during the situation, but she remembered being scared and holding her father's hand very tightly.

"I was afraid someone was going to shoot me – I thought we were going to die," Dorsch said.

After arriving at their house, a group of French soldiers told the family they would be taken to a base overnight for safety. The family was told to take all their important papers and a set of clothes just in case.

"They told us we would come back the next day," Dorsch said.

But she would never see her home again.

The first night at the base, rows of cots were shoved together to fit the evacuees, but little sleep would come for any of them. The crowded room could hear the sounds of war just outside the walls of the camp.

"I thought fireworks were going off – there was constant exploding," Dorsch said.

Dorsch and her family spent five days and four nights in the camp. On the fourth day, a group of American Marines came to help the family return to the United States.

After being flown to several locations, the family finally arrived to the United States with a new culture and a hard transition.

"Anytime I heard gunfire and fireworks, I would freak out and try to find protection," Dorsch said.

While the abrupt change was difficult to handle, Dorsch said she had faith in God that He had a plan and that was what kept her feet on solid ground.

"My parents kept saying over and over again, 'God is in control,' even if everything they had was stripped away," Dorsch said. "Nothing about their beliefs had changed. What they knew about God was still true."

After Dorsch returned to the United States, she began attending Berean Academy in Ebling, Kansas, where she received an English-speaking education for the first time.

At the end of her first year back, her parents were reassigned to Burkina Faso where they would return to their work with the African people.

The family moved in August of 1997 where Dorsch's parents worked with Campus Crusade Ministries at the University of Ouagadougou.

After attending one year of American schooling, Dorsch said it was hard to readjust to school. The family finally decided to send their oldest daughter to the International Christian Academy in neighboring Ivory Coast, more than 500 miles.

"God had not changed before or after the evacuation. He would remain the same here too," Dorsch said. "He was the only thing that had not changed through my whole life."

While the time away from her family was hard, Dorsch began to take the faith that she had been taught and apply it to her own life.

"I felt very alone, but what my parents believed wasn't just a religion but a relationship with Jesus Christ," Dorsch said. "And that was one of the first times I realized why they were in Africa."

Now a junior in English literature and French at K-State, Dorsch returned to the United States for her college education, making friends and continuing to be a part of Campus Crusade for Christ Ministries.

Stephanie Blevins, Campus Crusade for Christ staff member at K-State, said Dorsch always greets people with a smile and a hug or a handshake, something Dorsch said is native of her beloved Africa.

"Because she grew up overseas, she's very understanding and very sensitive," Blevins said. "It's very obvious her top priority is spending time with the Lord and sharing her love for Christ."

Collins said numerous volunteers helped to calm the fires, as 45 individuals worked Sunday.

"These people who come out and volunteer, they often are helping someone they don't directly know, and yet, they attempt to stand in and face these fires, attempting all the while to get them under control," he said.

these events, prospective students get free pizza and can learn about K-State from the comfort of their hometown. They also have the chance to win door prizes.

Ripple said K-State doesn't have to do anything out of the ordinary to promote the school because K-State speaks for itself.

"We don't use any gimmicks to sell K-State," she said.

"We do lots of targeted approaches with students that personalizes our recruitment, but there's no all-expenses-paid ski trips to Colorado," Bosco said.

Instead, they try to show potential students what the university has to offer them.

"Our goal is to help find something that K-State can do for them, something that K-State can do to make them better," McKinley said.

They expect enrollment numbers to decrease slowly in the future but are not worried about overall numbers.

Even though enrollment will be decreasing in the future, Admissions Representative Mandi McKinley said K-State will continue to have a variety of students in attendance because it has something to offer everyone.

"We try to make a connection with students and try to help them find that one thing that they love," she said.

Manhattan prepares for influx of soldiers

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan is preparing for more families – all looking for homes and schools.

About 3,400 soldiers will be reassigned from Hawaii to Fort Riley as part of the military's reorganization efforts. The base is currently housing 11,000 soldiers. The addition of the 6th Brigade, 25th Infantry Division would be a 30-percent increase in soldier population.

The soldiers are not adding to an already existing brigade like most bases across the country, but instead are building a brigade from scratch.

Many of those soldiers will make their homes in Manhattan. But with an already tight housing market, city officials aren't sure how many more buyers the market can absorb.

"I want to be optimistic," Pam Westmeyer, a Manhattan realtor, said. "But, I don't know where these houses are going to come from. Manhattan is by far the better community of anything around here."

Because of low interest rates, Westmeyer said there are fewer sellers than buyers.

"It's going to be tight, even now," she said. "When houses come on the market, the interest rates are low. There are lots of buyers out there. If we have a major influx of folks in the town, it's going to be tough."

Westmeyer, a military wife, was in Manhattan when Big Red One, which included about 8,000 soldiers, was still stationed at Fort Riley. The First Infantry Division was moved to Germany in 1995.

Manhattan officials are planning to new developments on the west side of town, but Westmeyer said most of these homes will be favorable to officers' families rather than the lower income soldier.

Fort Riley spokeswoman Sam Robinson said the historic average, on which she bases demographic predictions, shows 50 to 55 percent of the

Activists have say in election

By Scott Seel

In the political arena, a month can make a world of difference. Just ask City Commission candidate Jim Sherow.

After the March 1 primary, Sherow finished in the top three, along with the other two candidates endorsed by newly-formed political action committee Citizens for a Better Manhattan.

Incumbent Mark Hatesohl found himself on the outside looking in, sitting in fourth place – enough to move on to the general election, but only three seats were up for grabs.

Now, barring any change in the unofficial results, it's Hatesohl who is in and Sherow who is out.

Sherow, who finished just eight votes behind Jayme Morris-Hardeman for the third and final seat, said one of the major factors in the change was the ballot questions.

"Some of this I think was the gay marriage amendment," he said. "If you look at the precincts where the marriage amendment passed by some of the largest margins, Hatesohl was running very strong in those regions."

Sherow said he also believed the increased turnout in this election compared to past April elections could be an indicator of the amendment's effect on the race.

Commissioner candidate Tom Phillips, who finished first in both the primary and the general elections and earned a four-year seat on the Commission, said he thinks the marriage amendment played a role as well, but Phillips said he was unsure exactly what that role was.

"It played a part for sure, whether that was the deciding factor in Mr. Sherow coming down, I don't know," Phillips said. "I think it probably brought both sides to the polls." Hatesohl said the amendment probably helped him some.

"I think it came out in my favor because of the fact that there is still more moderate to conservative voters in Manhattan than there are moderate to liberal voters," he said. "Since I fall on the moderate to conservative side of the 50-50 line and there's more of those people, I got more votes than Jim (Sherow)."

Though both men said they felt the issue was not relevant to commissioners, Sherow said he felt media coverage in outlets such as The Manhattan Free Press may have associated the race with the push for a constitutional amendment defining marriage.

"The Free Press was very pointed in how it tried to shape people's opinions on this," Sherow said. "When they run a photograph of a

With an energetic collaboration of numbers choreographed by faculty, students and guest artists, SpringDance opens tonight in McCain Auditorium.

SpringDance features 43 dancers in 11 ballet, modern, jazz and tap numbers.

"It's very, very diverse," said Hallie Friend, dancer and freshman in criminology and history. "We've got a lot of different concepts going on. It shows the different variety in choreography of classical music."

Production Coordinator David Ollington agreed.

"This one has a lot of variety," he said. "Even just the music of each one is so different."

One dance, "Classical Shorts," is a combination of six two-minute sections, each choreographed by a student.

"It's like a suite of six dances as one dance," Ollington said.

Katelynn Hasler, freshman in pre-journalism, begins the piece with a classical pointe solo, "Extensions," to music by Robert Schumann. She is followed by Shawn Fisher, junior in clinical laboratory science, in "A Hand at Peace." The third section, "Proposition," is a tap dance choreographed

A brightly shining lamp was placed on a lamppost for everyone to see, so that it can light up the space around it.

In a memorial Mass on Thursday , Father Keith Weber of St. Isidore Catholic Student Center compared Pope John Paul II to a light for the entire world and a shining example of faith.

K-State students and Manhattan residents packed the church for the special Mass which celebrated the pontiff's life and the influence he had on the world during his 26 years as the leader of the Catholic faith.

Weber said John Paul II affected even the community of Manhattan by setting a firm, unbending moral example. The Pope's strong stances on issues of life and poverty guided each Catholic in the teachings of the Bible, Weber said.

"Even those who disagreed with him respected him for his faith, his courage and his commitment," he said during the Mass.

Nancy O'Conner, clinical director for the K-State family center, agreed that John Paul II had touched the lives of many individuals, even those who never saw the pontiff.

"I don't think you had to be in his presence. His faith was so great that you experienced it always," she said. "He saw Christ in every single person on earth, and that example encouraged you to do the same."

O'Conner said she was "profoundly sad" when she heard of the Pope's death last Saturday, but her sadness turned to fond reflection on his life.

"You can't help but reflect on the good that he did. He built bridges and loved all people," she said.

"It makes me thankful that he was our leader for as long as he was."

Clock tower one step closer

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Electricity is still needed for the Bosco Clock Tower in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Gerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said he is unsure when the clock will have electricity.

"I haven't gotten a hold of the electrician or the clock guy to know when they are coming back up yet," Carter said.

The faces of the clock tower were attached Wednesday, bringing it one step closer to completion.

However, Carter said there are still some complications with construction.

"We have a sundial that's up on the top of the tower, and the sundial has to be positioned in the right place in order to work properly," Carter said.

The tower was originally planned to be completed in fall 2004.

Carter said he wanted to have a celebration for the completion of the clock tower during the All-University Open House Saturday; however, that may not be possible.

Student Governing Association allocated $15,000 for the clock tower.

"That is to make up the difference between labor and materials that were donated toward framework and faces," said Eleri Griffin, senate chair and senior in family studies and human services.

Thai House closed for health violations

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Thai House restaurant, located in the Manhattan Town Center Food Court, has been temporarily closed down because of numerous health code violations.

Sharon Watson, public information director for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment (KDHE), said the restaurant received the emergency order of temporary suspension following an inspection on March 31.

The order, which came on April 1, was in response to health inspectors finding several violations, including cockroaches, violations of food temperature, and hand-washing violations.

There were 50 live cockroaches found on the premises of the restaurant.

The suspension is in place until the follow-up inspection, which is set on when the facility believes that they have corrected the violations.

Watson said they don't often issue emergency orders.

"If we believe that the restaurant must close, it is to protect the public. These violations are considered a substantial threat to the general public, and we require that the restaurant close to handle them," Watson said.

Watson said if the violations are able to be corrected while the inspector is there, they will be allowed to remain open.

"The violations committed were too severe to correct at that point in time, so they closed so they could correct them," she said.

Allan Raynor, general manager of the Manhattan Town Center, said the facility has never had problems before.

"The owner operated for 10 years, and it was an outstanding restaurant and never had violations. As a result of this inspection, he has made a change in management," Raynor said.

Raynor said the owner hopes to open again in one to two months. The inspectors inspected the rest of the restaurants in the Manhattan Town Center, and there were no other violations. Several restaurants received a superior rating.

2 senators sworn into office

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two new student senators were approved by the Senate on Thursday night.

Sarah Laib was sworn in as Student Senator for the College of Arts and Sciences, while Alex Lovely was sworn in as Student Senator for the College of Human Ecology.

The senators were approved in order to fill the vacancies in these spots, Tyson Moore, Student Senate vice chair said.

Sarah Laib had received the second-highest vote total in the College of Arts and Sciences, while Alex Lovely had been selected by the Human Ecology college council, he said.

The two senators were sworn in just in time to help discuss tuition-centered enhancement expenditures.

Kim Freed, academic affairs and university relations chair, who spoke for the bill, said that the money that would be allocated to Arts and Sciences advisers and pre-law advisers to help these programs advise more students. The money that would be allocated to the College of Business advisers to allow them to hire one extra adviser.

An extra $50,000 more than 2005 was also allocated to Diversity Programming for 2006. This money is coming from the $60,000 which was not spent that had been previously allocated to an honors program, she said.

Although they haven't decided what to do with the other $10,000, they thought it was important to give $50,000 to the Diversity Programming so that they might get a big-name speaker, Freed said.

"I think Bill Cosby has been thrown around," she said.

The Senate also discussed its 2006 allocations for academic competition teams.

Although the recommendations were all lower than the money requested, the Allocations Committee figured in each team's past success while dividing up the money, Ben Procter, arts and sciences senator, said.

"The committee felt it was important to recognize those efforts," he said.

TO THE POINT

Unfair label hurts political activist group

Citizens for a Better Manhattan has the best interest of Manhattan in mind.

Accusations that it is a left-leaning political activist committee are unfair.

About half of the CBM members are registered Republicans, said Wade Radina, co-chair of the organization.

The group said it did contact all candidates for the City Commission and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board races when choosing the candidates it wanted to support.

After interviewing candidates, CBM members chose candidates they thought would make Manhattan a better to live.

Two candidates picked, Jayme Morris-Hardeman and Jim Sherow, lean more liberal, but Tom Phillips, who won the general election, is a self-described moderate-to-conservative candidate.

Political ideologies were not a factor in deciding who CBM would support.

Election results for the March 1 primary favored CBM-supported candidates, with its three choices getting the most votes.

The general election did not prove as successful for CBM, when Commissioner Mark Hatesohl won his re-election bid and Jim Sherow took fourth.

Manhattan citizens made that choice.

The group formed to make Manhattan a better place, which is a noble goal. The only truly neutral PAC would be one whose sole purpose is to persuade citizens to vote.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Stuck in the Dark Ages

Pope's death gives Catholics a chance to rethink the church's direction

ABBY HILES

Most people around the world will remember what they were doing when they heard that Pope John Paul II died.

Whether Roman Catholic, Protestant, Buddhist or Hindi, no one can dispute the effect this man had on the rest of the world. He wasn't just the head of the largest Christian denomination on the earth (now boasting more than one billion adherents); he was a spiritual leader and peacemaker for the entire globe.

Since his papal inauguration in 1978, Pope John Paul II helped to end communism in Eastern Europe, visited over 130 countries in six continents and ignited a fire under a church with decreasing patronage.

John Paul II was a fresh breath in the lives of Catholics all over the world. As a young pope of 58, John Paul II skied, kayaked, spoke 10 languages and had two PhDs.

During his pontificate, the United States and the Vatican exchanged diplomats for the first time in 116 years. He is also the only pope to have ever visited a synagogue and a mosque.

Pope John Paul II will surely be missed within the Catholic church – if not for his amazing leadership and understanding of our religion, for his warmth and desire to spread his own faith throughout the globe.

But now with a beloved pope buried in St. Peter's Basilica, what is to become of the Catholic church?

In ten days, the papal conclave will elect the next pope.

With 117 cardinals eligible to vote, only three not selected by the former pope, the legacy left behind by John Paul II will probably live on.

The question is: should it?

Although John Paul II accomplished a great many feats in revitalizing a stagnant religion, there are other issues to consider that the late conservative pontiff would not address.

For instance, the church's stance on married clergy.

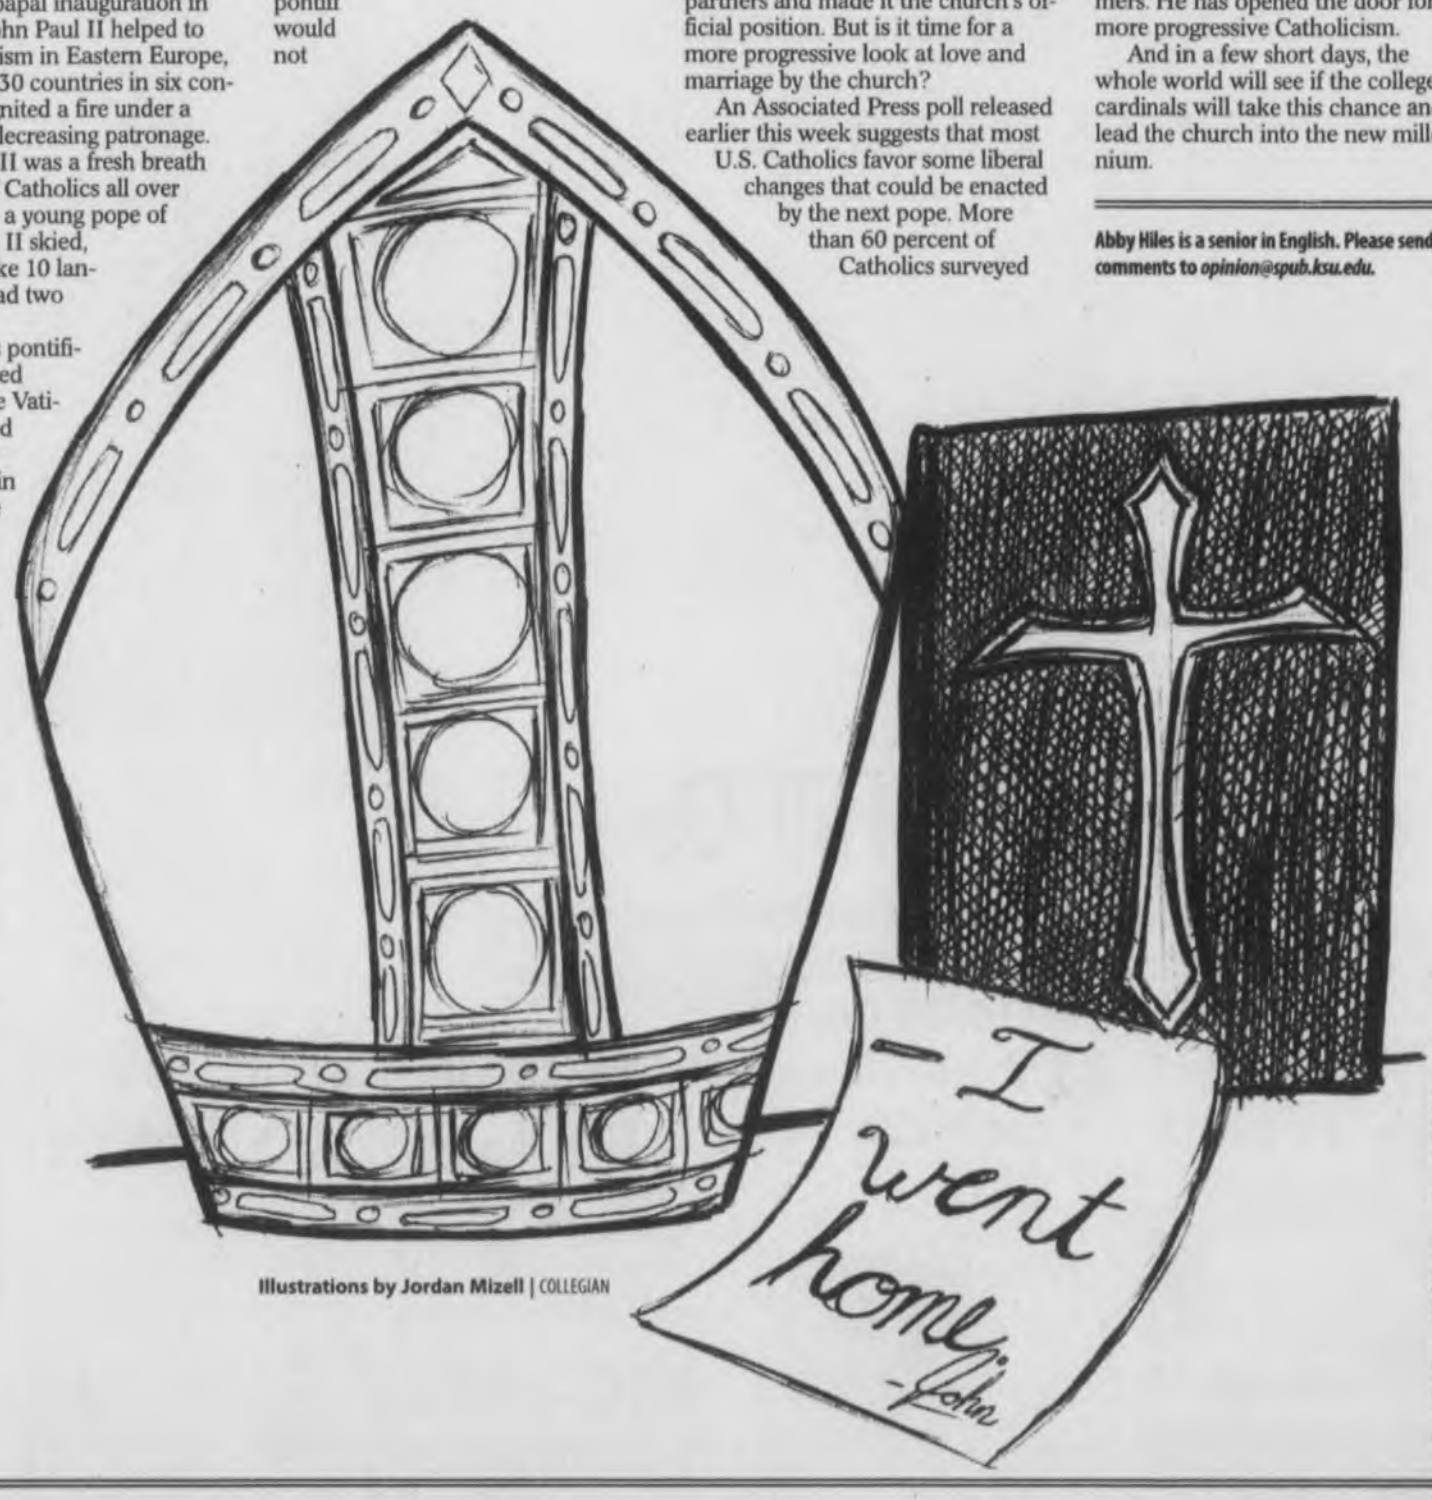
In nearly every other Christian denomination, members of the clergy are allowed to be married and procreate. However, within the Catholic church, priests take a vow of celibacy and are not allowed such a privilege.

With a membership that reaches across the globe and a clergy desperately seeking new blood, isn't this the Catholic church's next logical step?

Another issue pushing the traditional values of the church is same-sex marriage.

In December 2004, the late Pope condemned the union of same sex partners and made it the church's official position. But is it time for a more progressive look at love and marriage by the church?

An Associated Press poll released earlier this week suggests that most U.S. Catholics favor some liberal changes that could be enacted by the next pope. More than 60 percent of Catholics surveyed think that the next pope should allow priests to marry and women to be ordained.



The Catholic church has many strict stances on controversial issues that are plaguing nations all over the globe. Birth control, abortion and women in the clergy – all of these need to be addressed in the next pontificate or risk being lost forever in a sea of conservative cardinals all appointed by the same man.

The late pontiff was a great man and an incomparable leader of the faith that I have grown up in and plan to raise my children in.

But with the grief that accompanies his passing, a light of hope glimmers. He has opened the door for more progressive Catholicism.

And in a few short days, the whole world will see if the college of cardinals will take this chance and lead the church into the new millennium.

Size of one's truck not related to the size of anything else

SCOTT SEEL

Scientists have just released a clinical study proving without a doubt that there is a direct relationship between the size of a man's truck and the size of a man's penis.

Yes, just take a look around this campus and you'll see: the real men drive real big and real loud, pick'em-up trucks.

Extra points are awarded for the following items: a gun rack (10 points), a confederate flag (five points – also accepted are bumper stickers reading "Heritage, not hate"), or a sticker reading "Cowboy(girl) Up" (five points).

The thought process goes like this: I could purchase a small, economical car that has an EPA rating of 28 miles per gallon, but what fun would that be? I can accomplish the same thing in this shiny new Dodge Ram 3500 Heavy Duty Dually with a Cummins Turbo Diesel.

After all, what girl looks at a guy in a Toyota Prius Hybrid and thinks, "Man, I bet that guy is hung like a horse"?

As my good friend Cajun Man would say: "Compen-say-shun."

In addition to the brute size of one's vehicle, how loud exhaust pipes – or lack thereof – are also awards points in penis size.

Yes, men – straight pipes get you laid.

The fact that when you drive through the apartment complex parking lot at 3 a.m. and everyone gets the joy of waking up should not deter you in your never-ending quest for the female species.

This phenomenon is not limited to college students.

As we get older, some stick with the obscenely large pickup trucks, which serve no actual practical purpose. But, most move onto SUVs.

Yes, one has not made it until one owns the largest and most rugged-looking (please note I said rugged-looking, not actually rugged) SUV on the market.

When you pull up at soccer practice or the grocery store in your Ford Escape and park next to the guy in the Ford Excursion, you know his penis is at least six inches longer than yours. And that is unacceptable.

It continues as you become a geriatric.

As your kids grow up and move out and your AARP card comes in the mail, you trade in that cumbersome SUV for a nice Cadillac or something of that ilk.

Or, if you're my roommate, you skip the first two steps and go straight to the grandma sled.

It's the American way, my friends.

The best way to keep up with the Joneses is make sure your car is bigger than theirs and uses more oil than 90 percent of the world's nations produce.

For those of you counting at home, I used the word penis three times in this column. OK, four.

Pat Bosco, here's an anonymous tip: Lighten up on the cologne; you stink.

Hey TKE, if you're gonna keep the fat kid, you might as well keep the queer kid, too.

It's 6 o'clock, and all I want to do is go back to Dillon's and look at the amazingly beautiful check-out girls.

Lacey Storer, the only fetish you've ever experienced is guys who are into ugly, dumb girls.

Do this many Kansas State students seriously wear jean shorts, or is this an all-campus joke that I'm not aware of?

Who is Matthew Girard from the facebook, and why does he live in Kedzie Hall?

Why is it at the All-University Open House, Anderson Hall and President Wefald's office is not open that day?

To the guy I caught wackin' it in the basement stacks of the library: don't worry, I won't tell anybody.

To the gay person that said they're gonna take their gay tax dollars elsewhere: thank you.

How long do you think it would take a dog with a wooden leg to kick the seeds out of a pickle?

I'm one of the many girls that gained 40 pounds during winter break, and I'll have you know that I'm working really hard to get it off. So tell that guy to lay off.

I was wondering when they're gonna finish the clocktower.

Hey Lambda Chi, you can keep our guy, too.

I ate a chocolate squirrel.

I think if Mariatt Hall had a vote to decide who was the most unpopular person, I think two-beer Tim would definitely win, hands down.

California student battles roaches

By Wolfgang Rougle
THE CALIFORNIA AGGIE

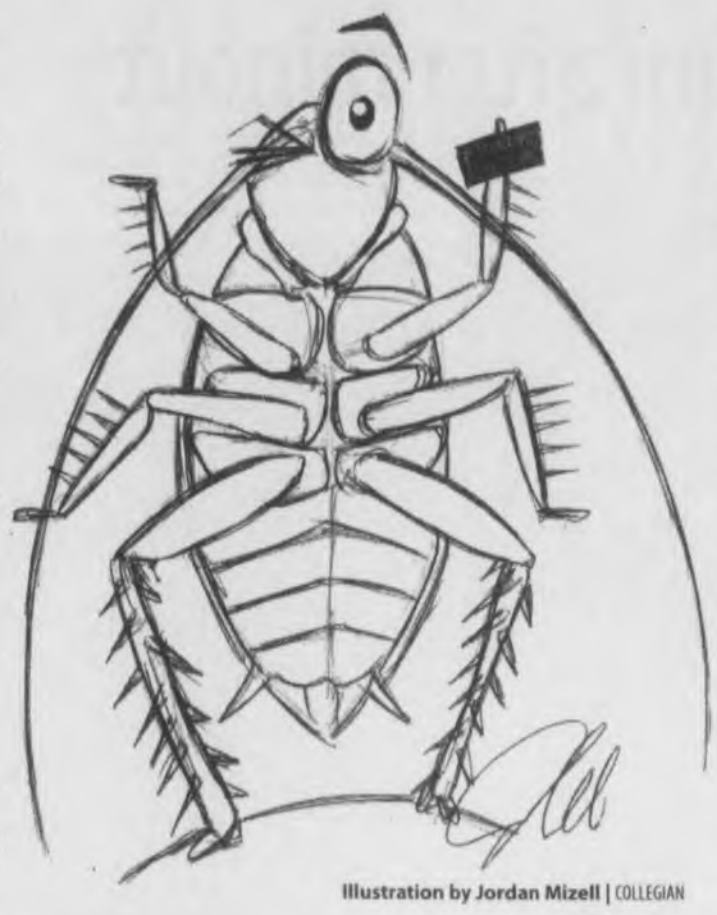

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

DAVIS, Calif. – I've been waging a desultory war against cockroaches ever since I moved into this apartment building.

Each battle is the same: the advance scouts trickle out of the walls in greater and greater numbers until I call the property managers the correct number of times, at which point the pest control guys eventually come and present their selection pressure. The wave recedes, but inevitably, the surf comes back in.

A few days ago, the tide returned, in the form of an inch of dazed chitin hunkered darkly on the kitchen floor. (Those of you seeking apartments for next year can take note that my building is "managed," if I may stretch a subjective term to its breaking point, by a firm known as PHM.)

Unfortunately for the cockroach, its many ancestors had already worn down to nothing the squeamishness of the naive young girl who first signed the lease. There was a time when I kept an empty margarine container in every room in order to trap the beasts and nervously escort them outside. Now, I squish them.

When I muttered something about their inheriting the earth, my boyfriend added, "They already have; they just haven't served us our eviction notice yet."

I'm not sure who figured out that roaches are going to survive the nuclear apocalypse. (How do you establish criteria for that?) But they certainly have prospered in this preapocalyptic world, and I'm not just talking about the five or six species who are household pests. The cockroach family (Blattodea) has about 4,000 members all over the world, who have spread into an amazing diversity of niches.

At least one species of giant cockroach long ago developed an ability humans are only now mastering: the talent of mimicking other species' pheromones.

This cockroach burrows into a nest of ants and starts secreting a knockoff of the larval ants' scent. The nurse ants run to the cockroach and assiduously feed it with choice morsels.

Even though the cockroach is thousands of times larger than any ant larvae, or even the nurse ants themselves, the ants never catch on.

They continue stuffing this enormous baby with food even while the real ant larvae waste away in neglect. When I heard this tale of extreme insect fraud, I relaxed about my apartment situation.

At least I wasn't spoon-feeding the critters mashed peas.

Then I realized I was congratulating myself because I'm more discerning than a bunch of ants.

Well, in such situations, one takes comfort where one can find it. And I took comfort in knowing that cockroaches are not generally considered health hazards. They don't spread disease.

Instead, with the exception of some South American roaches who eat eyebrows, their menace is mostly psychological.

Humans just have a visceral dislike for cockroaches, which is curious because (unlike our phobias about snakes or rats, for instance) it's not rooted in any obvious evolutionary grudge.

It seems that roaches simply stand for all the things that gross us out. In fact, a biomechanics lab at Berkeley felt compelled to defend its interest in them this way: "We do not study them because we like them. Many of them are actually disgusting, but they tell us secrets of nature that we cannot find out from studying humans."

Indeed.

One of the things cockroaches are teaching us is the science of scent. European researchers have developed a small robot which, even though it looks like a green matchbox, "is capable of infiltrating a group of cockroaches, influencing them and altering their behavior." Perhaps we're finally learning the tricks of the giant cockroach. But Blattodea is sure to have another card up its coxa.

We can only guess what that will be.

No calendar changes proposed

Editor,

I was very disappointed with the editorial on the academic calendar published in Thursday's Collegian. For the record, the following is true:

1. We are making no changes to the academic calendar "as it is now." We are establishing a set of operating guidelines to facilitate discussions of future calendars. The current academic calendar on file with the Kansas Board of Regents has been approved through summer 2010.

2. There have been no additional breaks added either before the fall semester or during the Thanksgiving holiday. In fact, the guidelines are consistent with the Academic Calendar we are following this year.

3. The University Calendar Committee, which recommends the academic calendar to Faculty Senate, includes two student members appointed by the president of SGA. Faculty Senate itself includes three students – the president of Student Senate, president of SGA, and one additional student – all of whom have voting powers. Student voice is, in fact, integrated into all of our decisions.

There are no changes being proposed for Academic Calendars before 2010. Starting classes on a Monday, which is already part of this year's calendar, has not been proposed in order to accommodate extra vacation days.

Vote in elections; don't whine

Editor,

In response to your April 6 editorial board "Commissioners Need to Ensure Rental Safety," it should be pointed out that although students could be considered "transient citizens," they also have the right to vote in Manhattan elections and by doing so, taking the responsibility as active citizens to have a say in decisions that affect them, such as residential rental safety.

Voting does require the foresight to register (which can be done in the SGA offices in the Union or in numerous locations throughout the city), the foresight to research which candidates would champion their interests (such as mandatory rental inspection) and the initiative to vote.

Vote where you live; if you move, change your registration. In Tuesday's election, it took 3,483 votes to win the third City Commission seat.

If our more than 20,000 students had their act together, they could have elected all three of the City Commissioners.

Democracy in action is a contact sport; if you don't put on the gloves and fight for your interests, you are left to whine outside the ring.

K-State looks to keep momentum after rainout

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's hopes of capitalizing on the momentum of beating the No. 1 team in the nation were put on hold due to rain Tuesday, but the Wildcats will try to pick up where they left off when they travel to Waco, Texas, for a three-game weekend series against No. 24 Baylor.

Coach Brad Hill said despite the rain-out, the Wildcats (15-12, 2-7) won't change anything heading into the Baylor series.

"We need to continue to keep playing like we have and keep playing with confidence," Hill said.

K-State faces a Baylor (19-12, 6-3) squad that swept No. 1 Texas in March, but has since dropped five of its last nine games, including a 9-3 loss to Houston on Tuesday.

Game time

K-State at Baylor

When: 7 tonight, 6 p.m. Saturday, 1 p.m. Sunday
Where: Baylor Ballpark, Waco, Texas
Radio: SportsRadio (KMAN-1350 AM)

Although the Bears have struggled as of late Hill said Baylor will be a tough match up for the Wildcats.

"They have a lot of kids back and they are going to play them and play them well," Hill said.

Offensively, the Bears are led by senior Josh Ford. A Baytown, Texas native, Ford is hitting .321 with 22 RBIs and is second in the Big 12 in doubles with 10.

The Wildcats will counter with junior pitcher Chase Mitchell tonight, senior Mitch Walter on Saturday and junior Adam Cowart on Sunday.

Hill said Mitchell, who is 3-3 with a 4.57 ERA, will need to set the tone for the weekend.

"We need him to give us good innings, and we would like for him to get off to a good start," Hill said. "We want to have him not to try to do too much and have him try and keep us in the game into the sixth and seventh innings."

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Adam Cowart makes a delivery to home in a game earlier this season. K-State starts a three-game series against Baylor this weekend.

Walter is 2-2 with a 3.92 ERA and has the Wildcat's only complete game of the season. Cowart leads the team with six wins and 37 strikeouts.

On offense, the Wildcats will look to junior Brandon Farr, who is second in the conference in hitting with a .372 average and is third on the team in RBIs with 21.

Hill said his team needs to play well on the road so it can build some momentum with upcoming home series against Texas Tech and Texas A&M.

"Coming back home over the next couple of weekends will help us out a lot," Hill said. "We just need to keep playing good baseball the next couple of weekends at home."

One last time

Wildcat seniors take on high school senior all-stars in Salina

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend, K-State fans will get a glimpse into the future, and have one last chance to reminisce about the past, all at the same time.

The K-State women's basketball seniors Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn, Brie Madden and Kendra Wecker, along with former Big 12 Player of the Year and current Minnesota Lynx player Nicole Ohlde and former WNBA player Jackie Stiles, will play against the state of Kansas high school all-stars this Sunday in Salina, Kan.

The State of Kansas Women's Basketball Showcase will be the first time the event is taking place, and the last time the K-State seniors, minus Megan Mahoney, who is recovering a torn achilles tendon, will play in an organized game together.

"We just want to go out there and have fun and have an opportunity to play together one last time," guard Koehn said. "I would imagine it's going to be more like street ball, set each other up for plays."

In four years, the K-State seniors finished with a 103-35 record, the best four-year stretch in the history of the program.

"All I care about is playing with my teammates, playing with the three of them and Ohlde, playing with the four of them, that's what I'm looking forward to," center Brie Madden said.

"Then getting to hang out with all of the seniors from Kansas, it's going to be a really good way to end my involvement with everything."

As a group, the seniors will leave Manhattan owning eight K-State records, most notably, Kodak All-American Kendra Wecker as the Big 12 all-time leading scorer, and Koehn as the NCAA all-time leader in 3-pointers made in a career.

"We definitely want to have fun and enjoy ourselves knowing this will be the last time we will be playing together," guard Domenico

If you go:

Jackson makes a stand by fighting for his reputation with lawsuit

MATTHEW GIRARD

When I was a kid, Bo Jackson was the ultimate athlete, and like many other kids growing up in Kansas, the two-sport phenom was my hero.

I had every baseball and football card I could get my grubby little hands on, got in fights with friends about who was going to be Bo when we played home run derby or football and my most cherished possession was the "Ball Player" poster with Bo in shoulder pads and a bat across his shoulders.

I since have lost the poster, my cards are stored away in my dad's basement and Bo is long retired, but on Wednesday, he proved to be my hero once again.

Bo, whose real name is Vincent, filed a lawsuit for defamation against a California newspaper that quoted a dietary expert that said he had used steroids.

At a news conference, Bo said he had nothing to hide and if anyone wanted to check into his medical past, they were free to do so.

He didn't need the steroids anyway. Bo was ahead of his time as an athlete, making him just better than everybody else.

This is what I've been waiting for since former and current Major League Baseball players have been accused of using performance enhancing drugs, such as steroids.

Not only did Bo stand up for himself, but he did something about it.

If the players who have been accused of using steroids didn't do it, then why haven't they taken the same steps as Bo?

Plenty of players have said they have nothing to hide and have vehemently denied ever using steroids, yet no one has had the "onions" to actually try to defend themselves by taking these "supposed" allegations to court.

Yes, several went before a Congressional committee to address the steroid problem, and some even denied using steroids under oath, but the only player you could believe after the hearing was that money-hungry wacko Jose Canseco, and he is the one who started all the trouble in the first place with his tell-all book.

Thanks Bo for being up front about it and truly showing us that you have nothing to hide. Because of you standing up for yourself, my memories of you running up the outfield wall after catching a ball at full speed won't be tainted.

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Bad weather followed PGA Tour players right through the gates of Augusta National on Thursday when the first round of the Masters was delayed because of thunderstorms.

It was the fourth consecutive week that players were kept off the course because of rain, dating to the Bay Hill Invitational. The Masters became the ninth out of 15 events on the PGA Tour schedule to be halted at some point because of weather—from rain to wind to fog and even a brief snow flurry last week in Atlanta.

This is the fourth—straight year the Masters has been suspended because of rain, including 2003, when it rained so much the tournament did not begin until Friday.

The first starting time, originally set for 8:05 a.m. EDT, was pushed back nearly 4 1/2 hours.

HONOLULU — The 2005 Hawaii Bowl will be played at Aloha Stadium on Christmas Eve for the second consecutive year.

Jim Donovan, the game's executive director, announced Wednesday that ESPN would show the game between Western Athletic Conference and Conference USA teams live at 8:30 p.m. Eastern.

The first two Hawaii Bowls were played on Christmas Day before the 2004 game was held on Christmas Eve.

FLOWERY BRANCH, Ga. — A woman is suing Atlanta Falcons quarterback Michael Vick, claiming he knowingly gave her a sexually transmitted disease.

In the civil lawsuit, Sonya Elliott, who says she is Vick's former girlfriend, claims Vick gave her genital herpes in an April 2003 encounter.

Vick

In the complaint, Elliott, 26, seeks damages, alleging negligence by Vick, unwanted physical contact, pain, suffering and potential future medical complications.

In a statement issued through a spokesman, the Falcons said the team would not comment on the lawsuit, but hoped the issue "will be resolved in a fair and expeditious manner."

CBB | Father: McKenzie to transfer from Oklahoma

MINNEAPOLIS — Guard Lawrence McKenzie will transfer from Oklahoma to be closer to home, his father told a newspaper.

"He kind of felt like he was playing out of position and a few other things," Larry McKenzie told the Minneapolis Star-Tribune for Thursday's editions. "He just decided he wanted to, you know, make a change."

McKenzie

As a sophomore, McKenzie averaged 9.5 points playing mostly as a reserve. He was the Sooners' best outside shooter and made 43.5 percent of his 3-point shots to rank second in the Big 12 Conference.

The 6-foot-2 Minneapolis native played in 32 of the Sooners' 33 games and started six times, but eventually found himself behind freshman David Godbold, who started 11 games — including the final 10.

NBA | Grant Hill to miss two games with bruised shin

CLEVELAND — Orlando Magic forward Grant Hill will miss the next two games because of a bruised left shin, including Tuesday night's matchup with the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Hill

Hill, who was kicked a week ago during a win against Sacramento, also will be out for Wednesday night's game at Toronto.

Hill missed a game in December with a bruised right shin. Magic coach Johnny Davis said this latest injury is not related to the numerous left ankle problems that sidelined Hill for all but 47 games the previous four seasons.

Stacey Augmon or Hedo Turkoglu will start in Hill's absence, Davis said.

Proper storage, classification important in choosing quality cigars

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Over the past decade, cigar smoking has become an increasingly popular hobby. People often collect fine cigars in much the same way that they would collect fine wine.

Learning the nuances of cigar smoking and collecting can be as complicated as becoming a wine connoisseur, but there are some simple and basic facts that you should know before diving in.

Here are some of the basics of cigar smoking, compiled with the help of victorycigars.com and cigargroup.com, that should help you get started.

Cigars need to be stored properly in order to maintain their freshness and flavor. If buying a cigar from a tobacconist, it is always a good idea to smoke it that day so it doesn't dry out.

Cigars can either be purchased in boxes or individually and must be stored at very specific conditions. If cigars are not stored at the proper temperature and humidity, mold could begin to grow.

A humidor can be purchased for around $100. Keep the humidity and temperature at or very near 70 degrees or mold can develop.

Cigars are generally divided into two classifications: Parajos and Figurados. Parejos have parallel sides and have the traditional tube shape. Figurados are typically cone shaped:

Ring gauge is calculated in sixty-fourths of an inch. Consequently, a cigar measuring forty-sixty-fourths would have a ring gauge of 40. Wider cigars typically have a richer, fuller taste and will burn more evenly.

Remember, size isn't the only important factor in choosing a good cigar. There are different types of wrapper leaves whose composition affects the flavor of the cigar. Wrappers are identified by color and taste.

Fine cigars can usually be purchased from a tobacconist for between four and 10 dollars.

PAREJOS

1. Cigarillo: These miniature cigars are about the size of a cigarette and take about 10 minutes to smoke. They have a ring gauge of 20 and are very popular in Europe.

2. Churchill: This type of cigar was named after Sir Winston Churchill. They are usually seven to eight inches long, with a ring gauge of 48 and take around 45 minutes to smoke.

3. Corona: This typed of cigar has the most familiar shape and size in the cigar family. They are typically five and one-half inches long, with a ring gauge of 42 and take around 30 minutes to smoke.

4. Panatela: These cigars are long and thin. They are usually seven inches long, with a ring gauge of 38 and take around about 45 minutes to smoke.

5. Robusto or Rothschild: These cigars are short and very thick and are named after Baron de Rothschild. They are usually five inches long, with a ring gauge of 50 and take around 25-40 minutes to smoke.

6. Gigante or Presidente: These are the largest members of the cigar family. They are usually up to 10 inches in length, with a ring gauge of 64 and take around 60 to 90 minutes to smoke.

FIGURADOS

1. Pyramid: Highly tapered cigar shaped like a pyramid. They are usually six inches long, with a ring gauge of 50and take around 45-60 minutes to smoke.

2. Belicoso: This cigar is much like a pyramid, but the head is rounded instead of pointed. Usually six inches long, this cigar has a ring gauge of 52 and takes around 45 minutes to smoke.

3. Perfecto: This cigar is closed at both ends and is shaped like an American football. Usually five to six inches long, this cigar has a ring gauge of 48 and takes around 45 minutes to smoke.

4. Culebra: These are interesting cigars that are made of three Panatelas that are braided together. They are usually five inches long, with a ring gauge of 33 and take around 30 minutes to smoke.

5. Torpedo: These cigars are similar to perfectos, but have a pointed head and a closed foot. Usually six inches long, these cigars have a ring gauge of 60 and take around 50 minutes to smoke.

WRAPPERS

1. Claro: These leaves are usually light brown or tan and have a very mild or neutral flavor. They are typically grown in the shade.

2. Colorado: This wrapper is reddish-brown in color and typically indicates a well-aged and mature cigar. It has a medium to strong flavor.

3. Natural: This leaf has a dark brown or tan color and is also called English Market Selection. These wrapper are grown in the sun and have a smooth and rich flavor.

4. Maduro: This wrapper has a very dark brown color and is usually full-flavored and slightly sweet. They also give off an excellent aroma.

5. Oscuro: This wrapper is black and is found in Mexico, Brazil and Nicaragua. It gives off a very strong flavor and aroma.

Dale Messick, whose long-running comic strip "Brenda Starr, Reporter" gave her entry into the male world of the funny pages, has died at age 98.

Messick, whose strip ran in 250 newspapers at its peak in the 1950s, died Tuesday, said her daughter, Starr Rohrman, who had been caring for her mother at her home in Sonoma County.

Messick — who jettisoned her given name Dalia to further her career — once said Brenda had "everything I didn't have." But she charmed acquaintances with spunk and style worthy of her redheaded creation.

Mixing hot copy with high fashion, Brenda plunged from one thrilling adventure to another, sassing her tough-talking editor, Mr. Livwright, and sometimes filing her copy with the only person left in the newsroom, the cleaning woman.

As World War II raged Brenda did her part, parachuting into action — every red hair in place.

Warner Music gets another subpoena

Warner Music Group Corp. has received another subpoena from New York Attorney General Eliot Spitzer as part of an industrywide probe of the financial relationship between music companies and radio stations, Warner Music said on Thursday.

The company, which is planning a $750 million initial public offering, said in a regulatory filing that it received a subpoena on March 31 as part of the probe, which includes a look at the use of independent promoters and accounting for payments to them.

The investigation is examining the time-honored practice of music companies' paying independent promoters hundreds of millions of dollars a year to help secure valuable radio air time for songs.

Warner Music previously disclosed that it had received subpoenas from Spitzer on Sept. 7 and Nov. 22 regarding the same matter.

Kings' eclectic sound dominates in new album

Tennessee band's mix of punk, country, facial hair creates solid listening experience

"Aha Shake Heartbreak"
Album review by Jessica Grant

Maybe the Kings of Leon are an acquired taste. Some people cringe when they hear the first chords of a Kings of Leon song. Others find the band's mix of punk-country-rock to be absolutely perfect.

Hailing from Tennessee, Kings of Leon consists of three brothers and a cousin (all sharing the last name Followill). The Kings of Leon first caught the eye of the music industry when they released the EP album, "Holy Roller Novocaine," in 2003. The band was lauded as the "Strokes with a Southern flair" and capitalized on this attention and quickly released, "Youth and Young Manhood," a searing fuzzy country-punk-rock album.

Usually when critics talk about Kings of Leon, it is always noted in a somewhat incredulous tone that the boys were born into a fundamentalist Christian family that was constantly on the road supporting their evangelist father, Leon.

Critics also tend to make some comment about the collective facial follicles of the band, which have probably received as much attention as their music.

With their latest release, "Aha Shake Heartbreak," the Kings of Leon have created an album that should garner more attention than their religious background or facial hair.

"Aha Shake Heartbreak" refines the retro sound of "Youth and Young Manhood." The sound of "Aha Shake Heartbreak" is more mellow, but more experimental and proves that even though the members of Kings of Leon are all in their early twenties, and they can certainly play their instruments. Interestingly enough, the album was produced by Ethan John as the band played live in the studio.

The album kicks off with the song "Slow Night, Long Night," which for the first minute sounds remarkably like a leftover track from "Youth and Young Manhood." However, the chorus kicks in with a surf rock flair that makes not dancing impossible. "Slow Night, Long Night" then literally has a five second pause that leads into the oddly bossanova flair that ends the piece. It is a musical experiment that works.

The first single from the album is "The Bucket," a short piece that features a rolling drum line and perfectly crafted pop melody. The chorus of "18, balding, star/ Golden, fallen, heart" should sound like a depressing cry against fame, but the self-deprecating lyrics are juxtaposed against such an upbeat melody that they bring an instant smile to the face of the listener.

According to the album packaging, "Four Kicks" is also a notable single from "Aha Shake Heartbreak." The song is a chugging, oddly folksy tune that truly is worthy of radio play.

Overall, "Aha Shake Heartbreak" is a solid album. The Kings of Leon have a genre bending sound that tackles punk, rock and country in an oddly wonderful blend.

BASKETBALL | Team to feature K-State recruits

While the K-State team consists of All-Americans, players of the year and record holders, the high school team is intriguing in that it will feature three future K-State players.

Those three players are Marlies Gipson of McPherson High School, JoAnn Hamlin of Winfield High School and Shalee Lehning of Sublette High School, all of whom have signed to play for the Wildcats next season.

Gipson averaged 12 points and nine rebounds this season, leading McPherson to the Class 5A championship this season. In her final game, the 6-foot forward blocked 14 shots and pulled down 17 rebounds. In her previous two seasons, she had made it to the championship game, but lost both games.

Hamlin, a 6-foot-3 center, was the only K-State-bound player to end her high school career with a loss. She scored 23 points in the Class 5A sub-state championship game.

Lehning, a 5-foot-9 inch point guard is the state of Kansas' all-time leader in rebounds (1,354), assists (804) and fourth overall in scoring (2,520).

Lehning led Sublette to two consecutive Class 2A championships, a run that included 50 straight wins, and scored in double figures in all 100 games she played in.

Split squad travel to Austin, Emporia for relays

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcat track and field team will split its squad this weekend, as a limited number of K-State's athletes will compete at the Clyde Littlefield Texas Relays in Austin, Texas, and the majority of the team will compete at the Emporia State/State Farm Relays in Emporia, Kan.

Head coach Cliff Rovelto said the stiff competition at the Texas Relays was one factor he considered in determining whom to send to Austin.

"There is better competition at the Texas meet," Rovelto said. "It would not make sense for us to send all of our athletes there."

The Texas Relays started Wednesday, but Rovelto chose to have his athletes only compete today and Saturday.

"It is more of a logistical thing than anything else," he said. "Part of it has to do with the schedule of the meet. We can't afford to miss that much school."

Rovelto also wanted to send most of his athletes to Emporia so they would have the opportunity to compete in more than one event.

"Historically, most of our throwers have gone to Emporia so they can compete in two or three events," he said.

The Texas Relays will be a homecoming of sorts for senior triple-jumper Chaytan Hill, who considered the University of Texas before deciding on K-State.

Hill, from Kirby, Texas, said this weekend might be one of the last times her family will watch her compete as a collegiate.

"The Texas meet is one of my favorite meets, only because my family is able to come watch me compete," she said.

The four-time NCAA All-American had a personal best, wind-aided jump of 45-05 at the UTEP Springtime Invitational last weekend in El Paso, Texas, and she said is primed for another big performance.

"The weather should be nice and hot," she said. "I expect to jump well because my family will be there and this is my last collegiate Texas Relays."

Wildcat junior pole-vaulter and 2005 NCAA Indoor All-American Breanna Eveland will compete in her first Texas Relays.

"This will be my first year going, so I am very excited," Eveland said.

"I know it is a big meet and there will be a lot of competition there, but I do not really know what to expect."

Eveland and K-State junior high jumper Kyle Lancaster were recently named the Big 12 Athletes of the Week for their performances at last weekend's meet in El Paso, Texas.

Eveland, from Grand Rapids, Mich., tied the outdoor school record with a vault of 13-09 1/2.

Lancaster, from Fort Scott, Kan., jumped a school-record height of 7-07, which also earned him the United States Track Coaches Association Athlete of the Week honor.

Lancaster will not compete this weekend, however.

"As much as I enjoy the Texas Relays, it will be nice to have the weekend off," he said.

Other K-State athletes scheduled to compete in Texas include sophomore jumper Candice Mills, sophomore hurdler Lisi Maurer and senior jumper Stelios Kapsalis.

Rowers to compete against KU

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and the University of Kansas will renew a rivalry this weekend, as the ninth Kansas Cup rowing battle will take place at 9 a.m. this Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Last time out, K-State's Varsity 8 crew finished in sixth place in the finals of the San Diego Crew Classic due to a technical error.

K-State caught a crab–when the blade goes underneath the boat and stops it–last weekend, just as the team was making a push for first place.

The error dropped the Wildcats from third to sixth, and they finished last in the heat. Even so, it was the best finish at the race for K-State since coming in fourth in 2001-02.

Head coach Patrick Sweeney said he believed the Wildcats will use last weekend as a building block for the rest of the season.

"It will motivate the team to finish the second half of the season stronger," Sweeney said. "They will be really focused on doing well in the second part of the season."

Since K-State added rowing as a varsity sport in 1996, the Wildcats and Jayhawks have gone head-to-head in the spring for the Kansas Cup, with each school facilitating the event every other year.

K-State has not won the Kansas Cup since the 1997-98 season.

However, the Wildcats did beat the Jayhawks in the annual Sunflower Showdown last November in Lawrence. In last year's race, the Wildcats' Varsity 8 team finished behind Kansas, but the Novice 8 team pulled off a victory in the three-team race.

Coach Sweeney said he felt that there is an added element to the race because of the history between the two schools.

"It's a natural rivalry," Sweeney said. "So the intensity goes up."

The next race for the Wildcats after Saturday will be the Southern IRA's April 16-17 at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

Debate focuses on Ag policies

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State professor and his former student debated on Ag Policy Thursday night as part of AgFest 2005.

AgFest, which is sponsored by the College of Agriculture Student Council, presented the debate between Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural policy, and Mark Edelman, a former K-State student and the public policy economist at Iowa State University.

The two have debated in front of several agriculture groups since 1986. They have also written several point-counterpoint articles.

The first topic brought up was the subject of the future of farm policy. Flinchbaugh was confident that by 2007, a new farm policy will be passed by Congress.

Another topic was the national deficit and its relationship to farm spending.

"It's easier to maintain farm spending when we aren't dealing with a deficit," Edelman said.

However, Flinchbaugh disagreed.

"There is no correlation between farm spending and the budget deficit," he said.

Flinchbaugh said the real issue about farm programs is the market.

"The issue is surrounding the level of market distortion," he said. "Farm bills will affect the markets, and all farm programs are market-distorted."

Flinchbaugh said there are seven options for farm programs.

His options were marketing loans, counter-cyclical payments, decoupled fixed payments, farm savings accounts, conservation programs, energy programs or insurance vouchers.

The current farm bill was written by Tom Daschle and Larry Combest and was introduced in 2001.

Edelman said he liked discussing agricultural policy because of the difference of opinion.

"Policy isn't an exact science; there will be some level of debate," he said.

Debating with Flinchbaugh is enjoyable, Edelman said.

"He's always fun and colorful. He's educational, and he always incorporates stories to point out the point he's trying to make," he said.

Student to spin 'Wheel of Fortune'

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some of the Midwest's finest, including K-State's own Lauren Lindahl, will be taking their spin at the wheel this weekend on NBC's hit game show "Wheel of Fortune."

Lindahl, junior in management, will be competing in a taping of the show's "Big 12 Week" series on Saturday, April 9 at Bartle Hall in Kansas City, Mo.

She is the only contestant from K-State.

"I've always been addicted to the show, and when I heard they were coming to Kansas City I thought it would be the perfect opportunity to try it," Lindahl said.

In addition to filling out an application, Lindahl had to go through a series of auditions in order to be selected for the show. The audition required Lindahl to drive to Kansas City where there were about 50 students, from both K-State and the University of Kansas.

The competitors attempted to solve problems to make sure that they knew how to play the game and there was a written test to determine speed and accuracy.

Following was a more intense series of the game where the judges were concentrating more on personality and showmanship.

"We had to speak a little in front of the people and tell about ourselves to prove that we could compose ourselves in front of others," Lindahl said.

Considering that "Wheel of Fortune" is the number one program in the history of syndicated television, watched by more than 16 million viewers each evening in the United States and 100 million weekly viewers worldwide, Lindahl admits she is a a little nervous.

"Every day I keep getting more and more nervous, but I'm trying to stay calm," she said.

She is preparing for the wheel by watching the show every day, and taking note of how the show is moving along and how the contestants are reacting.

Along with other K-State students, many of her close friends and family will be in the audience on Saturday to cheer her on.

Mike Edwards, junior in marketing, is one of Lindahl's friends going to Kansas City to watch her compete.

"I have a feeling she'll represent K-State well," he said.

"She's always doing crossword puzzles, and I'm sure that helps her out a lot as well," Edwards said.

Lindahl said having supporters in the audience will make the experience even better.

"I'm really blessed that they are taping it in Kansas City so that my family and friends can come," she said.

This is an amazing opportunity that many people don't get to have, so I'm just going to enjoy myself, and if I win then great, but I'm really just going to have fun with it."

The Wheel of Fortune Big 12 College Week show is set to air sometime during the week of May 15 on CBS.

Dignitaries arrive at Vatican for funeral

By Arthur Max
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Five months after he was elected to the Throne of St. Peter, 58-year-old John Paul II took up his pen and began writing thoughts about his death. Still vigorous in the early years of his papacy, he worried about threats to his church and to his native land.

Over the years, as his health declined, awareness of his own mortality grew. The assassination attempt in 1981 weighed heavily on him.

"All the more deeply, I now feel that I am totally in the hands of God," he wrote the year after he was wounded in an entry in his last will.

In 2000, 80 years old and feeling the debilitating effects of Parkinson's Disease, he wondered if he should resign. He prayed that God would "help me to recognize up to what point I must continue this service."

The document released by the Vatican on Thursday provides extraordinary insight into the thinking of John Paul II, who died Saturday at age 84.

Probably alone in his apartments, he reviewed his testament during the month of Lent, a time of reflection for Catholics. Writing in Polish in longhand, he amended or added to his testament in five years – sometimes with more than one entry and once with a single line asking for Masses and prayers after his death.

"The times in which we live are unutterably difficult and disturbed," he wrote in 1980, a time when his native Poland was in turmoil and under a communist yoke.

"The path of the church has also become difficult and tense ... both for the faithful and for pastors."

It was in those turbulent times that John Paul II instructed his faithful personal secretary, Archbishop Stanislaw Dziwisz, to burn his personal notes – an order he never rescinded or referred to again in the testament over the next 25 years.

The contents of those notes will never be known.

Publication of John Paul's last will came on the eve of his funeral, which promised to be one of the largest Western religious gatherings of modern times.

It was conducted with the pomp of an ancient liturgy and attended by royalty, political power brokers and multitudes of the faithful.

Throngs of pilgrims – the hardiest of some 4 million who flooded Rome – were rewarded for holding out after police closed off the line Wednesday night, waiting to view John Paul's remains in St. Peter's Basilica.

In the morning, the barriers were lifted for more mourners as the numbers who said a personal farewell approached 2 million. The basilica's towering bronze doors were closed late Thursday.

As dignitaries poured into the city, Rome's security agencies – bolstered by NATO surveillance aircraft overhead – cranked up their defenses for everything from terrorism to unruly crowds.

President Bush, along with former presidents Bill Clinton and George H.W. Bush, knelt and prayed at the side of the pope's bier Wednesday night.

Church celebrates 150 years

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The services taking place this weekend at the First United Methodist Church of Manhattan will be celebrating a major event in the church's long history.

On April 10, the church will be celebrating its 150th anniversary during each of their three services at 8:30, 8:45 and 11 a.m. A special celebration dinner at the K-State Alumni Center will follow each service.

Rev. Mitch Todd, associate pastor of worship and campus ministries for the church, said the day should be enjoyable.

"It should be a very pleasant time for everyone involved in the church as well as the community of Manhattan," he said.

Todd said special music has been chosen for the event, and there will be multiple choirs performing. In addition, a music piece based on Psalm 150 will be sung in honor of the sesquicentennial.

Todd said this is an exciting time for the church, as well as the community.

"The history of the church and the city of Manhattan along with the university itself are greatly intertwined. Some of the founders of the church had ties with the university during the school's inception," he said.

Rev. Jim Reed, senior pastor of the church, said the celebration will also be a homecoming for the church.

"Seven of our former pastors are returning, giving people a wonderful opportunity to see them," he said.

Reed said the K-State Alumni Center was the ideal place to host the banquet due to the large number of guests expected to attend and the historical significance behind it.

"Because of the history tie-ins between the university and the church, having the banquet at the K-State Alumni Center fits in wonderfully with what we are celebrating. One of the original pastors, Rev. Joseph Denison, served for 10 years as the first president of K-State," he said.

Reed also said that as a guest speaker for the event new bishop, Scott Jones, will be preaching at all three services. Jones, who resides in Wichita, will be speaking for the first time in Manhattan. His sermon is entitled "Pay it Forward for Christ."

Twinkle, twinkle little star

Students observe stars at Spillway State Park

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Stars are born and will continue to be born."

Todd Tuttle, founder and president of North Central Kansas Astronomical Society, spoke these words while leading a stargazing demonstration to K-State students Thursday evening at Spillway State Park.

Star-gazing is done about every two weeks and is a part of descriptive astronomy.

The gazing is done at Spillway State Park because it is outside of Manhattan light pollution, but still is close enough for the students, Tuttle said.

Students viewed the Great Orion nebula, Jupiter, Saturn and the ghost of Jupiter through two different telescopes.

Tuttle, who has been stargazing for 30 years, explained stars, planets and their differences in twinkling.

"Stars twinkle because they are different points of light going through the atmosphere. Planets don't twinkle because they aren't single points of light," he said.

Tuttle said NCKAS is working with K-State to bring a public observatory to campus.

The observatory would be a permanent home for the 18" telescope that is in the shutdown observatory in Cardwell, Tuttle said.

Jeff McBride, sophomore in accounting, said his favorite part of the evening was viewing Saturn through a telescope.

Erin McBride, senior in biology and secondary education, thought Jupiter was the best highlight of the evening.

"I like astronomy because its the same stars everyone has seen through humanity.

"The great people of the past have seen the same stars as us," she said.

Beauty on the Beach begins; all finalists to receive cash prize

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is that time of year again.

Spring is in the air, it doesn't get dark at 5 p.m. anymore and Beauty on the Beach, Manhattan's premiere beauty competition, began another contest.

The first night of competition was Wednesday, and it will continue every Wednesday for the next four weeks with three more preliminary rounds and one finals round.

Beauty on the Beach began in 1993. It was originally intended to take place at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, but the flood of 1993 prevented this from happening. Event coordinators decided not to cancel the event but instead moved it to Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, said Eric Weber, sales manager at KMKF studios.

"Ever since then, the competition has increased in both prizes and in quality; this is Northeast Kansas' premiere swimsuit competition," Weber said.

This year, every girl who is in the finals will win money. The first place winner receives $1,500, Weber said.

"This is the largest amount of cash and prizes we've ever had," he said. "There is $4,000 dollars in cash to be given out and over $5,000 total in cash and prizes."

Dayna Wiegers, events coordinator for Beauty on the Beach, is in charge of recruiting girls for the contest. Wiegers was once a contestant in Beauty on the Beach. Three years ago, she was a winner in the B-104 calendar contest. She then helped with many radio promotions for the various stations, until she became the main coordinator for Beauty and the Beach.

"I recruit all the girls for the contest," Wiegers said. "If girls have questions or need help with their outfit, I am the one they come to."

One of the six girls that competed on Wednesday was Athena Mai, dancer at Mustang's Gentlemen's Club. She was one of four finalists of the night and will be moving on to the finals round at the end of April.

"This is my second time competing; the first time I went to the finals and tied for second," Mai said. "I was hanging out at the bar when Dayna approached me and said that I would be excellent for the competition."

Judges for the competition that night included disc jockeys from 101.5 KMKF, employees from Rusty's Last Chance, and Lyndsey Brown and Rachel Long, employees at Sun Connection in Aggieville.

"We love it," Brown said. "It is great to see classy girls that represent K-State."

Keys to learning

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Mary Ellen Sutton, professor of music, instructs Meghan Spriggs, junior in communication sciences and disorders, during an organ lesson in the All Faiths Chapel. Sutton has been giving organ and piano lessons for more than 40 years.

Professor teaches art of organ to K-State students

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mary Ellen Sutton counts to herself as Monica Miller, senior in landscape architecture, plays the organ in All Faiths Chapel. As her fingers land on the last chord, Sutton notices something wrong. She goes to the organ, flips a few switches, pulls a nob and plays the same chord over. A new sound emerges from the hundreds of pipes.

"It's a big C-major chord," Sutton told Miller. "It's like the sun's come out after the clouds break."

Sutton, professor of organ in the K-State music department, has been giving students like Miller organ and piano lessons for more than 40 years, 31 at K-State.

She teaches organ studio, a one-credit hour course open to both music and non-music majors.

Sutton first learned to play the organ and piano when she was in high school and has been playing ever since.

She first studied the organ so she could play for her church, and she has continued this practice. Sutton is the organ player for the First United Methodist Church of Manhattan.

Sutton said she is proud of opportunities her students will have to play the organ.

"Most of these students will go on and play organ in their communities," Sutton said.

"It's nice seeing them grow and start playing in their own churches."

Sutton teaches almost 13 credit hours a week at K-State, including a music history course.

However, she said that she prefers the one-on-one atmosphere that studios provide.

When teaching the organ, Sutton must do more then instruct her pupils on what keys make what notes.

With organs, there are more tones, volumes and pitches than a piano.

"Part of what they are learning is how to use the different sounds," Sutton said.

Sutton started studying the organ after she decided that she wanted to become more proficient in piano.

Learning the organ allowed her to accomplish that goal and gain knowledge of a different, more challenging instrument.

"Once you learn the organ, you can probably play the piano just as well," she said.

After Miller practices another song and discusses her progress with Sutton, she leaves, and Meghan Spriggs, junior in communication sciences and disorders, slips off her street shoes and takes her place at the bench.

The organ is played with both the hands and the feet, so Spriggs, along with all organ performers, must change from traditional shoes to a special, leather-soled pair made especially for playing the organ.

"The organ is a lot different then the piano, because you have to play with your feet," Spriggs said, as she prepared for her lesson.

"You have to be able to walk and chew gum at the same time to play the organ," Sutton said.

Spriggs practices four to five times a week.

Spriggs and Miller, along with the rest of Sutton's pupils, are preparing for a recital April 21 in All Faiths Chapel.

Marcel Dupré's "Opus 18" will be performed by 11 of Sutton's students at 5:45 p.m.

As Spriggs begins to play, Sutton starts tapping her feet and counting with the music.

She moves to the organ from time to time, flipping switches to change sounds.

Through her 40 years of teaching, Sutton has provided churches with new organ players.

"I think one of the things I enjoy most is seeing the students' progress," she said.

Laser eye surgery now offered

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new eye procedure is now offered in Manhattan.

Mosier Eye Care, located at 2900 Amherst Ave., began using Laser Assisted In Situ Keratomileusis laser surgery in February. LASIK treats a range of people, including those who are nearsighted and farsighted, as well as those with astigmatism.

According to VISX STAR Patient Information Booklet, LASIK treatments correct nearsightedness by flattening the central part of the cornea to reduce the refractive eye power.

LASIK treatments correct farsightedness by making the central part of the cornea more curved. Astigmatism corrections bring all rays of light from different focal points to one.

Dr. Susan Mosier, ophthalmologist, said the qualifications for the procedure are health and no eye diseases. Candidates must be at least 18 years old.

An evaluation and consultation is done before the surgery. The cost of the evaluation is $125, while the LASIK procedure is $1,600 per eye.

"Even if a patient doesn't follow through with having the surgery, the evaluation is still a good thorough eye exam," Mosier said.

Mosier said the surgery came to Manhattan by popular demand and patients not wanting to travel to a different eye doctor to have the procedure done.

Patients used to have to travel to Kansas City or Wichita to have the surgery.

"It's nice to be able to offer something that compliments what we already do," Mosier said.

Jenny Lees, medical assistant at Mosier and Mosier Family Physicians, had LASIK surgery March 11 in Manhattan.

Lees said she had always wanted to have the surgery. She wore glasses and contacts for about 15 years.

She said the pushing point in wanting the surgery was when she was watching TV with her husband one evening. Lees, who was nearsighted, had trouble reading the TV screen.

"The opportunity arose, I was due for an eye exam anyway, and it was convenient since the surgery is now offered in town," she said.

The day after the surgery, Lees had her activities were then limited for two weeks.

Lees' life has changed positively since having the surgery.

"It's great being able to wake up in the morning and see my alarm clock. It's so much easier not having to worry about contacts or glasses," she said.

Soccer shootout to benefit charities

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Delta Delta Delta sorority and Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity are hosting a soccer shootout in the Memorial Stadium Sunday.

"I hope participants are able to come out and play soccer in this nice weather and hope they understand what it's for," said Kelly Maze, sophomore in pre-nursing.

The groups are having the tournament to benefit their philanthropies which are the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the Children's Cancer Research Fund.

"Anything that we get is extremely helpful," Mindy Lesline, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said.

Will Janousek, sophomore in fisheries and wildlife biology and external vice president of Lambda Chi Alpha, said the goal for the tournament was to make it a prominent philanthropy.

"Too often greek philanthropies allow only greek participants," Janousek said. "However, this year we believe we've met our goal with a total of 25 teams both greek and non-greek."

This was the first year for the tournament.

Lesline said the organization needs donations because of the amount of food coming in for the summer.

"Kids are out of school and families are needing to put food on the table," she said.

Delta Delta Delta's philanthropy is the Children's Cancer Research Fund.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket is the philanthropy for Lambda Chi Alpha.

"Lambda Chi is a good organization," Lesline said.

"They do good for the community, and they help us out a lot."

Lesline said having a group like Lambda Chi Alpha promoting their cause is helpful to the organization.

"They're giving our name to people," Lesline said. "People don't realize that even a dollar helps do something."

It is too late to sign up to play, Janousek said this tournament is already more successful than last year's tournament.

"We hope that all teams participating have a great time supporting two awesome causes," he said.

"It's really not about winning or losing, but giving back to the community."

Sadam's enemies take oath in Iraq

By Traci Carl
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Cementing Iraq's first democratic government in 50 years, one of Saddam Hussein's most implacable enemies took his oath as president Thursday and quickly named another longtime foe of the ousted dictator to the powerful post of prime minister.

The new government's main task will be to draft a permanent constitution and lay the groundwork for elections in December, although some worry that the two months of political wrangling taken up in forming the leadership hasn't left enough time.

The swearing-in ceremony came just two days short of the second anniversary of Baghdad's fall to U.S.-led forces and underlined the growing power and cooperation of the Shiite Arab majority and Kurdish minority _ groups that were long oppressed by Saddam's regime.

There were stumbles, though.

After his inaugural speech, interim President Jalal Talabani, a Kurd, walked off the stage, and members of the National Assembly and onlookers began to disperse and television feeds were cut.

Talabani came back about 10 minutes later and had to shout to a dwindling crowd that the President's Council _ Talabani and his two vice presidents _ had, as expected, selected Shiite Arab leader Ibrahim al-Jaafari as interim prime minister.

Senior Kurdish official Barham Saleh blamed the misstep on miscommunication, saying lawmakers didn't realize the ceremony hadn't ended with Talabani's speech.

Some Shiite lawmakers felt snubbed.

"We hope that they forgot," said Abbas Hassan Mousa al-Bayati, a top member of al-Jafaari's Shiite-dominated United Iraqi Alliance. "This happened because of bad management."

Al-Jaafari didn't seem upset, telling reporters afterward: "This day represents a democratic process and a step forward."

"I'm faced with a big responsibility, and I pray to God that everyone will work hand-in-hand and that their efforts will lead to progress and development," he added.

Some Iraqis have expressed concern about al-Jaafari's close ties to the Islamic government in Iran and his work for the conservative Islamic Dawa Party, which has called for the implementation of Islamic law. But lawmakers didn't express any reservations Thursday.

Al-Jaafari said women will play a bigger role in his government, and he promised to fight the violence of the insurgency.

"There are two kinds of terrorism: terrorism from inside Iraq _ and these are criminals, some of them with ties to the former regime _ and the other is the terrorism exported from abroad," he said.

Iraq's new leaders were longtime foes of Saddam, who watched a videotape of Talabani's election Wednesday but was not expected to be shown Thursday's ceremony.

Al-Jaafari spent more than two decades in exile helping to lead anti-Saddam opposition forces among Shiite Arabs, while Talabani was one of the most influential leaders in the resistance of ethnic Kurds to Saddam as well as Arab domination.

Shiite Arabs and Kurds have worked together in putting the government together, and Talabani _ whose post is largely ceremonial _ reached out Thursday to Sunni Arabs, who are believed to make up the backbone of the insurgency and were the dominant group under Saddam.

"It is time for our Sunni brothers to participate in the democratic march," the president said.

Lawmakers have appointed Sunni Arabs to several top posts in an effort to build a broad-based government, but prominent Sunni Arab groups have distanced themselves from the new administration.

Sunni Arabs have only 17 seats in parliament, largely because many boycotted the Jan. 30 elections or stayed home for fear of attacks at the polls. Shiites have 140 of the 275 seats in the National Assembly, while Kurds have the second largest bloc with 75 seats.

Artifacts stolen from Kansas Cosmosphere

By Matt Sedensky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The co-founder of a Kansas museum that houses a nationally recognized collection of space memorabilia stole dozens of artifacts, sold them and pocketed the profits, prosecutors said Thursday.

Max Ary was instrumental in transforming a small-town planetarium into the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center, which he led for 27 years.

He is named in an 11-count federal indictment filed in Wichita, Kan., that claims he stole a number of the Hutchinson, Kan., museum's prized possessions – many on loan from NASA.

The grand jury's indictment said Ary made around $180,000 by selling the objects, including the nose of a rocket, an astronaut's in-flight T-shirt, a control panel from Air Force One and an Apollo 12 water valve.

Cosmosphere president Jeff Ollenburger, who assumed Ary's post after he left the museum in September 2002, said more than 100 items are unaccounted for, only a third of which are noted in the indictment.

Jim Cross, a spokesman for U.S. Attorney Eric Melgren, said the court filing was not intended to be a "laundry list" of thefts, simply those for which prosecutors had significant evidence.

Wichita attorney Lee Thompson, who is representing Ary, said there are inconsistencies in the government's case.

In 2003, after Ary's departure, the center's board of directors first became aware that artifacts apparently had been sold without its approval and that the museum did not receive the money.

The court filing details four auctions from October 1999 to May 2001 in which Ary allegedly sold 92 items for around $180,000, all deposited in his own personal account.

DANCE | Performance at McCain

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Jenn Mayekawa (center), freshman in food and nutrition-exercise science, performs the dance "The In Crowd," Wednesday evening for K-State's SpringDance 2005 rehearsals. Tickets for the performance can be purchased at the McCain box office or by calling 532-6428.

by Saylor Burgess, sophomore in dance, and it is performed by Gabrielle James, sophomore in business administration.

The fourth section is Friend's "Prayer" to music by Satie. Friend choreographed it for a dance composition class and then, as part of her grade, had to audition it for SpringDance. It was one of the six selected.

Friend said "Prayer" is a sad piece.

"It is about a rape victim trying to overcome her attack and how she turns to God to help her through it," she said. "She is sad and angered about it and is trying to find release."

Friend's passion for rape victims, as well as her spirituality, all came together in the creation of this number, she said.

The fifth section of "Classical Shorts" is "Marionette," choreographed by Alison Fortney and performed by Hayley Cherveny, senior in dance. It is a modern/jazz dance to the music of "Carmen," by Bizet.

The last part is a group piece, "The In Crowd," choreographed by Amanda Slead, junior in dance.

The 10 performers are a mix of dance and non-dance students.

Throughout this piece about being part of a group, attempting to break away from it and ultimately being brought back, the dancers pass around a red scarf through the piece.

"The scarf indicates that that person has gotten away from the group," Slead said.

It ends with one woman holding the scarf and diving back into the group.

Slead, with Gabrielle Hunter, also created "Liberated Restraint." The piece, debuted in WinterDance 2004, was performed at the American College Dance Festival in March and will reappear in this weekend's performances.

The modern lyrical dance, performed barefoot, features a black folding chair that the two performers dance on and around.

The choreography came to Slead and Hunter one day when they entered a studio, empty except for a chair.

They began dancing and the piece, a statement about the restraint of women in society, was created.

"We found a song we really liked and there were some things going on in both of our lives, personal things, that influenced our movement and our idea," Slead said.

In addition to student-choreographed pieces, four faculty members created dances.

Joyce Yagerline, associate professor of dance, choreographed two ballet numbers, "Claire de Lune" and "Prajna."

SpringDance 2005 will show at 8 tonight and Saturday night in McCain Auditorium.

Tickets can be purchased at the box office or by calling 532-6428. Student and senior citizen tickets are $7 and general tickets are $11.

ELECTIONS | CBM, ballot questions influenced Manhattan voters

vote no sign and only a few feet away is one of my yard signs, it has an effect."

Free Press Publisher Jon Brake said issues such as Sherow's support of a living wage contributed more to Sherow's drop.

"He put on a very good campaign, I think he was just saying the wrong things," Brake said.

In addition to the marriage amendment, both candidates said CBM influenced voters.

Commissioner Hatesohl said CBM's push to get voters to the primary polls while he was not campaigning may have artificially inflated the results.

"The primary was just a little bit of a fluke," he said. "The CBM people got their voters out for the primary, and a lot of the rest of the people didn't turn out in as high a percentage."

The organization, Hatesohl said, may have also alienated voters with the way they selected the candidates they endorsed.

"A lot of people didn't like what the Citizens for a Better Manhattan group was doing," he said.

"Before they even decided who to endorse, they ruled me out," Hatesohl said, referring to the group's decision to leave him out of the public forums.

"They knew going in that they were going to endorse Jayme and Jim, and it was just a matter of picking the lesser of the other evils," Hatesohl said.

In addition, Hatesohl said many people discounted the group because they knew who was behind the organization.

"The people who pay attention knew the people involved with CBM tended to be more liberal democrats, so the people who don't vote liberal democrat just realized that it's just those guys with another organization," he said. "They sort of had their minds made up before they even went into the interview process."

Sherow said while it was true CBM was trying to alter the outcome, they were no different than other groups. Other organizations, Sherow said, were operating in a secretive manner.

"CBM gets chastised for putting together a PAC, but all of this was publicly done," he said. "All of this received public input and no one from the public was excluded from these meetings."

Wade Radina, co-chair of Citizens for a Better Manhattan, said the organization gave Hatesohl a chance.

"We interviewed Mark, and we think he's a fine commissioner," Radina said. "Mark's poor showing in the primary has more to do with Mark."

Radina said, despite the public perception that the group has a liberal slant, Phillips was the leading vote-getter and the recipient of a CBM endorsement.

As far as Hatesohl is concerned, the main factor contributing to his surge in the polls was hard work.

Despite Sherow's drop, his fate is not yet sealed.

Scarcely a dozen votes separated Sherow, Morris-Hardeman and fifth-place finisher Sam Robinson, with more than 100 provisional ballots left to be considered.

Provisional ballots are ballots cast by voters whose legitimacy has been questioned Provisional ballot questions will be resolved by Monday.

"Just a few votes either way, no matter how they're influenced matters," Sherow said. "It's anybody's guess; these folks come from all over the city."

FORT RILEY | Arrival of soldiers could benefit community, schools

soldiers will be married, which means 1,900 families. In addition, she anticipates 1,300 geographic bachelors – married soldiers whose spouse didn't move with them or single soldiers living in the communities.

"They all need off-post housing," Robinson said. "Fort Riley is technically full for on-post housing. There are no plans to increase the housing capacity."

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has appointed a task force to protect the communities surrounding Kansas' four military installations – Fort Leavenworth, Fort Riley, McConnell Air Force Base and the 190th Air Refueling Wing at Forbes Field. A 24-member task force, led by Lt. Gov. John Moore, is serving as an advocate for Kansas bases. The concern is with the federal government determining the viability of military installations and possible closure.

"Our military bases contribute over $2 billion a year to the Kansas economy and result in tens of thousands of jobs in Kansas," Sebelius said in a news release.

John Armbrust, executive director of the Governor's Strategic Military Planning Commission, said the state economy will see a $256 million input because of market growth.

"That's the first couple of years," he said. "We can't guess too much more than that."

Based on the estimate of 3,400 new soldiers, the region – communities within a 20-mile radius of the base including Manhattan and Junction City – will require 1,900 additional housing units.

"We are looking and seeing what's on the books to be built and what vacancies are there today," Armbrust said. "We have an opportunity in this region."

There are homes available in Manhattan for the population influx, however many will not be a good fit for the new families.

"There are vacant homes available but not many particularly of quality and that's they we are looking at trying to build additional affordable housing. It's not a black and white answer," Armbrust said. "There's not enough to handle everything."

As of January the following housing options had been approved for development in Manhattan: 73 single family home lots; 18 duplex/townhomes ($110,000-175,000); 48 single family homes ($150,000-$200,000); 239 apartments ($350/$400 month); 317 single family/duplexes ($90,000-$175,000); and 121 single family/duplexes ($150,000-$250,000).

U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., toured Fort Riley on March 29 and said it is in good condition.

"The Manhattan and Junction City communities, along with the state task force, have been doing a tremendous job in regards to housing, schools, highways, daycare, hospitals, and all quality of life issues," he said.

Michele Jones, USD 383 Manhattan-Ogden school district spokeswoman, said the district is expecting 500 new students by next March.

"We are able to handle all of those students without opening another building or anything," she said. "From that logistics point of view, we're ready to go."

The logistics of how many teachers will be needed as well as how the new students will change the culture of the school are difficult to predict, Jones said.

"From our point of view, we are working with the child services department at Fort Riley," she said. "They will come in April and do a military 101 class and talk about the acronyms they use and the things we should expect about the situations students are coming from."

Jones said the growth should mean more revenue for the district. However, much of that depends on a proposal to state legislators to institute a second count day on Feb. 20. Currently, districts are funded based on how many students are enrolled on Sept. 20. The second day would add military students.

Armbrust said Manhattan is likely to benefit from the growth from different perspectives.

"People choose where they are going to live," he said. "You need to find affordable housing. You want good schools and a high quality of life. Manhattan offers that."

After the 3,400 troops are situated at Fort Riley, there is the possibility for future growth.

"I think the most exciting thing about this, is these 3,400 troops could just be the very beginning of additional troops coming," Jones said.

"The region as a whole has a lot to gain from this."

Colleges prepare to show their best

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of K-State's largest collaborative campus events, the All-University Open House, will take place Saturday.

High school students from all over the country will travel to Manhattan on Saturday to explore K-State's vast opportunities and offerings.

With more than 200 majors and 375 campus organizations represented, open house will attract prospective students and will require a great deal of effort and group organization from the nine colleges on campus.

While the K-State Student Union will be full of booths, many of the individual colleges' main events and attractions will be held in their respective locations. Read on to discover what each individual college has to offer for open house 2005.

AGRICULTURE

The College of Agriculture will be keeping students' stomachs full with its pancake feed, food tests, free cheese, doughnuts and grain science bakes. On the other hand, there will also be an insect zoo and cockroach races for those interested in entomology. Also, tours of the University Gardens and a water garden landscape will be included for the aesthetically inclined.

"Our approach is to let each department kind of set their own agenda and work with the clubs in those departments," Kevin Donnelly, assistant dean of agriculture, said.

He said the College of Agriculture's events are spread across campus and students should wander past the Union and into the world of agriculture in Seaton, Waters, Shellenberger, Weber and Throckmorton Halls.

ARCHITECTURE, PLANNING AND DESIGN

Guests will have the opportunity to judge creative sculpture designs made from cans and boxes of foods put together by the college's students and faculty. There will also be displays of student projects for viewing and a grand opening tour of the ground floor of the east wing of Seaton Hall, which was completely remodeled as a part of a fifth-year studio student design project.

Diane Potts, assistant to the dean, said students have put a lot of effort into the displays and projects. Funding for the college's portion of open house was provided by existing funds and donations from area businesses, she said.

"We hope that (visitors) will learn something about the creativity, quality and diversity that makes our college so unique," Potts said.

ARTS AND SCIENCES

Similar to years before, the College of Arts and Sciences will depict its advantages in every department, including pre-health, pre-law and open option, through tables set up on the lower floor of the Union.

There will be many open house favorites like tight-rope walking rats with the Department of Psychology, mini-language classes with the Department of Modern Languages and glass blowing with the Department of Chemistry. Also, there will be a number of demonstrations by the physics department in Cardwell Hall throughout the day.

Alison Wheatley, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said prospective and current students alike will find the college interesting.

"They will get a sense of all the exciting possibilities here. Almost anything they're interested in, they can find a way to explore it through our college," Wheatley said.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Current business students will introduce the Business Administration Pre-Professions Program (BAPP) to visitors in Calvin Hall, and members of Alpha Kappa Psi, K-State's professional business fraternity, will entertain guests with a game of business trivia. Also in store are presentations from the Study Abroad Advocates, the Multicultural Business Association and The Marketing Club.

One of the main open house focuses of the College of Business Administration is to get visitors to talk with students, faculty and advisers from different business clubs and organizations so they can find their niche.

EDUCATION AND HONORS

Current students will be leading interactive activities for guests in kindergarten through grade 12. The activities include typing contests and science and math activities. Also, the agricultural education students will be making plastic.

A booth in the Union will also be set up with information about career opportunities, clubs and activities available to education students.

Alicia Bailey, who works for Student Services for the College of Education, said the day will give students a good idea of what is going on in the College of Education.

"People will see that our college is dedicated to producing quality educators," Bailey said.

ENGINEERING

With many new and exciting exhibits, the College of Engineering is approaching this year's open house with the theme of "Reinventing Reality."

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of engineering, said many student organizations like the Solar Car, Concrete Canoe and Model Tractor competitive groups will be presenting displays and activities.

"You'll get to see a real concrete canoe and a solar car that they are going to race in Australia, which is worth over $6,000 itself," he said.

Visitors will also have the opportunity to explore video game designs, the latest technology in wind tunnels, automated manufacturing systems and computer applications, and they can also take a tour of research/teaching nuclear reactors on campus.

HUMAN ECOLOGY

With lunch at the open-air cafe run by students, a preschool picnic, trivia, games, ice sculptures, a catwalk and more, the College of Human Ecology will be an eventful place to explore.

Mostly located in Justin Hall, some of the day's events include free hearing assessments, explorations of the life of a child, a food guide pyramid walk and fashion shows with designs by students and professionals. The college also plans to show off its interior design gallery, ranked third in the country.

Cara Richardson, events director for the College of Human Ecology, said the college's budget for open house has been cut slightly, but by combining popular activities from last year with new ones, she hopes that interest in the college will remain strong.

"We got a lot less funding than we did in the years past, but we're working with what they gave us," Richardson said.

VETERINARY MEDICINE

Some of the traditional College of Veterinary Medicine open house highlights are the porkburger lunch, fistulated cows, a petting zoo, club and vendor exhibits, and various unusual and intriguing class exhibits.

This year the college has added 30-minute speeches on current topics in veterinary medicine by five professors.

Most events, new and old, will take place in Trotter and Mosier Hall.

Ashley Feinberg, co-chairperson of Student Open House for the College of Veterinary Medicine, said the day should be fun and informative.

"Students can take guided tours through the facilities and speak with current vet students about our curriculum or anything else they are curious about," she said.

In order to fund the fun, student representatives for veterinary pharmaceutical and pet food companies have obtained donations. The dean of the college also donates money to the function every year.

Open House to feature Las Vegas theme, obstacle course

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All-University Open House planners are using innovative techniques and activities to draw in a crowd of about 20,000 people.

Although open house is traditionally geared toward prospective students, there are many activities scheduled that will appeal to younger children, parents and current K-State students.

"It's a good opportunity to encourage current students to get involved," Tamara Bowles, senior in life sciences and leadership studies, said.

"There are a lot of fun events to help out with."

The K-State Student Union will be housing an activities carnival with many university clubs and student organizations on display.

Every part of the university gets involved, said Laura Modlin, senior in marketing and entrepreneurship management.

Greek organizations, residence halls, colleges and the athletic department have come together to show visitors and students what K-State is all about.

"Everyone really wants to show off how great K-State is," Bowles said.

Modlin and Bowles have worked together on the entertainment committee for open house in years past and are the event's student coordinators this year.

The theme this year is "Welcome to Fabulous K-State Open House," with a Las Vegas premise.

"A lot of colleges are centering around a game show idea with free beads and other stuff," Modlin said.

Matt King, sophomore in political science, is working on the entertainment committee for a second year.

It is King's responsibility to get athletes involved.

"(Athletes) come and do an obstacle course and sign posters," he said.

The obstacle course is designed to appeal to younger children.

Some of the other events include a concert, a climbing wall, a game of Fear Factor, a Little American Royal rodeo and more.

Modlin said the success of open house reflects "how much the university cares about students."

Welding contest, GlobalFlyer simulation featured at Salina open house

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina will offer an array of activities for visitors and students at the All-University Open House Saturday.

Kristin Magette, coordinator for K-State-Salina public and alumni relations, said the day's events will be taking place across campus in all of the different departments.

Magette said one of the higher profile events is "Mission to Mars."

The event will feature Russian Cosmonaut Yuriy Usachev and Alexander Martynov, Head of Foreign Relations Department, Administration of Korolev.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of K-State-Salina, said "Mission to Mars" is an exciting opportunity for people.

Other features include the annual Wildcat Fly-In, where pilots fly in for breakfast, a simulation of GlobalFlyer and Weld-A-Thon.

The Weld-A-Thon involves around a dozen students welding a project with a K-State theme.

Students collect pledges for the event, and the project will be auctioned at the end of the day.

The money is then donated to a charitable cause, Magette said.

Kuhlman said the open house is a good opportunity for the community and region to see what K-State-Salina is about.

The open house events could bring as many as 750 people to the campus, Magette said.

"People should come to open house because it is a really fun day with a lot of hands-on activities," she said.

How to get there

- Take I-70 west and stay on until the I-70/I-135 interchange
- Follow the interchange south to exit 90 (Magnolia Street)
- Go west on Magnolia to Centennial Road.
- Turn right on Centennial and proceed to the K-State-Salina campus.

Students to wage scientific war with grapefruit

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two K-State departments will face off with ancient machines of war in front of Cardwell Hall at the All-University Open House Saturday. The K-State chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the K-State Physics Club will wage a scientific struggle, firing grapefruit projectiles from trebuchets each team constructed.

The competition was initiated by Asma Al-Rawi, junior in physics and the president of the Physics Club.

"We wanted an ongoing competition between departments," Al-Rawi said.

Al-Rawi wanted to help foster relations between the physics department and other departments. Trebuchets were chosen because they are challenging to design and construct, yet they are still within the scope of knowledge of both engineers and physicists.

Trebuchets are large weapons of war used to fling heavy objects in a long, lobbing arc. They first appeared in warfare during the 12th century and were commonly used during sieges of cities and castles. Essentially, trebuchets are giant levers powered by gravity.

The only guideline for building the trebuchets was that the weight that powers the entire device cannot be over 200 pounds, yet there are still several factors to consider when building entries, including the arm length, the hook that holds the sling and the frame of the trebuchet itself.

The physics team is all-too familiar with each of these factors.

Al-Rawi, leader of the Physics Club team, said the hard part was turning plans on paper into a working machine of war.

"Building the trebuchet has definitely been the hardest part," Al-Rawi said.

One of the major problems the physics team has faced is the hook that holds the sling before firing and determines the arc of the projectile.

The Physics Club chose a traditional design, with the arm rotating on a bar that runs through it. The design is reliable, but is not the most efficient design available.

Al-Rawi said the physics team is at a slight disadvantage, because the engineers are better at actual construction.

"The physicists know how to make an optimum design, but we're not used to building things," she said.

On top of that, no one on the physics team has had any experience with trebuchets. All of their information came from the Internet .

Jason Tackett, a senior in physics who is working on the trebuchet, said the team struggled with the construction.

"The massive size made it difficult," Tackett said. "Everything is big and heavy and had to be put together."

Despite hard times in construction, the physics team is optimistic about its chances of beating ASME, Al-Rawi said.

"If we do the best optimization of our design, we will win," she said.

Kevin Cooper, a freshman in mechanical engineering and the leader of the ASME team, agreed with Al-Rawi.

"I think the physics club has a very good chance," Cooper said. "I know their design, and I know that it's reliable."

Cooper tried a different design. On their trebuchet, the weight drops straight down, allowing the full force of gravity to be utilized. When the weight is released, the lever arm slides on a wheel set on a track, allowing it to move with the weight, throwing the projectile more forcefully.

Cooper said it was difficult to find necessary materials.

"We spent two hours in the Home Depot, just looking around for different parts," he said.

On paper, ASME's trebuchet looks simple; however, it's more complicated, which means it has more opportunities to malfunction. All the same, Cooper is confident in his team's machine.

"Now that I'm seeing our design come together, I think that we should pull ahead," he said.

The competition is set for 2:30 p.m. Saturday and will test accuracy and distance. Each team gets five shots per category, and the projectile that flies furthest and gets closest wins.

One of the things both teams have enjoyed is being able to see their labors in the classroom finally pay off in the real world. Both teams have, or will, spent hours in classes, learning about the physics they are now finally able to use.

"It's good to see that what we're learning in theoretical classes can actually be applied," Al-Rawi said.

Bakery products free to taste

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The aroma of breads, cookies and other sweet goods will fill Shellenberger Hall on Saturday.

Brook Carson, former Bakery Science Club president and graduate student in food science, said students start making purple bread early in the morning to prepare for the steady flow of visitors.

The baking lab, is located in room 110, will feature bakery science students baking products such as doughnuts and french bread.

Visitors will be able to tour the bakery lab and receive free samples of the fresh products.

Marvin Willyard, Bakery Science Club adviser, said when most people pass by, they find the bakery lab intriguing.

A bake sale of all products the club makes will be going on in room 204.

Carson said the All-University Open House is an opportunity for people to get a better understanding of the bakery science department.

Flour mill tours available

K-State has only grain science program in U.S.

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The grain science and industry department will be having its All-University Open House events in Shellenberger Hall.

The feed science and management program will have displays and demonstrations in the warehouse and feed mill.

The extrusion program will show commonly used methods for processing of breakfast cereals and snack products.

The milling science and management program will give tours of the flour mill on the first floor, as well as demonstrations on how to make flour out of wheat. They also will be selling flour.

There will be a booth at the K-State Student Union with pamphlets about the department of grain science.

Sajid Alavi, assistant professor of grain science and industry, said students should come to the open house for exposure to a different department.

"The open house is a good way to learn about other areas that students aren't exposed to in their general classes," he said.

Fred Fairchild, professor in feed science, said students should attend the open house because K-State is the only university in the world that has a grain science department.

"The late Arlin Ward, professor of milling science at K-State, once said 'It's hard to go any place in the world in grain processing that hasn't been touched by a K-State student,'" Fairchild said.

Open House exhibits offer variety of entertainment, giveaways

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: I plan to attend the open house and was wondering if there were any special events I should plan on attending.

A: Great question. I know from experience that there are some great activities offered during open house that are extremely helpful to incoming and current students.

There are many options depending on your interests and goals in college.

If you are a male interested in joining a fraternity, I know that the Interfraternity Council will be presenting its bi-annual informational meeting entitled "Date Rape Today: A guide to the modern sex life of fraternity brothers."

This is a great way to gather information about the prospective life in a frat house.

For females interested in joining a sorority, Greek Affairs will be handing out maps that show the quickest routes home to different sororities from almost every fraternity.

Keep one of these in your purse at all times so that you won't have to worry about getting lost on your long walks of shame.

For international students, the Graduate Teachers Assistants Club will be giving a seminar titled "How for to talk good English words what at class."

You might want to check that out.

If you are a young Democrat looking to get involved on campus, you should check out a booth that will be behind the K-State Student Union.

It is sponsored by a group called Democrats On Unnecessary protests Carrying Hemp and Elaborate Signs, or D.O.U.C.H.E.S. This group has found an ingenious way to smoke weed and still make themselves productive by protesting anything they can. If you are the type of person who always has to fight some higher power, this group is for you. The booth should be easy to find.

Just look for bright colors, white guys with dread locks and Jamaican hats and a general haze of body odor.

One thing to remember is that open house is a great time to get free stuff. Many booths give out free pens and nick-knacks like that. The Computer Programming Club will be handing out free keyboard splash guards.

The Parachute Club will be giving out free wills. The Aikido club will be giving free throat kicks. Cats for Christ will be offering free baptizing. The Student Finance Association will be giving out money. The Ballet Club will be giving free lap dances.

The Pre-Dental Club will give out free oral exams. And the Queer/Straight Alliance will offer peace treaties.

As you can see, there are many clubs and organizations to choose from, so use your time wisely.

Note: One of my roommates pointed out to me that the HALO club is actually the Hispanic American Leadership Organization and not a group of guys sitting around playing video games.

The most important thing you need to know before attending the open house is that you are in college and you should keep an open mind. And for Allah's sake, have a sense of humor.

Money saved with open house site

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student volunteers helped solicit sponsors for the All-University Open House.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said students have done a great job of recruiting event sponsors and have contributed a lot of time and effort to get everything in place for this weekend's event.

The budget for open house is about the same each year and includes the costs of printing brochures and other fliers used to promote the event, Bosco said.

Each of the college councils contributes about $175 and the remaining amount comes from the admissions budget and private donations.

In addition, costs have remained low this year with an open house Web site, including a listing of all events and complete information, Bosco said.

Each year the largest costs for open house are incurred in the designing of posters for the events and the badges that are used by student volunteers. Apart from these, however, the expenses are limited, Bosco said.

Students can visit the open house Web site at www.considerer.k-state.edu/openhouse for more information.

Legacy reception to honor K-State families

Alumni to present pins to relatives currently attending university

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State alumni will have the chance to recognize their family members attending the university in an event during the All-University Open House.

The Legacy Pinning Ceremony will be at 2 p.m. Saturday in Tadtman Boardroom in the K-State Alumni Center.

"Any K-State student whose family member has graduated from the university can attend the reception and can place a pin on the current student and express their continuing support to K-State," said Mindy Weixelman, director of development for student life at the KSU Foundation.

Weixelman said the first legacy reception was last fall during Family Day, and more than 150 K-State families, students and alumni attended.

The popularity of the event, and the fact that several families could not attend the reception last fall, led the Foundation to have another, she said.

"There has been a great tradition of generations of family members attending K-State, and the legacy reception is a perfect opportunity to recognize these people and their loyalty to the campus," Weixelman said.

She said the event, sponsored by the K-State Parents and Family Association, is creating a new and special tradition on campus that honors people who take pride in being part of K-State.

Weixelman said people who did not attend K-State but wish to express their support for the university can become a "K-Stater by choice" and all members at the reception would take an oath of commitment to K-State.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said the legacy ceremony was a program initiated for families to place pins on their relatives, thereby symbolizing continuing traditions at K-State.

He also said it was a part of the campaign to involve parents and family members in the K-State experience.

"It is an incredible event that speaks volumes for what K-State is all about.

"It gives people who feel an affinity for K-State a great opportunity to express their support," Bosco said.

Cat's Carnival for kids from young to old, everyone in between

Rain may threaten the fun, but activities still being planned for Saturday in Waters Hall quad

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The All-University Open House isn't just for the big kids – it's for the kid inside everyone.

The Cat's Town Carnival will provide activities and games at the Waters Hall quad from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday for children of all ages.

Leslie Prichard, sophomore in life sciences and coordinator of the Cat's Town Carnival, said the carnival allows open house to keep the children entertained when their older siblings are looking at the college.

"Open house is supposed to be family-oriented," Prichard said. "I just think we need to get the kids interested at young ages. Then it's fun for everyone."

To run the activities, 12 groups will provide booths and have games and candy prizes. Fraternities, sororities, residence halls and the two scholarship houses were asked to participate in the events.

Groups were allowed to team up and the following groups will be helping: Beta Sigma Psi, Kappa Alpha Theta, Smurthwaite Scholarship House, Goodnow Hall, Moore Hall, Gamma Phi Beta, Phi Kappa Theta, Chi Omega, Alpha Xi Delta, Alpha Delta Pi with Sigma Chi, Sigma Epsilon, Farmhouse with Kappa Kappa Gamma and Lambda Chi Alpha.

Some activities include Farmhouse fraternity and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority windmill putt-putt course, Gamma Phi Beta sorority's hula hoop games, Kappa Alpha Theta's bucket toss and Chi Omega's duck pond.

Rachel Riedel, junior in elementary education and president of Goodnow Hall, said Goodnow Hall is setting up a soccer booth for kids to kick soccer balls around and go up against a goalie.

"It's important to be represented on campus and in the community," Riedel said.

While most of the groups have been working on their booths since the week before spring break, Prichard said the weather could force the activities to another location.

"I'm just not quite sure about the weather," Prichard said. "We're looking at it right now."

Alpha Chi Sigma fraternity to give chemistry demonstration during Open House

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students make chemistry interesting by adding some magic to it.

Alpha Chi Sigma, a professional chemistry fraternity, will perform a chemistry magic show at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Saturday at Willard Hall 114.

"It's basically a chemistry demonstration," Bryan Watts, senior in chemical engineering, said. "We're blowing stuff up for the good of humanity."

Meg Fasulo, magic show coordinator, said the magic show should last about 30 minutes to an hour.

"What we do is chemistry and physics demonstrations to little kids and people in general," Fasulo said. "It's a way of us showing people chemistry and that it's not only about what goes on in the labs."

Fasulo said that they will work with different chemistry tools to make the magic show interesting.

"We'll be doing a lots of things with indicators, which change colors," Fasulo said. "We will also do things with fire."

This magic show has been done previous years and the outcome has been good.

"It's a 200- to 300-person classroom," Watts said. "Usually during open house we get about 100 to 150 people."

Salina visitors can experience flight in GlobalFlyer simulator

Simulator powered by computers with projection screen

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People attending the K-State-Salina All-University Open House have a chance to see what it was like for Steve Fossett when he flew the GlobalFlyer around the world.

During open house, there will be a GlobalFlyer simulator open for the public to try out.

The simulator, which is being coordinated by Jeremy Bloom, computer information specialist for K-State-Salina, is being powered by three computers.

There will be three wrap-around projection screens, 8-feet tall by 9-feet wide, that will add to the experience of the simulation.

Originally, the plan was to do a demonstration of the simulation equipment, but the administration found out what they were doing and thought it would be a good idea to make it something that everyone could do, Bloom said.

Bloom said seeing how everyone reacts to it will be exciting.

"It'll be neat to let everyone fly it," he said.

Kristin Magette, K-State-Salina public and alumni relations coordinator, said the simulator offered an opportunity for people to be a part of the GlobalFlyer experience.

"It's a chance for us to let people take part in it," Magette said. "Everyone who was involved with GlobalFlyer is excited about it."

The simulator is run by joystick and will give the user a sensation of taking off. Each person will get 5-10 minutes in the driver's seat, depending on how busy it is, Bloom said.

Brad Amstutz, flight instructor for K-State-Salina, was in the simulator when Steve Fossett was flying the GlobalFlyer.

He went through the same rigors that Fossett did: he drank the same diet shakes, he didn't sleep much during the three days, and on the second night, he started hallucinating.

Amstutz said the simulator will give users a look into what Fossett went through during the flight.

"They will see the take-off from the cockpit. It may provide a glimpse into what Steve Fossett's flight was really like," Amstutz said.

Afternoon classes canceled

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most classes starting after 2:30 p.m. today will be canceled for open house. Provost Duane Nellis recommended the cancellation to the faculty and staff.

Jane Rowlett, the director of academic services, said that the classes are canceled so that rooms will be free so that open house participants can set up in preparation for Saturday.

Also, some instructors are canceling classes so that students can work on exhibits.

"A lot of the departments are involved in the activities that take place in open house, and they are recruiting for their departments," Rowlett said.

According to the e-mail sent by Nellis, instructors teaching in specialized classes and in laboratory environments do not have to cancel class if canceling the class would result in the loss of an entire class day.

In these cases, whether or not that section will have class is up to the instructor.

Rowlett said that many classes with multiple sections will not be able to cancel class Friday afternoon, since other sections would end up being ahead of the canceled section.

"If you get behind in one section, you mess up the whole thing," Rowlett said.

According to the e-mail, if teachers plan on holding class after 2:30 p.m., they must notify room scheduling as soon as possible, to make sure that the classroom will be available.

Heather Anderson, a senior in dietetics, said that her food production management class was canceled for open house.

However, she will use the time to head home to Kansas City a little earlier.

Josh Yarrow, a sophomore in civil engineering, said that his statistics class, held at 12:30 in the afternoon, was canceled by the instructor so that students could work on exhibits, floats and projects for open house.

"There are a lot of engineering students involved in open house, so he decided to cancel the class," Yarrow said.

Even though his instructor canceled class for open house, Yarrow said he was planning on spending the time working on homework.

Student bands to play in Union plaza

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When John Bostwick and three of his friends performed "I Believe in a Thing Called Love" for K-State Idol earlier this year, he did not imagine that they would be third in line of four bands to play for the All-University Open House.

"People liked it and asked us to do a 30-minute set for open house," Bostwick, sophomore in business administration, said.

Bostwick said after K-State Idol, he and five other friends formed a "fake" band called Everybody Wins Big, or E.W.B., who plays '80s covers.

"We're a fake band," he said. "We only get together for special occasions."

Even so, Bostwick said he is having a great time performing and they are looking forward to Saturday's show.

"It will be a fun show," he said. "We're doing a lot of awesome songs and I get to sing high."

Bostwick said he hopes his band inspires other musicians to "live life by the code of less talk and more rock."

The Adam Norris Band will begin the day in the Bosco plaza at 10 a.m.

Adam Norris said his music is a lot like that of Dave Matthews.

"It's acoustic rock in genre," he said.

Norris started performing by playing solo acoustic rock three years ago.

"I started just doing shows by myself and then one of my good friends plays the drums," he said. "We just added members since then."

Norris said the band has been together for five month and is looking forward to other people getting the chance to hear his music.

"I hope that a lot of people who don't usually have a chance to hear our music get to hear it," Norris said. "Hopefully people will get introduced to our music if they like us and they will tell their friends."

Manhattan-based Ten til Blue will play at 10:45 a.m.

According to www.rock-kansas.com, the band's music is comparative to that of Incubus and the Foo Fighters.

The final band to play will be The New Foes.

The Topeka-based band is a mix between ska/reggae, pop/punk and rock and are comparative to Weezer and Rayguns.

Call Hall to use 70 tubs of ice cream at open house

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With flavors ranging from chocolate to purple pride, Call Hall will be providing a plethora of ice cream for visitors to All-University Open House on Saturday.

While many are well acquainted with the tasty treats Call Hall provides, the open house events on April 9, are a time for extra ice cream enjoyment.

Renee Westgate, sales counter manager for Call Hall ice cream, said almost 70 3-gallon tubs would be provided for Saturday's events at Call Hall.

"We haven't picked the flavors yet, but we try to pick the most popular," Westgate said. "Vanilla, chocolate and strawberry will be there, of course."

Along with the classics, new favorites like purple pride, blueberry cheesecake and swiss chocolate almond will also be on the menu.

Lori McVay, plant manager at the Dairy Processing Plant, said the plant has been making the ice cream for open house for the last month.

McVay explained the process to make K-State's famous ice cream: making the mix one day and letting it sit overnight.

"It lets the flavors mix," McVay said. "It's like soup – it tastes better the next day." Each 3-gallon tub of ice cream includes about 40 servings, adding up to almost 2,800 servings of ice cream for the 70 tubs being provided at Call Hall on Saturday.

Westgate said all six of Call Hall's workers will be helping hand out cones and cups instead of the regular one or two workers.

The ice cream shop in the K-State Student Union has ordered an extra 22 3-gallon tubs for the weekend.

To determine how many tubs of ice cream have to be produced for open house, an estimate is usually made from past years. But sales can fluctuate from year to year.

"It really depends on the weather and how long the lines are," Westgate said.

Students to compete in robot meet

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students from across the state will be attending the All-University Open House on Saturday to compete in the 4th Annual Robotics Meet at Ahearn Fieldhouse.

More than 250 schools are involved in the Robots in the Classroom program, which primarily targets middle school students but involves elementary and high school students as well, said Kevin M. Kramer, a doctoral candidate with the College of Education and the co-director of the Kansas Robot League.

They work with students and teachers in technology, science, math and technological writing classes, as well as both regular and gifted students.

It is sponsored by the College of Education.

The robots are built from Lego Mindstorms kits, which consist of lego pieces and miniature computers. They run on small motors and look like little cars.

The kits cost about $200 dollars and come complete with what is needed to build the robots.

Mike Holen, dean of the college of education, said the College of Education pays for the kits so that the schools don't have to pay for them.

"We purchase the rather expensive kits that are required for participation," Holen said. "We take it out of our operating expenses as part of our service to public schools."

The students build their own robots through the program and compete at various competitions throughout the year. The program is designed to integrate concepts of robotics into the classroom, Kramer said.

"We try to assist the kids in learning how to apply what they learn in robotics both inside and outside the classroom," he said.

Some of the events in which students will be participating are capture the flag, 25 meter races on the Ahearn track, King of the Hill, and bot barrel racing, where they race around barrels like in a rodeo.

"It's basically the same concept as horse barrel racing," Kramer said.

There will be two levels of sumo wrestling, where they will try to push the other robot out of the ring. "Sumo-bot" is for students at the beginner level and "sumo-wrestling" is for experts.

The biggest event will be the triathabot. The robots will compete in three different events, one right after the other. They will run through a maze, capture the flag and sumo-bot.

"The main purpose of that is kids learning how to modify or change their robot very quickly," Kramer said. "It's learning how to problem solve and work on your feet very quickly."

Holen said the Robots in the Classroom program takes advantage of students' tendencies to be competitive, and allows students who may not be athletes to still compete.

"For students who might not find other outlets of involvement, this might stimulate an interest in science and mathematics," he said.

Kevin Kramer, co-director of the Kansas Robot League, organizes a Lego Mindstorms kit for Saturday's All-University Open House. The group will take over Ahearn Field House where schools from all over Kansas will come compete.

Museum to sponsor contest

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Visitors stopping by the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art on Saturday will participate in their own art project.

The Student Friends of of the Beach Museum of Art are sponsoring a pipe-cleaner sculpture contest, said Meredith Moore, senior in painting and treasurer of the Student Friends.

Although it is being called a competition, Moore said it is a non-competitive event but they will recognize the best art.

"Certainly we will acknowledge those who achieve a certain greatness in their pipe cleaner artistry," Moore said.

Moore said the museum decided to make the pipe-cleaner sculptures their main event during All-University Open House because of its popularity.

"It's been an activity that's slowly been growing in popularity with student friend members and the community in general," she said.

Martha Scott, the business and marketing manager at the Beach Museum, said the museum will be opening at 10 a.m. Saturday. The pipe cleaner sculpture event will take place from 1 to 3 p.m.

The museum will also have their normal exhibitions on display, Scott said, including Gone: Photographs of Abandonment on the High Plains, Jon Blumb Photographs, and Freaky Fables From the Foothills: Prints by Tom Huck.

Local businesses offer sales, free gifts

Downtown Manhattan Inc. will be host for an open house for downtown Manhattan Saturday.

"I hope visitors come downtown and shop and visit," Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said.

Ron Wellington, owner of Lilacs on the Prairie, said he hopes the open house brings an awareness to the district.

"Things are a little slower than they used to be," he said. "I hope this helps customers discover us more."

Local businesses are having sales and giving gifts to customers who visit their stores.

The Pathfinder is having a sale on bikes, backpacks, sleeping bags and accessories. The store is also giving away cookies, punch and balloons.

"I hope this brings people in and shows downtown off, particularly to out-of-towners," David Colburn, manager of the Pathfinder, said.

Krystallos is offering a free gift with every purchase more than $50.

Steve Snyder, manager of Brown's shoes, said they will have extended hours and they will also be serving drinks.

Students to participate in Little American Royal, show animals

By Annie Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Beef and dairy cattle, horses, pigs and sheep will be shown by 112 contestants on Saturday in the Little American Royal.

More than 70 members of the Dairy Science Club and the Block and Bridle Club organized the show.

The animals are owned by K-State, and students will be judged on how they show the animals.

Annie Whitehill, senior in agricultural communications and president of the Little American Royal, said this kind of competition will be different from what students might have done in high school.

"Students that showed animals in 4-H or FFA bought and raised the animals, in this contest they don't own the animals they will be showing," she said. "It will focus on the contestant's ability to show the animal."

Proper showmanship includes grooming of the animals and certain traditional techniques when in the ring, Whitehill said.

The Little American Royal is a smaller, more localized version of the American Royal Livestock Horse Show and Rodeo in Kansas City, Mo., she said.

The winner in each species will win a belt buckle donated from RB Outpost, and the champion of the show will win a folding director's chair.

Kati Neil, junior in animal science and industry and agricultural economics, said she grew up on a farm and has shown animals since she was 5 years old. She said she is really excited about the upcoming show.

"You get to see how animals work with people," she said. "It really opens your eyes to the livestock industry."

Neil said people can come to the show expecting to see quality showmanship from all of the students.

"These students have worked very hard during the last month," she said. "They have been teaching the animals how to lead, and taming the hair."

Professor of Animal Science and Industry Dave Nichols said this show is an excellent learning opportunity for students who have never had any experience showing animals.

"Kids learn from each other, and there is a lot of supervision along the way," he said.

There are rules established to give everyone equal opportunity to show a variety of animals, Nichols said.

"Students can only participate in one category per show," he said. "Once they win, they cannot show that same species again."

Nichols said competing in the show was not the only learning experience for the students.

"The students did all the leadership and organizing of the event," he said. "They publicized, solicited donations and worked very hard."

The Little American Royal has been a competition of showmanship at K-State since 1924, Nichols said.

"In 1951 they advertised it being at the new Ahearn Field House," he said, "That right there shows how far it has come through the years."

Hale robbed during book sale; $200 lost

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than $200 was stolen from a book sale at Hale Library Sunday afternoon.

Meghan Dowdy, a receptionist at the Hale front desk, said she was working on a computer when a man walked in, grabbed the money box and ran out of the second floor exit of the library.

Mary Beth Reese, a volunteer with the Friends of the Libraries, described the suspect as a 30-year-old male with dirty blond hair wearing large framed glasses and a gray jacket.

"He wasn't a typical 19-year-old college student," she said.

After leaving the library, a witness said the suspect got on a red bike and was last seen heading north of Hale Library.

Reese, who was manning the table at the time, said she was shocked when the man grabbed the money.

"I had time to say to him, 'You've got to be kidding,'" she said.

Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of libraries, said she was not sure how much money was stolen, but she estimated the amount to be more than $200.

"That's money that's supposed to go to Hale Library," McCulloh said.

The Friends of the Library have raised more than $6,000 through the book sale, which will continue until Wednesday, McCulloh said.

Most of this money will go towards books, renovations and the purchase of furniture for all of K-State's libraries.

Most of the money stolen was in the form of checks, so the suspect won't be able to cash them, McCulloh said.

After the suspect ran off with the cash box, Reese said she called 911. Bradli Millington, a KSU bike police officer, responded to the call, but was unable to comment on the robbery.

Authorities said there were 50 students in the library when the suspect entered and exited.

Local woman found, treated at hospital

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A missing Manhattan resident was found Saturday afternoon.

According to a Riley County Police Department press release, Christine Graham, 49, had been missing since April 2 when she left her residence to go for a walk and never returned.

Graham was found on the side of North Seth Child Road, near its intersection with Eagle Road. She was alive, but appeared to be dehydrated and disoriented.

Authorities are unable to release at this time how Graham arrived at this location, or how long she had been there.

Graham was transported by Riley County EMS to Mercy Regional Health Center for treatment.

RCPD Dispatcher Wayne Colson with the Riley County Crime Stoppers said there is no time limit on reporting a missing person. Adult missing person cases are treated differently than juvenile cases, he added.

"There has to be a certain reason to report an adult as missing, such as dementia, catastrophe or harm to himself or others," Colson said.

Blood drive collects 760 pints; donors still needed

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The American Red Cross, in conjunction with the K-State Bleed Purple Program, came close to their goal at the blood drive last week.

According to Kristi Reif, the donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross, the organization collected 760 pints of blood at K-State, just 40 pints shy of their goal. More than 800 students offered to donate, many of them first-time donors due to changes to donor guidelines.

As of March 21, donation eligibility guidelines were re-evaluated and donors with tattoos don't have to wait the standard 12-month waiting period before donating, Reif said. In addition, donors will no longer be deferred if they've recently traveled outside the United States.

"It went really well," Reif said. "We didn't reach our goal, but I can't say that I'm disappointed. The donors we had were amazing and the 760 pints we got will definitely help out patients."

The blood donated by K-State students will supply Mercy Regional Hospital and will be distributed as needed throughout Kansas and northern Oklahoma, Reif said.

A pint of blood is separated into red blood cells, platelets and plasma, which can help three different patients.

The red blood cells are used to help trauma patients or patients who must undergo surgery. Cancer patients have problems with profuse bleeding and frequently receive platelets to help clotting. Plasma is predominantly used for burn patients to replace the massive loss of fluids they suffer, Reif said.

Every two seconds a person in the United States needs blood. A donor can give blood every 56 days, but that blood only has a shelf life of 42 days, so there's a constant demand Reif said.

Some people decline to donate because of the misconception that their blood can be used if someone they know or love is suddenly in need of it.

"It takes 48 hours for us to process the blood," Reif said. "That's why we say don't wait until someone you know needs it, because we always want it to be available."

Student earns spot on TV game show

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Starting at 3:30 p.m. on Saturday, thousands of fans and students gathered at Bartle Hall in Kansas City, Mo., for the taping of Wheel of Fortune. Five shows were taped under the Big 12 College Week theme, with at least one contestant from each Big 12 school in participating.

The entire Wheel of Fortune crew traveled from its home studio in California to Kansas City for a total of three days of taping.

The crew only works 39 days a year, nine of which are spent taping shows on the road, like this weekend.

The show, now in its 22nd season, has never been taped in Kansas City before. Host Pat Sajak and co-host Vanna White impressed the eager audience with their charismatic presence and down-to-earth attitude. Described by their coworkers as "non-Hollywood types," Sajak and White were exactly that, expressing their excitement to be in Kansas City.

"I like Midwesterners," Sajak said. "It's a good combination of friendly and reserved, and it's low key. I wasn't surprised at this, because I'm from the Midwest."

White added, "I love this city. It's beautiful, the food is good and the weather is great."

The Big 12 College Week theme is new to the show. Sajak said doing a show with college students is a refreshing experience.

"They're much more energetic, and it gives us more energy," he said. "When you come to a place like Kansas City, the energy level is higher and it's almost exhausting.

"I wish our older players could take that game attitude," he said.

The audience reciprocated the admiration, bringing signs, cheerleaders and marching bands to the show. Along with die-hard Wheel fans, there were also many enthused students from Big 12 colleges rooting on their respective college contestant.

Future Wildcats play against K-State seniors in all-star exhibition game

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALINA, Kan. – The K-State past met the Wildcat future at the Bicentennial Center on Sunday when K-State seniors Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn and Brie Madden, along with former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde, matched up against the State of Kansas High School All-Stars in a laid-back exhibition game.

"It was really nice," Koehn said. "I don't think any of us have ever been a part of something like this before. To have a chance for people to put this on for us and give us a chance to play one more time together, and one more time in front of our fans that have been so supportive of us over the past four years, it's a special thing."

Dubbed the "Legends," the former Wildcat standouts played against and alongside three players who will be wearing the purple and white very soon.

Sublette's Shalee Lehning, McPherson's Marlies Gipson and Winfield's JoAnn Hamlin are all headed to K-State next year, and all were part of the Kansas All-Stars.

The Legends played without Kendra Wecker, whose flight to Kansas was delayed in Denver because of a snowstorm, and without Megan Mahoney, who sat on the bench due to a torn achilles tendon she suffered last month.

So as the 2,270 fans in attendance got the chance to say one more goodbye to the seniors, they also got a sneak peak into what's in store for the next four years.

Even though the Legends defeated the All-Stars 105-57, Lehning said it was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for her and the other high school athletes involved.

"It was an honor to be out there playing against those girls, and to have the opportunity to play with them – wow," she said.

Lehning, Gipson and Hamlin played the entire first half on the All-Star side, but before the second half began, the trio took off their All-Star jerseys and revealed that they were wearing the black jerseys the Legends had on.

Residents of Manhattan vote at the Manhattan City Library on Tuesday. Residents voted on officials, a constitutional amendment on marriage and an increase in city sales tax.

Kansans voted Tuesday in acceptance of an amendment honoring marriage as a union between one man and one woman. The state joins 39 states that have laws specifically banning same-sex marriage and 16 that have constitutional amendments banning gay marriage. In addition, Manhattan residents voted in favor of raising city sales tax .25 percent in order to support USD 383 Manhattan-Ogden school district.

his first national title, defeating the University of Illinois 75-70 in the championship game of the men's NCAA Tournament. On the women's side, the Big 12 Conference fared well, as the Baylor Bears won their first national championship, defeating Michigan State 84-62.

Students show livestock

Months of hard work and training finally paid off for students who competed in K-State's 77th annual Little American Royal.

More than 100 participants entered Saturday's show after working with their livestock for about a month. Students took the animals from the fields and worked to break, fit and show the animals in time for the Little American Royal.

"It was a great experience to be an exhibitor in the Little American Royal," said Tina Krafft, freshman in animal science.

"Through the Little American Royal, I was able to meet many other great exhibitors and have a chance to work with them in the days and weeks prior to the show," Krafft said. "All of our work was highlighted as each class entered the arena on Saturday."

Corineah Godsey, junior in animal science, said she has been working with animals for a long time.

"There are some people who spend their summers playing basketball or baseball, attending camps and tournaments," she said. "Then there are others, like me, who spend it getting up early every morning rinsing calves, walking lambs and attending shows.

"There is just as much gut-wrenching hard work and sweat put into fitting and showing livestock as there is in playing a game, and it's just as rewarding," she said.

Some participants said everyone should show something at least once.

"It is very exciting and scary at the same time," said Meghan Tindle, junior in animal science.

"You work with your animal before the show, and during the show you just hope that your animal cooperates with you. It's a great experience."

Godsey said this is the first Little American Royal she's competed in. She also said it is one of the most relaxed shows she has ever attended.

"This is attributed to the hard work the show committee did to make sure things ran smoothly," she said.

Annie Whitehill, president of American Little Royal, said the members of the 15 committees worked hard to put a great show on.

"Everyone worked really hard on this project," Whitehill said. "It wasn't a big headache because everyone pulled their weight."

Whitehill said she was impressed with the number of people who came to see the show, especially with the show being on the same day as All-University Open House.

"We had a really good turnout," she said. "Our goal was to increase the audience and I believe we did that."

Members of the audience went to the show to see their peers in action.

"It was a good opportunity to see what K-State students have done," Jeremy Voth, sophomore in construction science, said.

Krafft said she hopes the audience became aware of the hard work students put on for the show.

"I hope that they all were able to enjoy the show and see the work that not only the exhibitors put in to preparing their animals, but also the work and pride that the students put into putting on the Little American Royal," she said.

"Hopefully there were also some in the audience that may become exhibitors in the future."

20,000 attend 26th Open House

About 20,000 people flocked to the K-State campus Saturday for the university's 26th annual Open House, said Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

"It was an incredible day for K-State," he said. "In the past we have estimated 20,000 visitors. We certainly met that and probably exceeded it."

Prospective students, families and both in- and out-of-state guests walked through the K-State Student Union, Bosco Student Plaza, the individual colleges and the quad to gather information on academic departments and campus organizations, watch demonstrations, listen to bands and jump on a moonwalk.

"They tried to add a kind of carnival atmosphere," President Jon Wefald said. "There was something for everyone."

Activities ranged from a scavenger hunt through Bluemont Hall and an ice-carving demonstration in Justin Hall to cockroach races in Seaton Hall and a pet show in Frick Auditorium.

Ruth Ann Wefald, wife of the president, said her four grandchildren enjoyed seeing the animals, playing games in the quad and the food various departments offered as samples.

"We kind of ate our way through open house," she said.

Bosco said some of the most successful aspects of open house were the out-of-state reception and the minority and transfer student programs. All were standing-room only.

Ralph Richardson, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said he thought the day was a success because the students were well-organized, the displays were excellent and there were large crowds. He said he appreciated the veterinary medicine students' efforts to prevent spreading diseases from the animals to visitors.

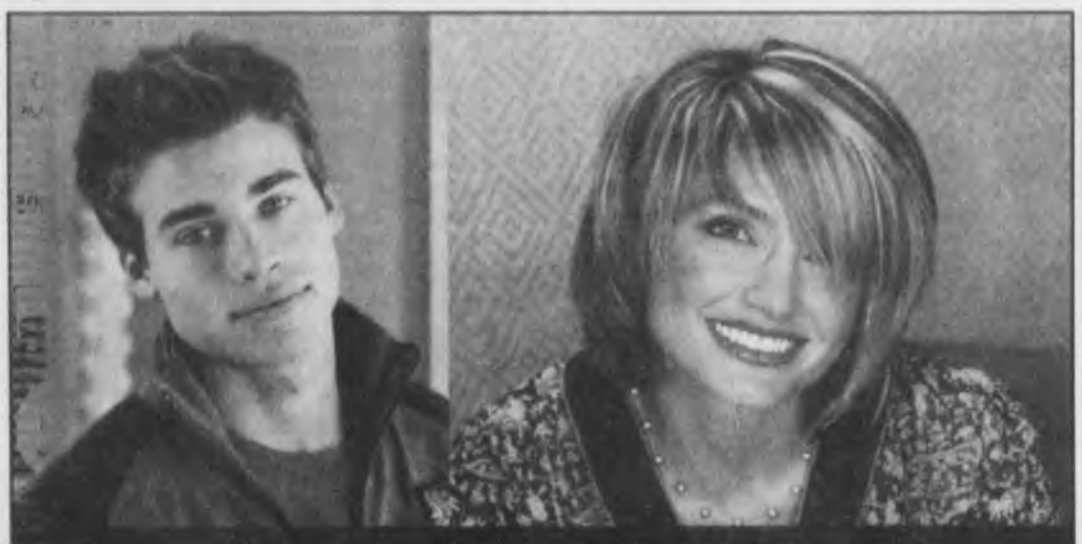
"I thought it was the best (open house) ever," Richardson said.

Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration, also called the open house a success.

"Quite a few new and creative events by the students attracted people," he said. "They (students) put in a lot of time."

Bosco said 2,500 K-State students and faculty were involved in planning the open house.

"The excitement on campus was really very special," he said.



Unanimously, K-State leaders were pleased with this year's open house.

"Everybody that I talked to thought it was a smashing success," Jon Wefald said. "It's probably the best one we've had."

Celebrate 150! events offer chance to learn

For four or more years, K-State students are a part of the Manhattan community.

This year, our community is celebrating something special – its 150th birthday.

For the rest of the year, there is a great opportunity to learn more about Manhattan through lectures, celebrations and special edition books.

Manhattan was essentially born by mistake and K-State was there from the beginning, originally as Bluemont College.

There will be more ways to learn after this year, but they won't be as frequent and certainly not as high-profile as the events scheduled this year.

Take advantage of the upcoming lecture series highlighted in today's paper and the events listed at www.celebrate150.org.

It's hard to cram other educational activities into a college student's already busy schedule but the learning in the classroom isn't all that is needed.

There is so much to learn from those who came before us – those who remember what it was like when Nichols Hall was burned in Vietnam War protests and those who battled the floods of the 1950s.

Make time to attend the Celebrate 150! events. Who knows, you might even learn something.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

GEEK WEEK

War of the Wizards

'Lord of the Rings' puts kiddie world of Harry Potter to shame

ELVIS ACHELPOHL

Ten-year-olds the world over: rejoice! Coming this July to a bookstore near you is "Harry Potter VI: The Curse of Michael Myers."

Or maybe that's a "Halloween" movie. Regardless, J.K. Rowling, author of the très-successful "Harry Potter" series, will be purchasing another gold-plated toilet this summer.

What makes Harry Potter the pimp of children's literature? The series isn't that great, if you think about it.

It pales in comparison to the trailblazer of its field, J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings."

I've always believed Rowling died sometime after writing "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets," and her publishers have just been adding pages to the "Potter" formula each year since.

Every "Potter" novel uses the same outline. Voldemort infiltrates Hogwarts, none of the teachers believe Harry, Harry and the Mystery Gang find clues to expose Voldemort, Draco Malfoy is a scut and Voldemort escapes.

It feels like an episode of "Scooby-Doo" minus the talking dog, although Ron Weasley comes close.

Children, you can do better than that! Pick up "The Lord of the Rings" and start reading. Unlike "Harry Potter," you won't have to wait 10 years before the ending is published. Even if you have the attention span of a gnat, you can just rent the movies.

"Rings" is a time-honored classic, too. Tolkien was dead before Rowling was scribbling on napkins at the soup kitchen. Even the people of Great Britain, Tolkien and Rowling's fatherland, voted "Rings" the greatest book of the 20th century.

His homeland and first initial aren't the only things Rowling copied from Tolkien. Vertically-impaired protagonists, old men with magic sticks, black-robed bad guys and a landscape disconnected from reality are all tokens of Tolkien's work. Ha ha, I said "token" and "Tolkien" in the same sentence!

Tolkien just does them better. His hobbits aren't going through puberty, so they're not as whiney as Rowling's wand-wielding moppets. Gandalf thrashes more baddies in three volumes than Dumbledore ever could in seven.

And, oh my God, Daniel Radcliffe is so not as hot as Orlando Bloom! Orlando, I love you.

Another important reason why "Rings" is better than "Potter" is the emotional maturity of Tolkien's work. Potter is devoid of any emotional honesty. Yeah, Harry, your parents are dead and you have to live with the worst people in England – get over it.

Frodo Baggins has to live with a guy named Bilbo. Bilbo! You don't see him crying or constantly complaining about how his "scar" hurts. Maybe your parents died because they were bad people. Did you ever think of that?

Nor are the friendships in "Potter" realistic. When Harry's down, what do his friends do? Give him a new broomstick. I'm sorry, but I don't think forcing the poor kid to clean is going to make him feel any better. Get him an Xbox or something. Even a new shirt can brighten a bad day.

On the other hand, "Rings" is a moving ode to friendship. Samwise Gamgee's love for Frodo is so great that he follows him hundreds of miles to the "Crack of Doom."

He cooks for Frodo, cares for him when he's sick and puts up with a dope-crazed home wrecker in a land that resembles West Miami. Sam even fights back a giant, eight-legged vagina with a magic sword called "Sting."

It is safe to say that Tolkien invented not only the modern fantasy novel, but also ushered in contemporary homoerotic literature. To this progressive author, I say "bravo."

What can you say you've invented, Ms. Rowling? And why haven't you returned my calls?

That's what I thought.

Harry Potter an epic series that appeals to more than just geeks

DAVID LIANG

Speaking from personal experience, trying to convince people that "Harry Potter" isn't just for children is a lot more challenging than mastering the intricacies of oxidative phosphorylation.

Usually when I discretely tell adults to give it a try, they shoot me looks that suggest I just told them they have the makings of a fine pimp.

In all fairness, titles like "The Sorcerer's Stone" and "The Chamber of Secrets" rank right up there with "Thomas the Tank Engine" for lame book titles. But hear me out.

With the "Harry Potter" series, J.K. Rowling has created a masterpiece. Hidden beneath all that innocence lies a wealth of allegories, mythical metaphors, moral messages and social commentaries for the astute reader to appreciate.

Her characters are dynamic and multi-faceted. They progress from rudimentary goody-two-shoes portrayals to more ambiguous shades of gray – this is where the movies simply don't do any justice to the original books.

There are intense emotional struggles within characters who are often forced to make difficult decisions against the forces that be – much like any one of us would in real life.

"Lord of the Rings," on the other hand, features static, one-dimensional characters that effectively deprive the reader of any emotional attachment to them. It's pretty straightforward: Gandalf: good. Saruman: bad. And of course, Legolas master-of-the-obvious Greenleaf (what kind of a last name is that, anyway?).

Contrary to what those who've never read "Harry Potter" claim, the storyline is neither predictable nor routine. Each book is filled with enlightening throwbacks to earlier stories and clever, unclichéd plot twists keep the readers guessing.

The stories don't always end with good triumphing over evil, and important – sometimes good – characters get killed along the way. As a matter of fact, it's quite likely that Harry himself will die by the end of the series in his struggle against Voldemort.

In comparison, "Lord of the Rings" is utterly insipid. Anyone who suspected for a second that Sauron was actually going to prevail in the end is denser than my pet goldfish, Toby. The overall story is about as unoriginal as you can get: good versus evil, evil wins for a while, good fights back and finally emerges victorious.

But there's another problem with "Lord of the Rings": It tries my brain too hard.

Why couldn't Gandalf fly into Mordor on one of his giant birds and just drop the ring into Mount Doom? Why the excruciating and perilous trek?

Gimli and Legolas habitually jumped into huge masses of Orcs – each of which was armed with a razor-sharp spear – without receiving so much as a scratch. Did none of the Orcs know what a spear is used for?

After repeated, crushing military defeats that would make even the French laugh, what makes Sauron think he can win?

And why were the Hobbits perpetually singing irritating songs along the way like dyslexic rappers? Here's an excerpt from the first book:

"Hey dol, merry dol! Ring a dong dillo! Ring a dong! Hop along! Fal lal the willow! Tom Bom, jolly Tom, Tom Bombadillo!"

Did you get the point of that? Good. Neither did I.

You see, I was more willing to overlook slight logical fallacies in "Harry Potter" because it doesn't pretend to be the mother of novels.

And while its title may not sound as epic or carry the same ring as "Lord of the Rings," but I couldn't help myself), the series is, like Ron would say, wicked. Don't let the pointy hats fool you into thinking otherwise.

Church celebrates 150 years of service

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend was a special time for the First United Methodist Church as the congregation celebrated its sesquicentennial with a celebration dinner.

Four hundred people took part in an afternoon banquet after attending special services to honor the church's longevity.

The event started with the day's three services, all featuring Kansas Area Bishop Scott Jones, who spoke for the first time in Manhattan.

Service music was composed by Paul Hunt, head of K-State's music department. The song was performed by two children's choirs and was based on Psalm 150 in honor of the 150 years.

The Rev. Jim Reed, senior pastor of the church, said all of the services had good turnouts.

"The entire day has been wonderful, with an incredible number of people showing up," he said. "Seven of our previous pastors are in attendance, giving the opportunity to our congregation to catch up with them. As we look to celebrate the past of this church, we get to celebrate not only that, but we get to celebrate the future."

During his welcome speech, Reed reiterated the historical ties that bind the church with not only the town of Manhattan, but with K-State, as well.

"The Bluemont College arch that is displayed here inside the K-State Alumni building has its original ties with the First United Methodist Church," he said. "It makes this place ideal to host such an event."

Nancy Prawl, chair of the sesquicentennial committee, said this is a time of rejoicing for not only the church, but for the community as a whole.

"It has been a fun time for everyone that has been involved," she said. "The church also plans to do many other events throughout the year in honor of the anniversary."

She also said the ties are very apparent between the community, the university and the church.

"Many of those celebrating with us today have ties to Kansas State," she said. "When going back in our history, many of the original founders of the church made education a priority and helped bring the agricultural school to fruition."

Penny and Homer Socolofsky enjoy a dinner during the Sesquicentennial Celebration Dinner for the First United Methodist Church at the K-State Alumni Center on Sunday afternoon. Penny Socolofsky has been attending the church since 1937.

As part of the banquet, a 10-minute historical video presentation was shown, entitled, "Century and A Half– Journey of Faith." The piece showed the history of the church and projected where the church is headed.

Jerry Banaka, a member of the congregation, said the church has tremendous heritage.

"It was a wonderful celebration, and pleasurable all around," he said. "It was a great day for the church and for the community."

Lecture series to commemorate Manhattan, Riley County

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County was part of the Louisiana Purchase, which makes Meriwether Lewis and William Clark's explorations an important part of its history.

Thus, the Lewis and Clark lecture series begins tonight to commemorate Riley County and Manhattan's 150th birthday.

The lecture is the fourth Celebrate 150! lecture. It is at 7 tonight at Manhattan Public Library.

Richie Doyle, member of Montana Committee for the Humanities Speakers Bureau, is presenting "Troubled Trust: Lewis and Clark's legacy and the Indian frontier."

He is presenting the lecture in first person as William Clark.

Doyle has given the lecture about 200 times and is scheduled to present it at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum, said lectures are lined up for the entire year.

There will be a sign language interpreter present for the hearing impaired.

Collins said this lecture should be interesting because of how Lewis and Clark are important to the area's history.

"I think it will be an outstanding presentation," she said. "It really puts our place in context."

Charlee Smith, reference librarian at Manhattan Public Library, said the lectures have attracted a full house.

"The ones they have had before, which were primarily on Manhattan's history, were very well attended," Smith said.

1st week inconsistent for Royals

JOSH WITT

Are you looking to cheer for an unpredictable team this 2005 Major League Baseball season?

Do you want to get behind a squad that will impress you one game only to make you want to throw your TV out the window the next?

Ladies and gentleman, I present to you the Kansas City Royals.

A convincing 8-3 win over the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim (or whatever they call themselves) capped a crazy first week of the season for the Boys in Blue.

The Royals have shown they are consistent only in the fact that they are inconsistent.

The 2005 campaign started with that embarrassing 11-2 loss at Detroit on opening day, which might have been the most depressing Kansas City performance in some time.

Starter Jose Lima got rocked, the offense produced little and the Royals were far from sharp in the field.

But then there was Wednesday's bounce back game – the first of several this past week.

In his first start since late in the 2003 season, Runelvys Hernandez dominated the Tigers in a 7-2 win.

Coming back from elbow ligament replacement surgery – doesn't that sound pleasant – that kept him from action in 2004, Hernandez gave up just one run on five hits in seven innings.

The offense excelled as well. Especially encouraging were the performances of Mike Sweeney and Angel Berroa, who didn't exactly get it done like team leaders should last season. Berroa hit a home run, and Sweeney knocked in a pair of runs.

Was the game the beginning of a winning streak?

Of course not.

Young pitching sensation Zack Greinke was knocked out of the game due to a line drive off the arm, forcing the Royals to go to the bullpen in the third inning.

Any time you see the last part of that sentence, good things are not going to follow.

The Tigers lit up the Royals with a six-run seventh inning that blew the game open, and Detroit coasted to a 7-3 win.

You can guess what happened next.

On Friday, Kansas City responded with a 6-2 win – maybe its best game in this young season. Denny Bautista was nearly unstoppable in picking up his first major league win.

One run, eight strikeouts, three hits, no walks, eight innings.

Throw in two Sweeney RBI doubles and a phenomenal suicide squeeze bunt by Tony Graffanino, and it was a beautifully played game by the Royals.

We're not used to seeing too many of those. Yet we got another one on Sunday, but only after another bad performance from our friend Mr. Lima.

"Lima Time" once again failed to make it out of the fourth inning in a 8-3 loss at the Angels.

"I've got a lot of stuff in my head," Lima said. "That's not Jose Lima out there. I'm trying to get 27 outs on one pitch. But I've been down this road before, and I've bounced back."

So when is "Lima Time" going to run out? I'm hoping for sooner rather than later.

On to Sunday.

There were home runs from Emil Brown and Ruben Gotay – yeah, I just found out who those guys were like a week ago, too.

There were two more RBI from Sweeney, and Brian Anderson picked up the win, giving up just three runs.

Hold up, hold up.

Did you just say Brian "I have a huge...ERA" Anderson got the win?

Yes, I did.

So here the Royals sit at 3-3.

And if ever there was a team that lived up to a .500 record, it's these guys.

Bautista and Hernandez could be stars in the making, Sweeney and Berroa are hitting the ball well and the Royals are doing little things to win.

But don't bounce off the walls yet.

A solid season for the Royals assumes that the young pitchers can stay consistent, Sweeney can stay healthy and Berroa can stay under control.

That's a whole lot of assumptions, and jaded fans know that this will probably turn out badly.

But hey, let's focus on the now, as Kansas City gets set for today's home opener against Seattle at 3:10 p.m.

There's nothing wrong with hoping the Royals can make another improbable run at the Central Division crown like in 2003, even if the team falls short again.

What's wrong with a little optimism in April?

TRACK AND FIELD

Eveland wins pole vault at Texas

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time in three weekends of competition, no K-State track and field athlete set a school record.

Even so, Head coach Cliff Rovelto was generally pleased with how his team performed.

"I think it was a good weekend for us," Rovelto said.

K-State split its squad Friday and Saturday, as a limited number of K-State athletes competed at the 78th annual Clyde Littlefield Texas Relays in Austin, Texas, and the majority of the team traveled to the ESU State Farm Relays in Emporia, Kan.

The Texas Relays, which featured former Olympians Maurice Greene and Allen Johnson, were one of the most competitive meets of the year.

"The girls were really good and there were a ton of people there," K-State junior pole-vaulter Breanna Eveland said. "I felt like I was at a football game because there were so many people. Everywhere you looked, the competition was amazing."

Eveland won the pole vault with a height of 13-07 1/4, even though two other competitors jumped the same height as she did.

"We jumped the same height, but I had less misses, so I took first," she said.

Eveland, who was named the Big 12 Female Athlete of the Week for her school-record vault of 13-09 1/4 at the UTEP Springtime Invitational on April 2 in El Paso, Texas, said she was pleased with her victory on Saturday.

"I felt really good while I was jumping," Eveland said. "I was not too worried about placement. I was just hoping to jump high."

Wildcat triple jumper Chaytan Hill, a senior from Kirby, Texas, showcased her talent in front of her family as she leaped 43-07 1/4 at the Texas Relays, good for a second place finish.

Hill said she was less than pleased with her performance, despite her high placement.

"It was average," Hill said. "I did not do anything spectacular."

Hill said her family's presence did not influence her performance even though they only see her perform a few times a year.

"I did not feel extra pressure at all," she said. "They

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Battling a fierce wind and six years of forgettable history, the K-State rowing team took to the waters at Tuttle Creek Reservoir on Saturday to battle the University of Kansas in the annual Kansas Cup.

The Wildcats overcame an early eight-point deficit to win 9-8 over the Jayhawks, the first time K-State has captured the Kansas Cup trophy since 1998.

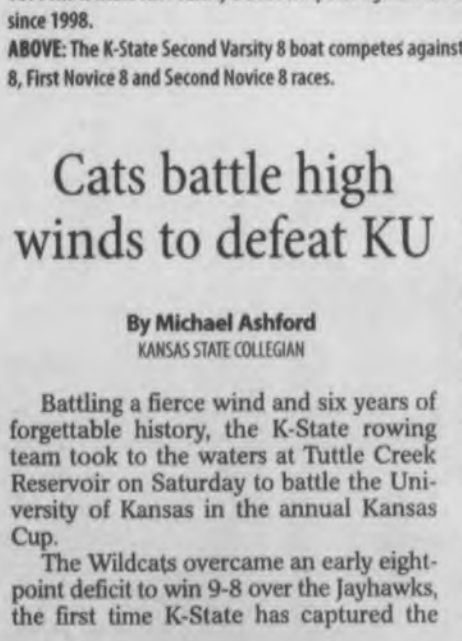
"It was a good team effort," Head coach Patrick Sweeney said. "With the high crosswinds and changes to the race lineup, the team was able to adapt to the rough water better than our opponents."

In the first race of the day, Kansas crossed the finish line in the First Varsity 8 race with a winning time of 6 minutes, 36.6 seconds, nine seconds ahead of K-State.

The victory gave the Jayhawks a quick 8-0 advantage.

Since the point values decrease for each additional race, the loss in the First Varsity 8 race meant the Wildcats would have to win the last three races to capture the title – and that is just what they did.

K-State swept the Second Varsity 8 (five points), First Novice 8 (three) and Second Novice 8 (one) races, giving the Wildcats nine points and the victory.



"We were frustrated with the First Varsity 8 race, but the rest of the team was able to pull it up for us," Sweeney said.

It wasn't easy though, as the Second Varsity 8 (6:32.8) and the First Novice 8 (6:35.0) won by .5 seconds and .6 seconds, respectively.

Before K-State's win on Saturday, Kansas had won the last six Kansas Cup events. With the rowing team's victory over the Jayhawks in the Sunflower Showdown in the fall, this marks the first time since 1998 the Wildcats have swept the in-state series in the same season.

No. 15 Bears sweep Wildcats in Waco

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team hoped a win against No.1-ranked Texas last weekend would jump-start the Wildcats in Big 12 play, but this weekend's sweep by the No. 15 Baylor Bears left the team looking for answers.

K-State dropped to 15-15 overall and 2-10 in conference.

The Bears completed the sweep Sunday afternoon in Waco, Texas, with an 8-4 win over the Wildcats.

Junior Adam Cowart (6-2) gave up seven runs to the Baylor bats on 10 hits, which gave the Wildcat pitcher his second loss of the season.

The K-State bullpen was solid in relief with juniors B.J. Kissel and Bryan Peterson allowing only one run on one hit in two innings of relief.

Juniors Brandon Farr, Barrett Rice, Steve Murphy and senior Josh Dent each had two hits for the Cats to lead the 13-hit day for the squad. K-State out-hit Baylor 13-11 on the day.

K-State dropped to 13-2 on the season when collecting 11 or more hits in a game.

Saturday's results were the same for the Wildcats, as they dropped game two of the series 11-3.

Senior Mitch Walter (2-3) was solid in the early innings by recording 10 groundball outs and four flyouts in the first four innings. He did not allow a hit until the fifth, when the Bears got going against Walter, as four singles and two triples gave Baylor a 6-0 lead.

K-State had just five hits, while stranding nine men on base.

Friday night's game got the series going for the Bears as they came out on top of the Wildcats 8-3.

Junior Chase Mitchell (3-4) picked up the loss for K-State, allowing six runs on five hits and striking out four in 4.0 innings.

Freshman Brad Hutt and junior Seth Lackow finished out the game for the Wildcats, combining for five innings of relief.

The Wildcats will hope to rebound from the sweep with a mid-week showdown in Omaha, Neb. They will face Creighton at 3 p.m. Tuesday.

GOLF | Woods wins 4th Masters title in playoff

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Tiger Woods is The Masters champion once again, turning back a surprising challenge Sunday with a shot of sheer magic and a birdie putt to win a playoff he never expected.

Woods

A spectacular finish of birdies and bogeys finally ended when Woods produced the most important shot of all — a 15-foot birdie putt on the first extra hole to capture his fourth green jacket and finally put away the gritty Chris DiMarco.

Woods knew it was over when the ball was a foot from the hole, taking two steps to the left as a smile creased his face and his right fist punched the air with fury.

In a story published March 24 under sports editor Jim Mohr's byline, dietary expert Ellen Coleman was quoted as saying she knew personally that "Bo Jackson lost his hip because of anabolic abuse."

Jackson responded last week by suing the newspaper, MediaNews Group Inc., MediaNews Group Interactive, Inc., Mohr and three other employees for unspecified general and punitive damages in Illinois.

NFL | Titan's QB McNair will return this season

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee Titans quarterback Steve McNair, whose injury-plagued 2004 season left him considering retirement, said he feels good again and plans to return for his 11th season.

McNair

McNair hurt his chest last September, and wound up missing eight games. In December, McNair had surgery to graft a sliver of bone from his right hip onto his sternum to strengthen it. Doctors have been monitoring his recovery with periodic tests, and he was cleared to throw within the last 10 days.

McNair had his worst season as a pro in 2004, a stark contrast to 2003 – when he led the Titans to the playoffs and was NFL co-MVP with Colts quarterback Peyton Manning.

CBB | Bogut, Augustus win Wooden awards

LOS ANGELES — Utah's Andrew Bogut and LSU's Seimone Augustus were runaway winners of the John R. Wooden awards, presented Saturday to college basketball's players of the year.

The award was first presented in 1977 — two years after Wooden retired as the coach at UCLA, where he led the Bruins to 10 NCAA championships in his last 12 years on the job. The first winner was UCLA's Marques Johnson.

Bogut, a 7-foot sophomore, became the first non-American to win the men's award, collecting 4,314 points from a national panel of more than 1,000 voters of sports media members and college basketball experts. Duke's J.J. Redick was second with 3,552 points.

Augustus, a 6-1 junior guard, received 422 points from a panel of more than 200 voters to win the women's award. Monique Currie of Duke was second with 155 points.

Finding the perfect fit

Purchasing the right bra requires correct size, buying matching panties

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although most lingerie advertisers would like people to see bras as hip, sexy and modern, the history of bras is long and varied. The first U.S. patents for bra-like designs appeared around the 1850s to help support and augment the breasts. The once-prevalent corsets were antiquated, and the evolution of the bra began.

When purchasing a bra, the most important thing to consider is the fit. Without a properly fitted bra, a woman can have too much or not enough support, problems with the bra digging into her skin or other issues with overall comfort.

"I like a bra with some padding, but not excessive, and some sort of push-up support," said Melissa Colbert, sophomore in accounting at Johnson County Community College. "It helps give a bustier appearance."

Push-up bras offer a lot of support. The breasts can look saggy without a push-up bra, even if they aren't saggy to begin with, Colbert said.

Bras can be purchased at a variety of locations and at a variety of prices. A Hanes bra can be purchased at Wal-Mart for around $10, while a newly-released IPEX bra from Victoria's Secret can cost anywhere from $45–50.

"I like to shop at Victoria's Secret," Colbert said. "They are really expensive, but they have the best quality bras I have found."

Wendi Fose, sales associate at Victoria's Secret and junior in advertising, said quality should be an issue when choosing a bra.

"We have a lot of variety, a lot of different collections," Fose said. "The sexier Body by Victoria, the IPEX and the Pink Collection, which are usually cheaper. But you have to remember that you get what you pay for."

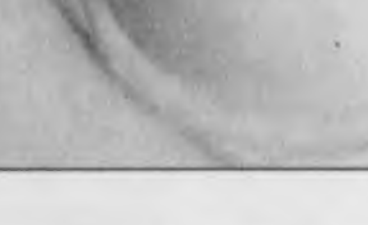
The IPEX is the newest bra from Victoria's Secret. It offers more support, fuller coverage and thicker straps. A lot of bustier women prefer the IPEX because of its "graduated pad," Fose said.

"IPEX offers more coverage where you need it, not where you don't," she said.

Victoria's Secret offers free fitting to allow women to find the bra that is best for them. Patrons are measured around the rib cage and at the fullest point of the breasts.

They are then directed to the "bra wardrobe center," which offers a wide variety of bras in each woman's size, Fose said.

When fitting a bra, the front should be flush with the breastbone, and the bra should not gape or make the breasts puff out at the top.



To ensure that the bra is not too tight or loose, two fingers should be able to be inserted between the vertebrae and back clasp.

Choosing the correct bra is also a matter of personal taste, Fose said.

She also added, "You don't have the perfect bra unless you have panties to match."

Extended-play albums great way to get music heard

"Woman King"

"EP"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

EPs – extended-play albums – are those that contain more material than a single but slightly less than a full album of songs. Artists often use EPs as a way to compile tracks that weren't strong enough to put on albums, spur creativity inbetween album releases or as a way to experiment with their sound and judge a response by critics and fans.

Earlier this year, two different artists released EPs following critically–acclaimed albums from 2004. These are Iron and Wine's "Woman King" and The Fiery Furnaces' aptly titled "EP."

Iron and Wine is actually the pseudonym of one man, Sam Beam. Beam, along with many of his closest friends, have recorded many EPs and two critically–acclaimed albums: 2002's "The Creek Drank the Cradle" and last year's lovely "Our Endless Numbered Days."

As with all of Beam's releases, "Woman King" follows a sort of mini-concept throughout each of its tracks. "The Creek Drank the Cradle" was a lo-fi tribute to innocence, while "Our Endless Numbered Days" examined human mortality. "Woman King" tackles the subject of women of all kinds: fallen, absent, loved, etc.

The opening title track prophesies in the chorus that some day "we may see a woman king." The most interesting facet of this song (and of all of the songs on the EP) is how Beam has fleshed out his music while still keeping his sense of beauty and melody intact. Beam's various releases have seen him go from guitar and crackly lo-fi production to a smoother sound. In this EP, odd percussion, piano and electric guitar are added to the mix.

The second track, "Jezebel," is an account of the infamous Phoenician princess from Bible lore. Jezebel caused trouble for Israel until Jehu came to overthrow her house. He threw her out of a window and trampled her with his horse when he left the town. When Jezebel's servants returned to recover her body, all that was left was her skull, feet and hands. Dogs devoured the remainder of her body.

Jezebel was undoubtedly an unholy person, but scholars have recently theorized that Jezebel's overthrow was due to her threat to Israel's patriarchal society. Beam paints the heroine in her story with sympathy: "She was born to be the woman we could blame/ Make me a beast half as brave." Beam's narrator regrets that he never got to say, "Lay her my love/ You're the only shape I'll pray to, Jezebel."

The remainder of the songs are just as beautiful and awe-inspiring. "My Lady's House" is a song of Beam sitting in his living room and admiring the love of his life sitting by the fire across the room, and "Evening on the Ground (Lilith's Song)" is an ode to trysts in a garden.

"Woman King" contains some of Iron and Wine's best work to date. It makes one excited to see how Beam will expand on his new musical ideas in future releases.

The second of these EPs is by The Fiery Furnaces, a brother-sister team (Matthew and Eleanor Friedberger) from Brooklyn. Simply titled "EP," this release contains singles, rarities and non-album tracks from the Furnaces' career.

Last year the duo released the ambitious, 76-minute masterpiece, "Blueberry Boat." "EP" takes the band's wildly creative ideas and consolidates its strengths to create a more accessible, 40-minute album bursting with pop energy.

"Single Again" opens the album with pounding bass and heavy synth lines before Eleanor enters, singing, almost coyly, about her abusive marriage and how she wishes she were single again. The song has slightly disturbing lyrics, but Eleanor sings the song so innocently, and the music is so catchy that one submits to the song's charm.

"Here Comes the Summer" is a wonderful song about looking forward to the carefree summer. "Sing for Me" has Matt as the vocalist, and it describes a sailor who looks forward to returning home to his daughter.

This album also has songs bursting with numerous styles and time signatures just like "Blueberry Boat"; the only difference is that these songs are much shorter and more accessible. One example is "Smelling Cigarettes," which tells the story of "too much vodka and too much tequila" used to deal with the loss of a job.

The Fiery Furnaces have shown unbelievable skill and talent in just three albums, each one almost bettering the last. "EP" is an excellent introduction to this wildly inventive band.

These EPs find two wonderful indie acts expanding their catalogue with new styles and forward-looking ideas. I cannot wait for these albums, because with EPs as brilliant as these, there is no way they can go wrong from here.

ALL-STAR | Future Wildcats play against legends

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Kansas All-Stars player Steph Wittman moves to the basket around Laurie Koehn during the All-Stars game against the K-State Seniors Legends at the Bicentennial Center in Salina, Kan. Koehn scored 33 points on the night.

For the rest of the game, the three future Wildcats played alongside Madden, Domenico, Ohlde, Koehn and Washburn University's Carla Sintra, who filled in for Wecker.

Also in attendance was Jackie Stiles, who played at Southwest Missouri State and is the NCAA's all-time leading scorer with 3,371 points. Stiles served as the coach for the Legends.

Hamlin led the future K-State trio in points with 20, Gipson grabbed 8 rebounds and Lehning finished with eight assists.

After watching the three future Wildcats play, Domenico said she was impressed with what she saw, and she is optimistic about the trio's future at K-State.

"Each one of them worked really hard today and showed their athleticism," Domenico said. "I'm very impressed. I'm excited to watch them play."

Koehn led all scorers with 33 points, 27 of which came on her nine 3-pointers. Koehn continually wowed the crowd with her range, even launching up a three-point attempt from out of bounds that nearly went in.

Koehn said the game was all about having fun, but she was serious about not getting beat by high school players.

"We don't want to go out there and lose to high schoolers," she said. "We have a little bit of pride about that. It was a relaxed game. Obviously, we cheated a lot."

Hamlin said the opportunity to play with some of the best basketball players from the state was a great experience she will never forget.

"It's exciting to say that I'm going to go to the same college that they went to and try to follow in their footsteps, and to know that I can play with them," Hamlin said.

Van Cleave places 3rd at Thunderbird Invitational

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fierce competition proved to be too much for the K-State men's golf team in this weekend's two-day Arizona State University's Thunderbird Invitational in Tempe, Ariz.

The Wildcats' combined score of 897 on 54 holes landed K-State in 13th place in the 15-team field.

"When you play against that type of competition and your game's off, it's about where you're going to finish," Coach Tim Norris said.

While the other Wildcats struggled, senior Matt Van Cleave notched another top-10 finish, tying for third with a combined score of 213.

"I hit the ball really well and had three solid rounds," Van Cleave said. "That made the course play a lot easier."

Norris said he was impressed with Van Cleave's performance at the Thunderbird.

"Matt did great," Norris said. "There was a lot of All-Americans at the tournament, so that says something."

Unfortunately, the competition and the windy conditions on the par-71, 7,025-yard Arizona State Karsten course did not bode well for senior Nick Schumacher, juniors Tyler Cummins and Ben Kern and freshman Clay Hodge.

"The other guys tried to battle through it," Norris said. "Their games were just off."

Kern and Schumacher tied for 63rd, Cummins finished at 76th and Hodge took 78th.

Kern said he was less than pleased with his performance.

"My game didn't go so well, and the team didn't do well," Kern said.

Still, Kern was able to take a few positives from the experience.

"The competition was phenomenal," Kern said, "I don't want to go out every week and play nobody – playing against good teams gets your mind set.'

All 15 teams were top-50 teams, including a few top-10 teams.

UNLV, ranked No. 2 in the nation, took first place, despite the absence of Ryan Moore, currently the top player in the country. Moore was not in attendance because he was competing as an amateur at The Masters.

K-State resumes competition April 16-17 when it heads north to Akron, Ohio, for the First Energy Intercollegiate.

know my capabilities and I do not have to impress them."

Coach Rovelto, who traveled with his team to the Texas Relays, said he had several reasons for sending a limited number of his athletes to the meet.

"We took certain athletes to the Texas Relays because they needed the experience in those higher pressure situations, and they also need to compete in more challenging environments," he said. "Basically, the kids that were there are national qualifiers and people who are certainly going to score points at the conference level."

Vetter's hammer throw of 188-02 was the third-best mark in K-State history, and Groves threw a personal-best distance of 170-10 in the discus.

Junior Coby Cost finished second in the discus with a throw of 169-04 and added his name to K-State's list of NCAA Midwest Regional qualifiers, which now stands at 15.

Like the Texas Relays, Rovelto said the ESU Relays helped his team gain confidence.

"There were a lot of kids that had personal bests," Rovelto said. "Overall, it looked like it was a pretty good meet. There were only a couple of kids who came away disappointed with what happened."

K-State will split its squad once again next weekend as it competes at the Mt. SAC Relays in Walnut, Calif., and the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz.

Sloth bear cub arrives at zoo

Jack and Thelma are the sloth bears on exhibit, and they're also proud, first-time parents at Sunset Zoological Park.

Thelma gave birth to their male cub on Dec. 29, with the public unveiling Saturday.

"Saturday is the perfect day for unveiling," general curator Ryan Gulker said. "Actually, this is the most active I've seen the cub yet."

This sloth bear cub marks the first cub to be born at the Sunset Zoo in 20 years. The new cub is one of three newborns in the nation.

"Due to this species' mating habits being seasonal, it truly is unique to have one in Manhattan," Gulker said.

At birth, the cub weighed one pound. Much like a newborn puppy, it was born hairless and with its eyes closed.

A common misconception of the sloth bear is that they are slow moving. The discoverers of the mammal assumed that the curled toes and the long claws meant they were a sloth, but this animal is actually a species of bear, Scott Shoemaker, zoo director, said.

The mother is protective of her cubs. Sloth bear cubs are the only cubs in the bear family to ride their mothers' backs. They will stay with the mother for two to three years after birth.

Joan Shull, zoo volunteer, said she saw Thelma's protectiveness.

"I was the first one here this morning," Shull said. "When Thelma saw me near the exhibit's fence, she stood on her hind legs and roared at me."

For now, the cub remains nameless. There will be a naming contest in the future that will be determined through donations.

His father, Jack, was named this way. Jack was the first hand-raised sloth bear born at the Sunset Zoo 20 years ago. However, Jack is not kept with his cub.

"The male dominancy trait could potentially cause harm to the young cub," Gulker said, "but possibly in a few months they can be reunited."

The zoo is expecting snow leopard cubs, a baby chimp and a colobis monkey to be born soon.

"It should be a banner year at Sunset," Gulker said.

Teams participate in soccer tournament despite weather

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 150 people on 26 different teams played soccer in the rain for a cause.

The students, both greek and non-greek, participated in the second annual soccer shootout Sunday, hosted by Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and Delta Delta Delta sorority.

Although it was sprinkling during the entire tournament, it did not start raining until the final teams were playing.

"We were really excited about it not raining until the end," said Will Janousek, sophomore in fisheries and wildlife biology and external vice president of Lambda Chi Alpha.

"We didn't want to cancel the tournament."

The tournament lasted from 10:30 a.m. until about 3:30 p.m., when the winners were declared.

The winners in the women's bracket were the Irish Barmaids and the winners of the men's bracket was Brian Seigel's team.

Even so, Janousek said the competition was just for fun and to promote awareness of the philanthropies.

The organizations raised about $1,500 for their philanthropies.

The three-on-three soccer tournament was put on by Lambda Chi Alpha and Delta Delta Delta to benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket and St. Jude's hospital.

"This was more for the Manhattan community," he said.

"I hope the participants enjoyed the day and playing but thought about what they were playing for."

The goal of the tournament was to raise money for each chapter's philanthropies, the Flinthills Bread Basket and the Children's Cancer Research fund.

"It was good time," said Kelly Maze, sophomore in pre-nursing and member of Tri-Delt.

"I hope participants felt like they were able to use their abilities in supporting people that are aren't able to be as active as us."

Maze said her favorite part of the tournament was at the very beginning.

"All the teams were there and everyone was there," she said.

"It was great to see the interaction between the teams."

Sorority sponsors girl scout campout

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Applying face paint to a girl scout, Kari Parker, freshman in open-option, runs the hair salon and make-over station during the Camp Jam at Kappa Delta. Camp Jam was one of the activities the sorority did with the girls during the Kappa Delta Kampout, which included 51 girl scouts in grades four through six.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Face painting, juggling and constructing paper airplanes were just some of the activities local girl scouts participated in Friday.

Kappa Delta sorority hosted their second annual indoor sleepover for girl scouts from Manhattan, Junction City, Council Grove and Wamego areas. There were 50 girls who attended from fourth, fifth or sixth grades.

"They were all young girls, and they could get kind of crazy," said Macy Wendler, freshman in apparel design. "We were loaded with activities. We had something to do pretty much the entire time."

The night kicked off with the Camp Jam, which was where the girls did many activities within 45 minutes and were judged at the end.

"The whole purpose of it was to be creative and work with one another," said Trini Najera, sophomore in mass communications. "There was a huge variety of the different things they came up with."

One of the activities was having the girls say what they thought the best girl scout was, said Najera, who was one of two judges.

"It was really, really fun to see what they came up with them and to see what it meant to be the perfect girl scout," she said. "Each one had their own uniqueness, which made it really hard to choose which one was better."

Najera said the Camp Jam portion was something the girl scouts enjoyed.

"You could tell they had a lot of fun especially by how much energy they had by how they presented it and how they were involved in everything," she said.

Jenny Danenberg, junior in history and girl scout chair for the sorority, said the campfire was fun for the sorority members since she was able to see her sisters act silly.

Kappa Deltas taught the girl scouts a skit that the the girls preformed at the campfire, she said.

To end the evening, they all watched "The Incredibles," Danenberg said.

"We wore them out pretty bad," she said. "Five minutes into the movie they were sleeping."

Kappa Delta patches were given to the girl scouts before they left.

"It was a lot more fun than I expected," Wendler said. "They really had a good time."

SGA directs renters' rights information booth

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Governing Association is sponsoring an informational booth for student tenants.

The purpose of the booth is to make students more aware of their rights as renters in Manhattan and of a free inspection program Manhattan Fire Department provides.

Matthew King, junior in political science and chair of the governmental relations committee, said the idea for the booth originated in governmental relations and now has Senate-wide support.

The booth will have a presentation board with details about the rental inspection program in Manhattan and contact information for the program, and states that the program is free of charge.

"We feel because of these three things, this program should be heavily utilized," he said. "However, it is not, and we see that as a problem.

"There are several things that may seem fine with rental properties, but a lot of times students don't realize the safety hazards some of these things pose."

There will be pamphlets defining common code violations from the city. A handout summarizing the pamphlet will also be available.

King said all volunteers are knowledgeable about the subject, so they will be able to answer any questions that students may have.

Nacole Boan, junior in political science and member of governmental relations committee, is a volunteer with the booth.

Boan said she is hoping the booth will serve as an outlet to students.

"We want students to know that if they are having problems with their house, they have a number they can contact so the problem will be alleviated," she said.

Provisional ballots could change election results

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Election results will become official today, which is the canvass of the election.

The canvass is when provisional ballots are considered to be counted.

Rich Vargo, Riley County clerk, said there are about 80 ballots that will be considered, which could change the election results for City Commission.

Results from Tuesday's election showed the third seat for Commission is still in contention.

If the results stay the same, Jayme Morris-Hardeman will take the seat.

Morris-Hardeman finished the race five votes ahead of Jim Sherow and 14 votes ahead of Sam Robinson. Any of those three could have enough votes from the provisional ballots today.

A provisional ballot is cast when a voter is not on the list of registered voters at a particular polling place. Most of the time people just go to wrong polling location, Vargo said.

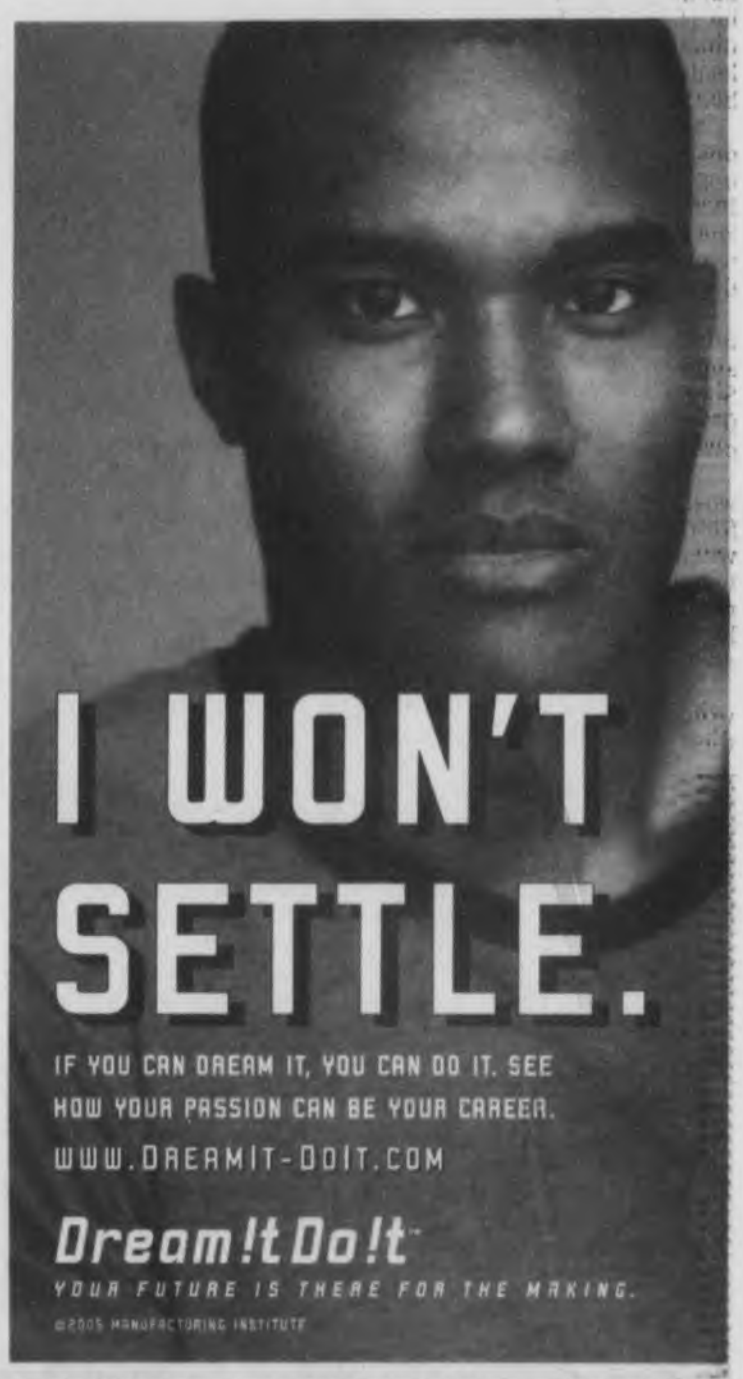
"That's what we go back and research between elections, and the canvass is to see who are registered voters," he said.

Provisional ballots in consideration will go before the Board of County Commissioners at 10 a.m. today at the Board of County Commissioners room in the Riley County Courthouse. It is open to the public.

Vargo said provisional ballots changed the results for the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board race six years ago.

Morris-Hardeman said she is ready to know for sure who won the seat.

"I've been anxious for weeks now," she said. "I really thought it would be over on Tuesday and we'd know. It's been a very tense week."



Sherow said the marriage amendment on the ballot made the elections different than normal, so there was no way to know what to expect.

"It was just out of character with all other general elections," he said. "There was no way to anticipate what would happen."

Fast facts

Commission seats in contention

- Jayme-Morris-Hardeman 3,483 votes
- Jim Sherow 3,478 votes
- Sam Robinson 3,469 votes

Whoa... GHETTO...
What's so "Fabulous" about a walled quarter where Jews were forced to live in Nazi Germany?

You're So RETARDED...
A Person of Lowered Intelligence ≠ Ignorant, Stupid, Incapable of being Normal

It's probably PMS...
Maybe next time, think of who birthed you into this world.

Thats GAY...
Did you know that statistically, ONE out of every TEN people around you are Bi/Gay/Lesbian?

I was GYPPED...
Gypsies have been persecuted since before the 14th Century. Don't you think the discrimination needs to stop?

This was NIGGER-RIGGED...
Ignorant term, considering Blacks invented the following: Refrigerator, Helicopter, Elevator, Cellular Phone (just to name a few).

What a bunch of WHITE TRASH...
Why would you want to make fun of those who may be starving or homeless because they can't afford any better?

Cardinals to keep quiet until successor chosen

By William J. Kole
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY – Pilgrims gazed forlornly at the third-floor window where Pope John Paul II traditionally appeared on Sundays, and cardinals held to their vow of public silence ahead of next week's secret vote on a successor.

The cardinals who celebrated Masses around Rome confined their remarks to tightly scripted homilies after pledging Saturday to make no more public statements betraying their thinking before selecting a new leader for the world's 1.1 billion Roman Catholics.

Mourning pilgrims and curious tourists lined up in a pelting rain to visit St. Peter's Basilica, where John Paul was laid to rest Friday alongside the remains of other popes through the ages.

Throughout his 26-year pontificate, John Paul gave public audiences on Wednesdays and Sundays, greeting the faithful from his third-floor window overlooking the square.

His last public appearance was March 30, three days before he died at the age of 84, when he made a dramatic attempt to say a few words but managed only a raspy sound, his mouth open and his face contorted in pain.

"It's really sad to look up the window and know he won't be there anymore," said Melica Ventura, 25, of El Salvador.

Catholics around the world packed churches Sunday in tribute to John Paul.

Even the tiny church in reclusive communist North Korea – where the official state media was three days late to announce the pope's passing – held a Mass attended by about 100 faithful.

At the Vatican, the grotto deep beneath the basilica holding John Paul's body remained closed, and the Holy See was expected to say Monday when it would reopen.

Keeping it shut was seen as a way to empty the Eternal City of the huge throngs of pilgrims who converged on the capital for the pope's funeral.

By Sunday, most appeared to have left, but there were still large knots of hangers-on, many from John Paul's native Poland.

They read Polish newspapers and formed a long line outside a Polish confessional at St. Peter's, one of several that offer the faithful a chance to confess in various languages.

Poles also gathered for Sunday Mass at St. Stanislav, a Polish church in Rome, where they made "a connection of sorrow and also of hope for a better future," said Martin Kotas of Krakow, Poland.

Cardinal Camillo Ruini, the late pope's vicar for Rome, celebrated a late afternoon Mass for the pontiff at St. Peter's.

Earthquake strikes near Indonesia

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JAKARTA, Indonesia – A strong, undersea earthquake hit Sunday near the Indonesian island of Sumatra, causing people to flee their homes in fear of a tsunami like the one that devastated the island in December, seismologists said.

The 6.8-magnitude tremor's epicenter was about 70 miles southwest of Padang, a city in western Sumatra, the Hong Kong Observatory said. The temblor was not strong enough to cause a tsunami, meteorologists said.

"Many people in Padang are panicking," said Yusuf, an official from Indonesia's Geophysics and Meteorology Agency who uses only one name.

"People have left their houses, especially those living on the coast."

Tremors from the earthquake were felt in several areas surrounding the Malaysian city of Kuala Lumpur, national meteorological chief Chow Kok Kee told TV 3 news.

The quake was recorded at 5:29 p.m. in the Kepulauan Mentawai region, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

There have been no reports of damage, USGS spokeswoman Clarice Ransom said.

Sumatra was devastated by the Dec. 26 tsunami and earthquake that killed nearly 183,000 people in 11 countries and left another 129,000 missing.

Indonesia, the world's most populous Muslim nation, was the hardest hit with at least 126,000 people killed and more than 500,000 left homeless.

The region has experienced regular aftershocks since.

On March 28, an 8.7-magnitude quake hit a string of islands off Sumatra, killing at least 647 people.

House majority leader Tom DeLay's ethics questioned

By Lou Kesten
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The No. 3 Republican in the Senate said Sunday that embattled House Majority Leader Tom DeLay needs to answer questions about his ethics and "let the people then judge for themselves."

Sen. Rick Santorum's comments seem to reflect the nervousness among congressional Republicans about the fallout from the increased scrutiny into DeLay's way of doing business. One of DeLay's GOP colleagues in the House called him an "absolute embarrassment" and doubted DeLay would last as majority leader.

DeLay, R-Texas, has been dogged in recent months by reports of possible ethics violations. There have been questions about his overseas travel, campaign payments to family members and his connections to lobbyists who are under investigation.

"I think he has to come forward and lay out what he did and why he did it and let the people then judge for themselves," said Santorum, chairman of the Senate Republican Conference.

"But from everything I've heard, again, from the comments and responding to those, is everything he's done was according to the law," Santorum told ABC's "This Week."

"Now you may not like some of the things he's done," Santorum said. "That's for the people of his district to decide, whether they want to approve that kind of behavior or not."

DeLay's spokesman, Dan Allen, told The Associated Press on Sunday that the congressman "looks forward to the opportunity of sitting down with the ethics committee chairman and ranking member to get the facts out and to dispel the fiction and innuendo that's being launched at him by House Democrats and their liberal allies."

Democrats criticize nominee

By Siobhan McDonough
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ahead of a contentious confirmation hearing, Democrats on Sunday sharpened their criticism of President Bush's nominee to be U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, saying John Bolton has a poor record as a policy-maker and little regard for the world body.

But the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said Bolton was the president's "instrument of reform" for the United Nations and that his bluntness should not disqualify him from serving.

Lugar said he would vote to confirm Bolton, but committee Democrats who appeared on the Sunday talk shows said they expected to go against the president.

The committee, with a 10-8 Republican majority, planned a Monday morning hearing on Bolton, who has served in the past three Republican administrations and has been one of the strongest conservative voices on foreign affairs.

Senate Democrats have circulated a portion of a two-year-old Senate Intelligence Committee report questioning whether Bolton pressured a State Department intelligence analyst who tried to tone down language in a 2002 speech on Cuba.

In that speech, Bolton said Cuba was trying to develop biological weapons and was transferring its technical expertise to countries hostile to the United States.

At the time, some officials said the information should not have been publicly disclosed. Cuba has denied the weapons allegation.

Bolton, the undersecretary of state for arms control and international security, has stirred controversy because of his gruffness, occasional outbursts, opposition to a number of treaties and outspoken criticism of the United Nations.

"I appreciate that many people have views about John Bolton's personality, his bluntness, the way that he handles himself," Lugar told CNN's "Late Edition."

"These are not, in my judgment, disqualifiers for a presidential nominee who is going to the U.N. to create reform," Lugar said.

But Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., told CNN he would not vote to confirm Bolton. He said at a time when the president is relying more on U.N. cooperation with U.S. efforts in the Sudan and the Middle East, "I think it's a bad idea to have a man there who doesn't have much regard for the U.N."

When Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada was asked if he would consider joining a filibuster on the president's nominee, he told CBS's "Face the Nation" he didn't know.

Royal newlyweds enjoy honeymoon

By Michael McDonough
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Prince Charles and Camilla, the Duchess of Cornwall, emerged from their honeymoon estate Sunday to attend a small church service with about 200 villagers who braved blustery winds to greet the royal newlyweds.

Driving into the Crathie Parish Church, the couple waved to crowds as they pulled their silver Audi off to the side of the chapel and entered.

Locals waved and snapped pictures.

Prince Charles wore a tartan kilt.

His bride wore a matching fuchsia hat and coat.

"I think she's lovely," said Lynn Hutchings, 56, a nurse visiting her sister in the Scottish highlands.

"I didn't think he should marry her, but I've changed my opinion."

Robbie Middleton, a lay preacher, delivered Sunday's sermon, which focused on tuning into one's spirituality and did not refer to the wedding.

"I wish them every happiness and a fulfilled life together," Middleton said after the service.

Charles and Camilla shook hands and chatted with villagers after the sermon and then returned to their honeymoon estate.

Denise Glover, a 61-year-old housewife, congratulated the prince, saying, "I'm sure you'll be very happy."

The prince replied, "Yes, she is a remarkable lady."

The long-awaited wedding – the second for both – sanctioned a relationship that has spanned more than 30 years and was blamed by some for breaking up the prince's marriage to the late Princess Diana, who died in a 1997 car accident in Paris.

Charles and Camilla – officially the Duke and Duchess of Rothesay when they are in Scotland – are staying at Birkhall, a cozy hunting lodge he inherited from his grandmother.

The prince, who spent his first honeymoon aboard a yacht in the Mediterranean, and Camilla are expected to stay about 10 days on the estate.

The prince has described the early 18th-century home on the royal Balmoral estate as "a unique haven of coziness and character."

He reportedly learned to fish in the River Muick, which flows at the bottom of Birkhall's sloping garden.

Queen Victoria's husband, Prince Albert, bought Birkhall in the 19th century, and it became the Balmoral residence of Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, who died in 2002, leaving it to Charles.

The prince's mother, Queen Elizabeth II, spent some of her honeymoon there after her marriage to Prince Philip.

Pakistan embassy employee's family pleads for his release

By Sameer N. Yacoub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The family of a Pakistani embassy employee kidnapped in Baghdad appealed Sunday for his captors to release him, and al-Qaeda's ally in Iraq claimed to have kidnapped and killed a senior police official.

The kidnappings came as Iraq's most feared terrorist organization issued an Internet statement rejecting any efforts by the new government to make peace.

Malik Mohammed Javed, a consular and community affairs employee at Pakistan's embassy, went miss[illegible]g in Baghdad on Saturday after leaving home to pray at a mosque, officials said.

The previously unknown Omar bin Khattab group claimed responsibility for his kidnapping, and Javed called the embassy to say his abductors had not harmed him, Pakistan's Foreign Ministry said in a statement.

Ministry spokesman Jalil Abbas Jilani said he had no information about the group. There have been no reports of a group by that name existing in Iraq.

The kidnappers' demands were not immediately clear.

Possibly anticipating a demand for Islamabad to close its embassy in Baghdad, Information Minister Sheikh Rashid Ahmed said, "We will neither withdraw our embassy staff nor close the mission."

Javed's son appealed to his father's kidnappers to release him, saying the family was in pain.

"Everyone is crying here," Bilal Malik, 20, told The Associated Press by telephone. "My father has done nothing wrong. He was only going to offer his prayers. They are Muslims. They should release our father who is also a Muslim."

The kidnapping comes nine months after insurgents abducted and killed two Pakistanis working for a Kuwaiti company in Iraq. Their abductors had demanded that Pakistan promise not to send any troops to Iraq.

Pakistan, a key U.S. ally in the war against terrorism, has refused to deploy peacekeepers and has urged its citizens to avoid coming here.

WHEEL | Student competes against Big 12 opponents

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Lauren Lindahl, junior in management, watches other contestants playing on the Wheel of Fortune before her turn Saturday. Wheel of Fortune taped the "Big 12 College Week" shows for three days, taping five different episodes each day.

The group of K-State audience members, one of the larger student groups there, exceeded 50 supporters.

Lauren Lindahl, junior in management, was K-State's representative and competitor. In order to appear on the show, Lindahl and the other contestants had to go through an auditioning process, which landed the best 15 on TV.

Lindahl said she was pleasantly surprised by the turnout of K-State support.

"It was good to see so many purple shirts in the audience," she said.

Amidst the sea of purple were Lindahl's mother, father, sister and brother, along with a handful of her close friends. Her mother, Kim Lindahl, was enormously proud of her oldest child.

"I was so excited for her and glad that she was having fun," she said. "They all did great."

Reflecting back on her performance, Lindahl said she was nervous the morning of the event, but she then became calmer once the show had finally begun.

"I think I did well," she said. "It definitely wasn't the best I could have done, but I can't complain because I came out with more than I went in with."

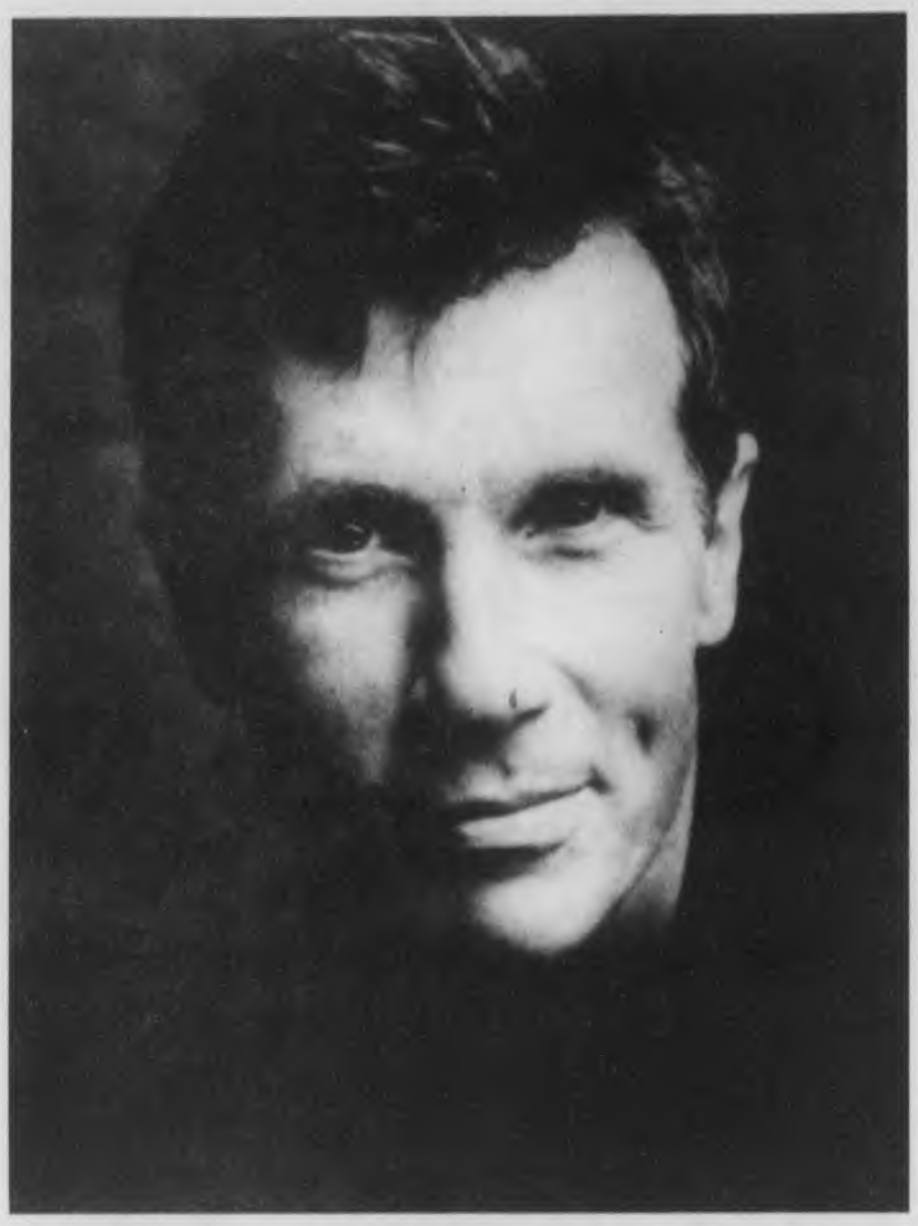
Though the outcome of the games cannot be revealed until the day the show airs, Lindahl admits that once she got caught up in everything that was going on, she made a few "stupid mistakes," which can be expected for contestants on high-pressure game shows.

However, there are other, more costly mistakes that she could have made.

Sajak said that through his more than 20 years of experience, he has noticed a common trend in many contestants.

"The key to the game is to buy vowels," he said. "Almost every show, someone loses because they didn't buy a vowel."

Regardless of who won, Lindahl said that the competition was good. She competed against David Ettenger from the University of Colorado and Michael Gilbert from Oklahoma State University. She found them very encouraging with good sportsmanship.



"We were all good players, and the hardest thing was the luck of the wheel," Lindahl said.

Her favorite part of the experience was the people she met and the prizes she won.

"All the students were really nice, and we were all in the same boat," she said. "It was a really good experience."

Results remain the same in commission race

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although Jim Sherow only needed six votes more than Jayme Morris-Hardeman to take the third City Commision seat and Sam Robinson could have won with 15 votes, the results stayed the same.

In fact, Morris-Hardeman pulled ahead with 3,514 votes, 17 more than Sherow, who received 3,497 votes. Robinson gained some votes to come within in two of Sherow, with 3,495 votes.

Rich Vargo, Riley County clerk, said if a recount is desired, it must be requested by 5 p.m. today.

"It went real smooth," Vargo said.

Morris-Hardeman said she is relieved everything is finalized.

"I'm very excited to get started," she said.

The new commissioners have an orientation meeting tonight and will be sworn in April 19.

Besides Morris-Hardeman, Tom Phillips will be taking office, and Mark Hatesohl will continue as a city commissioner.

Part of her success came from student support, which may have made the difference in the election, Morris-Hardeman said.

At the top of her agenda is the quality of rentals, Morris-Hardeman said. Downtown redevelopment will also be important.

"I think we need to look at safety of rental programs," Morris-Hardeman said. "I think it's time to start studying the options for rental inspections."

Robinson said she has no regrets.

"I really enjoyed myself and learned a lot," she said. "Of course I was disappointed, but not discouraged."

The closeness of the election made it fun, Robinson said.

"I spent less money than any other candidate and came within 19 votes," she said. "This election should remind us all how important every vote is and that just a few people can make a difference."

Student arrested on rape charge

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County Police Department officers arrested K-State student Aaron Darks Saturday afternoon on a charge of rape.

Darks, 19, is a freshman in open option.

He redshirted as a linebacker for the K-State football team last season.

Darks was released from the team prior to the start of spring practice for a violation of team rules.

Although he is still listed on the university data base, Darks withdrew from all of his courses earlier this year, according to a news release from K-State Sports Information.

Darks' bond was set at $25,000.

A sentencing date has not yet been set.

Kids TV show teaches cooking, promotes nutrition; DVD coming soon

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are "Kids a Cookin' and Movin'" in a kitchen in Dole Hall.

Three K-State organizations partnered to produce 104 five- to 10-minute "Kids a Cookin'" shows of children preparing simple recipes with host Karen Arnold, who tosses in a lesson on food and kitchen safety or good nutrition. Now in the works is a DVD that includes segments on exercise and a related field trip. Part of "Kids a Cookin' and Movin'" was filmed Monday and the rest will be filmed on April 18.

"It's been a way to teach kids basic cooking skills," said Kathy Walsten, nutrition educator with the Family Nutrition Program. "This year's project has been to make a DVD with lessons that go along with new recipes."

K-State Research and Extension's Family Nutrition Program, the Department of Communications and the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center work together to select the recipes, write the scripts and film and edit the tape.

Children from across the state audition to be on the program. Each child selected is usually featured on two shows preparing two different recipes, which range from Apple Slice Pancakes and Pita Pocket Salad to Potato Chip Chicken Fingers and Ice Cream in a Bag. The children read the recipes, add and combine the ingredients and taste the food at the end of the segment.

Sarah Tajchman, 12, auditioned last year after hearing a friend talk about "Kids a Cookin'." She has made five recipes for the shows and sometimes fixes the recipes again at home.

"I like to cook, and I'm in 4-H," she said. "I enjoy acting."

Arnold said she works well with the children.

"For the most part, the kids do a fantastic job," Arnold said. "It's usually something new for them."

Arnold, a mother of four, said she was chosen as the show's host because of her "mom-ness." Her favorite recipe from the show is the Farmer's Market Salsa.

"A lot of the recipes I use with my family," she said.

The shows, which air on Smoky Hill Public Television at 9:30 a.m. on Saturdays, are compiled onto DVDs and VHS tapes and used in classrooms, after-school programs and even nursing homes across Kansas. They are produced in English and Political language key topic in Douglas lecture

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The encouragement of an ownership society is no longer the great motivating notion it once was.

"Since most people understand that as wealth becomes more concentrated, so too does political power. The really key question is whether Bush's rhetoric can succeed in promoting an uncritical view of ownership," said Stephen Douglas, emeritus professor at the University of Illinois, in a Lou Douglas Lecture on Monday.

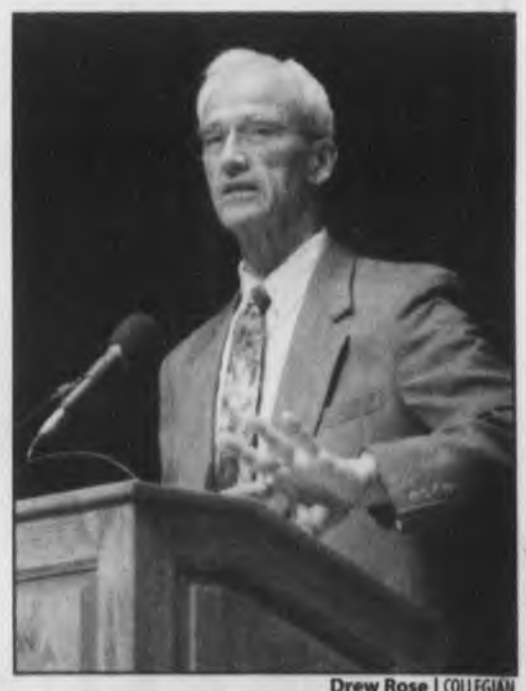
Douglas, whose father the lecture series is named for, gave the final lecture in the year-long celebration of the 25th anniversary of the series.

A plaque honoring Lou Douglas and the donors who have made the lecture series possible was unveiled prior to the lecture. The plaque will be permanently mounted in the foyer of Forum Hall within a few weeks.

Stephen Douglas asked the audience to explore with him the political language to which they had been exposed in recent months.

"The importance of language in politics is fairly obvious," he said.

Douglas credited the professor Murray Edelman for alerting him to political language.



Douglas said ownership in society appeals to some more than others.

"My further observation is that the appeal of ownership has momentum in American society and culture," he said.

Douglas said the current ownership campaign under President Bush is aimed at Social Security reform.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Disgraced Cardinal
Cardinal Bernard Law, whose failures to stop sexually abusive priests sparked the worst crisis in American church history, led a Mass for thousands mourning Pope John Paul II at St. Peter's Basilica on Monday after police whisked away a victim protesting outside. Law celebrated the Mass without disruption.

Jobs for guns program
Hundreds of Palestinian gunmen have signed pledges to halt violence in exchange for government jobs, and Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas hopes to bring more militants on board, Palestinian officials said. The new program is meant to counter complaints that Abbas is doing little to control the armed groups.

Man caught at Capitol
Police on Monday tackled and forcibly dragged away a man dressed in black and carrying two suitcases who had stationed himself in front of the west side of the U.S. Capitol. The midday incident — which occurred during one of Washington's busiest tourist times — had forced police to evacuate that side of the Capitol.

Obesity rates steadily increasing

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sugar-coat it, super-size it and stick it in the deep fat fryer – it's getting harder to eat healthy in a world that values the value meal.

Recent studies done by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment have shown an exponential increase of people suffering from obesity and weight gain.

Since 1992, obesity has increased 70 percent among adults in Kansas. Now, almost one in five adults in the state could be labeled as "obese." Researchers have also estimated that almost two-thirds of the adult population in Kansas is overweight.

While Kansas does not have the worst obesity rate in the country, the state average is almost equal to the national average. George Wang, assistant professor of human nutrition at K-State, said there has also been a surprising increase of children 18 and under that are battling weight problems.

"The trend is that people are getting more and more heavy and more and more overweight," Wang said.

Wang, who is currently working on research involving obesity and hormone levels, described how recent studies have shown that people who suffer from obesity run the risk of severe health problems, including heart disease, diabetes and cancer.

For those needing to lose weight fast, the Atkins diet has enticed millions with its rich protein option. Kathy Grunewald, professor of human nutrition at K-State, chuckled when she recalled that the "fad" of the high protein diet seems to resurface every 10 years and was even popular when she was in college.

"It's a nice drop of weight in the first few weeks," Grunewald said. "It really gives people an incentive."

Looking at weight issues, it is hard to determine if people fall into the category of obese or overweight.

Many scientists define obesity by a person's body mass index, which can be found by dividing the individual's weight in kilograms by height in meters squared. But some wonder if obesity should be defined in different terms.

"The conflicts are, should we use these equations or use body fats?" Grunewald said. "And then some say obesity isn't the problem, it's physical fitness, and it just keeps on going."

But as obesity and weight control become more of an issue, people just don't seem to have time to deal with it.

"We are extremely busy – we have step-parents and stepchildren and that takes time, and we end up not taking care of ourselves," Grunewald said.

And in a society that idolizes up the thin and the beautiful, Americans get mixed signals when they pass a dozen fast-food restaurants and tell themselves to indulge.

"We watch MTV, dancing and Miss America, and we're caught between what we do and what we idolize," Grunewald said.

Emilee Belknap, senior in dietetics, has learned from her courses in nutrition and dietetics that a lack of exercise and a complacent culture can combine for an unhealthy mix.

"Things are just getting more convenient," Belknap said.

The purified simple sugars found in everyone's favorite candies, cookies and cake have increased almost 10 percent in the average American's diet in the past 10 years, Wang said.

Grunewald, who has worked as a dietitian and nutritionist in the past, said that when she sits down with someone who is fighting weight problems, she tries to make goals that are feasible.

"I analyze what they're doing and suggest changes," Grunewald said. "We figure out something that works for them."

If struggling with weight control, Wang said that cutting back on what you eat could give faster, more satisfying results.

"Never eat over full," Wang said. "Just stop – that's enough."

Speaker says Social Security system safe

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Speaking to the Riley County Democrats, Max Skidmore, professor at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, explains his plan to improve Social Security. Skidmore discussed Bush's plan, presented his own and answered questions from the audience at Valentino's.

An adviser to Congressman Dennis Moore has made assurances that the current Social Security system is in no danger.

Max Skidmore, nationally and internationally recognized authority on Social Security and Medicare, addressed the monthly meeting of the Riley County Democrats on Monday, attempting to quell fears that current Social Security provisions would not adequately cover current and upcoming retirees.

Skidmore said that often the fears of citizens are exaggerated due to government propaganda and "pessimistic projections that don't normally materialize."

"During the first few Clinton years, they (researchers) predicted we were going to have a deficit," he said. "Well, they couldn't see far in the future, because we quickly had a surplus."

He said that the projections that predict a bankruptcy of Social Security are false because they "cook the books" by purposefully choosing unlikely economic scenarios and catastrophes.

Audience questions included concerns about Baby Boomer-compensation, overall dependency ratios and inflation.

Skidmore said that Social Security always compensates for inflation, so a person cannot outlive his benefits and the system will never go bankrupt.

He later said that during the peak of Baby Boomer retirement in the year 2030, the conditions for the overall dependency ratio will be more favorable than now.

"In 1965, the proportion of the population in the workforce was 35 percent. Now it's 48 percent," he said. "Never again will the overall dependency ratio be as bad as it was in 1965."

He said that women entering and remaining in the workforce necessitates better conditions now or in the future than at any other point in our history.

The overall dependency ratio is the comparative percentage of the workforce versus dependents. This means that, currently in the United States, 48 percent of the population is paying into Social Security, up 13 percent from 1965.

Kathryn Focke, Riley County Democrats party chair, said last week's visits by Congressman Jim Ryun and Jim Lockhart of the Social Security Administration only told part of the story.

"We feel it's important for Riley Countians to hear the whole story on Social Security reform," she said.

"Frankly, we feel it's important to... explain how Bush's proposals would harm everyone, especially the 50-plus population."

TO THE POINT

Make healthy lifestyle part of daily habits

It's no secret that obesity in the United States is a huge problem that is reaching epidemic proportions.

The state of Kansas is no exception.

Since 1992, there has been a 70 percent increase in obesity among Kansas adults, and now, one in five are considered obese. Children are also becoming increasingly overweight.

Fast food, improper eating habits and lack of exercise are just some of the factors to blame for the nation's expanding waistline, and too often, college students fall into these traps.

It is sometimes easier to drive to a fast food restaurant for meals, and consequently, don't get important vitamins.

And once they put on those added pounds, exercise becomes less and less of a priority. Students should realize how easy it is to stay healthy.

There are hundreds of easy-to-make recipes specifically designed for people with little time or money who want to eat healthier: the perfect description of a college student.

And, as K-State students, the availability of one of the best student recreation centers in the Big 12 Conference is far too often ignored.

To reduce the risk of obesity, a simple rearrangement of your daily schedule can free up time to cook healthy foods and exercise properly. As always, tackling the problem before it exists is the best prevention method of all.

PC users suffer from low self-esteem, jealousy of Mac users

SCOTT SEEL

I've only read the first paragraph of Bill's "column" so far, and already I know I'll win this clash.

The mere fact that Bill wrote in the native language of Marlatt Hall should show you why PC lovers – or nerds, as the rest of the campus calls them – are way too weird to be right.

That being said, let me get this out of the way. Mr. Wall has a vast wealth of technical knowledge and know-how in this arena that I am simply not blessed with.

As a result, I will spend the majority of this column on cheap, personal attacks, but there will be some actual points made as well.

The crux of Bill's point is that Apples are overpriced and pretty but serve no practical purpose.

If gaming is your passion, it is true that a Mac probably isn't the best choice, though Blizzard Entertainment – the creator of the "Warcraft" and "Diablo" series as well as "Starcraft" – is a Macintosh company.

However, it is a misnomer to say that Macs, though rather pricey, have no practical usage.

If you know anyone who works in any sort of field related to graphic design, advertising, photography or journalism, the chances that they prefer Macintosh computers are much higher than the chances of your average leet-speaker getting laid.

At the very least, designers and journalists have a certain degree of professional respect for a Mac's capabilities.

I hope Bill remembers how useless Macintosh programs are the next time he reads a PDF with Adobe Acrobat, uses Photoshop to alter the pictures he took of that hot girl across the street who doesn't know his name or designs any sort of a layout in Quark.

All of those programs are either designed for or used heavily on Macintosh computers.

Yes, PC-geeks have their role in society. Believe it or not, I'm friends with a dozen or so – including my opponent on this issue – but their passion is misplaced. Certainly there are some very intelligent people in this world (read: Marlatt Hall) who have the time, created by a lack of social engagements, and technical know-how to create a program that will make your keyboard lights flash to the beat of your techno.

I want you to think about this: Bill argues that PCs are superior because they enable you to free your keyboard from its rhythm-less, monotone existence and make it free to beat to whatever weird, underground cut you happen to be jamming to at 3 a.m. while playing "Counterstrike" in your dorm room.

Lost in all of this is the hypocrisy of my opponent.

Nearly all the PC-nerds I know, despite all their talk of hating Macs, have a secret desire to own one.

Macintoshes fascinate them.

My friend Ryan – a computer programmer, Microsoft employee and diehard PC fan – owns two Macs and loves them.

My roommate – a computer engineering major and former Marlatt Hall resident – has told me many times of his desire to own a Mac.

Even our good friend Bill owns Macs, used to work as a Macintosh technician and would lose control of one or more bodily functions if gifted with a brand new G5.

But most importantly, don't let PC lovers come off so high-and-mighty when it comes to pirating music.

Some of the biggest pirates I know would also be amongst the biggest supporters of Bill's position. Think about mIRC.

So why do these PC lovers want Macs?

The same reason I love them, and the reason everyone else should, too.

They have personality.

Scott Seel wrote this column on the original ENIAC. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Apple a waste of marketshare; PCs offer more useful experience

BILL WALL

Teh f|_||\|[\|\|y 7|-|i|\|g i5, 5c077 c4|\|'7 |234d 7|-|i5, but I bet most of you true PC-lovers can. Knowing how to read "leet-speak" – or even knowing what it is – shows the very start of the division of the computer world and the undeniable superiority of the PC.

Everyone is familiar with those "other" computers. They come in a variety of colors – gray and white – and have some fruit symbol on them: the Macintosh – the bane of the computer world.

Apple computer and all 3 percent of its market share are giving the other 97 percent of the computer world a bad name.

Mac users can best be described as a cult of Birkenstock wearing, hippie tree-huggers. They have their "pretty" computers that do "everything they want it to." Let me translate that for everyone: "I only check e-mail, write papers and steal music. I am a slave to aesthetics and I love using overpriced, overrated equipment."

Most Mac users only do the most basic of tasks. This isn't their fault; it's the computer itself. Try doing anything useful with your Mac, like programming a class project or creating a Web site.

I hope you have plenty of time and money on your hands, because you'll either have to buy new software or find a free program that won't work.

As for entertainment, the Mac isn't too bad if you only like to watch Quicktime movies. The Mac media player is just too stupid to learn how to read other types of movies. Have fun downloading.

The real meat of the entertainment sector for computers is the almighty game. When was the last time you heard anything about a Mac game even being in contention for "game of the year"?

Many games that are hits on the PC are just not made for the Mac. Most companies feel that since there are so few Macs capable of running their game, why bother making a Mac version?

This has hurt Macs more than anything else. History has shown that PC gamers drive the whole computer market, with Macs left in the digital dust.

Comparing the performance between – wait, did I just say comparing? There is no comparison. The fastest PC is nearly twice as fast as the fastest Mac.

Oh, and it costs only a third as much.

The PC simply reigns supreme. A multitude of applications make sure that you'll never be left in the dark when its 11:59 p.m. and a class project has to be in by midnight.

Anyone – yes, anyone – can create their own programs for the PC. One of my friends created a program to flash his keyboard lights with the beat of his music. And if you have trouble with one of the many PC programming languages, just make your own.

The PC has evolved from your grandma's beige behemoth. Now you can get them in as many different styles as there are colors in the 32-bit color scheme (4,294,967,296). Car lovers pimp their rides. PC lovers pimp their cases. Ground effects, case windows, carbon fiber – you name it, and it's a PC accessory.

Mac users: come to the light, for Mac is the darkness. Darkness leads to fear, and fear leads to suffering. With your help we can eradicate this vile plague from the entire earth. We all need do our part to save the world from poorly designed, overpriced, inferior equipment.

You all have nothing to fear. I promise we'll save the iPod.

LMAO. 5c077, j00 g07 pwn3d!!1!!1! Pwn3d 1i<3 4 n00b.

(Laughing My Ass Off. Scott, you got owned! Owned like a newb.)

If at first you don't succeed, keep on sucking till you do succeed.

The voters have spoken, and Kansans don't want Dick Cheney's lesbian daughter to marry Alan Keyes' lesbian daughter in our state.

David Liang: you're in college and you write for the Collegian. I would hope you have a reading level higher than a third grader.

Someone should poop on Elvis Achelpohl for dissing Harry Potter.

Yeah, I burnt that Duke hoodie, and I'd prefer if the Duke dude went back to North Carolina.

Hey, Elvis: go back to Graceland. Harry Potter rules.

Historical lecture commemorates county anniversary

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some audience members may have thought they were listening to the real William Clark recall his famous expedition Monday at the Manhattan Public Library.

That was the goal of Ritchie Doyle, who dressed in period clothing and even colored his hair red to resemble Clark as he spoke.

The lecture is the first in a four-part series presented by the Missouri Humanities Council in partnership with the Manhattan Public Library and the Riley County Historical Society in observance of the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition.

Doyle, as Clark, recollected the expedition's attempt to find a route to the Pacific Ocean across the Louisiana Purchase from May 1804 to September 1806.

Doyle cited weather delays, attempts to establish trust with Native Americans and encounters with bears as challenges the group faced along the way.

As they tried to navigate the "great maze" of the Rocky Mountains, Doyle said the help they received from Indian guides was invaluable.

One of those guides was the well-known Shoshone woman Sacajawea who helped the group communicate with Native Americans.

Lewis and Clark also endured criticism once they returned.

"Maybe we didn't find the best way," Doyle said, speaking as Clark. "But I'll tell you, we were shooting in the dark and we did the best we could."

He added that it was the maps made from the expedition that gave the United States claim to the land.

Doyle, who lives in Montana near the Lewis and Clark route, has spoken as the explorer more than 200 times, including once at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

He said it is important for people to learn about history.

"If we don't know our past, it's hard to know our path presently," Doyle said. "It helps us remember."

Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum, said she was pleased with the lecture.

"It sort of marks the beginning of the beginning," Collins said. "The exploration of the Louisiana Purchase started the westward expansion that Riley County was a part of."

Author takes audience into book

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Author Michael Cunningham read a passage from his Pulitzer Prize-winning book "The Hours" Monday at McCain Auditorium.

"The Hours" is a 1999 novel about author Virginia Woolf and characters who are affected by her book "Mrs. Dalloway." A movie version of the book starring Nicole Kidman, Julianne Moore and Meryl Streep was made in 2002.

The selected passage featured the character of Laura Brown, a housewife who is unhappy with her ordinary and simple life.

Audience members said hearing Cunningham read his work brought the story to life and gave them insight into his book.

"You totally know how the characters are viewed by the writer," Helen West, junior in secondary education, said. "You see them differently than anyone else would see them when you read it, but when the author reads it, you see it as the author wanted it to be."

Dan Stahl, president of the English club Metaforum, which was responsible for bringing Cunningham to K-State, said he thought Cunningham was a charismatic speaker.

"I was really impressed with his ability to read, especially dialogue," Stahl, sophomore in English, said. "I preferred his rendition of it to Julianne Moore and John C. Reilly's."

Cunningham told the audience the character of Laura was based on his mother, as a tribute to her.

"She didn't feel like she succeeded. She stayed at home, she took care of the house incessantly," Cunningham said. "I think she felt she could have done more. She didn't feel like she was doing what she was put on this earth to do."

Cunningham said he wanted to show his mother that she accomplished more than she realized.

When asked how he kept Woolf from overshadowing the other characters in "The Hours," Cunningham said he had to make Woolf a character herself.

"I read and reread Virginia Woolf until I internalized my sense of her. I was always aware that I was writing about a fictionalized character named Virginia Woolf who was a creation of mine," Cunningham said.

The format of "The Hours" took several shapes before Cunningham settled on one. Cunningham said he first thought about writing about Woolf as she was writing "Mrs. Dalloway." Another idea was to have the story of Woolf on one page and the story of Mrs. Dalloway on the opposite page.

"I use this trial and error process when I want to write books that are smarter than I am," Cunningham said.

'Love Line' host to speak

Matters of love and sex will be the topic of conversation tonight in McCain Auditorium.

Drew Pinsky, known as Dr. Drew from the radio show "Love Line," which airs on KMKF-FM 101.5, will answer questions and give advice on a range of topics relating to love and sex.

Ben Hopper, program adviser for Union Program Council, said Dr. Drew was chosen because the students in UPC seemed intrigued.

"I know a lot of students listen to K-Rock and listen to his show every night," Hopper said.

How much: Tickets are $5 for students and $7 for non-students. Tickets can be purchased by calling the McCain Box Office at 532-6428 from noon to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Tickets will also be available at the box office before the performance.

Clark Griffiths, UPC forums committee co-chair and senior in political science, said UPC likes to bring in people students have heard of and that is why they chose Dr. Drew.

After a brief introduction, Dr. Drew will open the floor for questions from the audience, Hopper said.

"It will be a lot like the actual show 'Love Line,'" he said.

Griffiths said he expects about 800 tickets to be sold, however, it will have to happen today.

"We're hoping to sell at the door because ticket sales have been a little slow," he said.

Henson would bring life back to K-State as new assistant

K-State associate head coach Mike Miller was named the head coach at Eastern Illinois on Monday, which was a good move for Coach Miller.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

As the architect of a successful run with Texas State from 1995-2000, Miller was a logical choice to receive a head coaching job after his stay with the Wildcats the past five years (2001-05).

Who will head coach Jim Wooldridge hire as his new top assistant?

An easy and predictable choice would be making current assistant coach Jimmy Elgas the associate head coach. But that still leaves an opening on the K-State coaching staff.

A better solution for the Wildcats would be to go out and get someone with close ties to the program, someone from K-State's storied basketball past who could infuse new life into a program on the verge of being a major contender in the Big 12 Conference.

Someone like former Wildcat star Steve Henson.

A legend in the hearts and minds of hundreds of thousands of K-State basketball fans, Henson would bring a familiar face to the Wildcat sideline and would create a tie to the past that Wooldridge has been preaching about since the day he arrived at K-State.

Once called "K-State's stick of dynamite," Henson was from McPherson, Kan., and a guard for K-State from 1986-90, when K-State basketball was still a national powerhouse – a time when the Wildcats beat the Kansas Jayhawks.

Henson was an all-star, twice named honorable mention All-American and once a first team All-Conference selection, he left K-State with 21 school records and his name in the top 10 of 41 statistical categories. He also set 11 Big 8 records.

Henson sits atop the K-State record books in career steals (190), assists (582), assists per game (4.58), free throw percentage (.900) and three-point field goals made (240), and is K-State's fifth all-time leading scorer (1,655).

Henson has NBA experience – he was drafted in the second round by the Milwaukee Bucks and played six years with the Bucks, Atlanta Hawks, Portland Trailblazers and Detroit Pistons.

He has coaching experience. He was an assistant to another former K-Stater, Lon Kruger, at Illinois from 1999-2000, where he helped the Illini to a 22-10 record and trip to the NCAA Tournament second round. Henson also spent time with the NBA's Atlanta Hawks and at the University of South Florida. Now Henson coaches with Kruger at UNLV.

In their first year at UNLV, Kruger and Henson led the Runnin' Rebels to a 17-14 record and to the second round of the National Invitational Tournament.

It is obvious that this would be a great move for both sides.

K-State fans have clamored that the men's basketball team needs to create a tie to the history of the program – a history that includes 22 NCAA Tournament appearances, 16 Sweet Sixteens, eight Elite Eights, 17 conference championships and 60 first-team all-conference players.

Henson was a part of that history, and now it is time to bring him back to his alma mater.

What better way to light a fire under a team that only lost three seniors – only one of whom saw a truly significant amount of minutes – and returns four starters from last year in guards Lance Harris, Fred Peete, Clent Stewart and forward Cartier Martin?

The addition of Henson to the Wildcat coaching staff could be the thing the K-State basketball team needs to propel it into the top half of the conference and into the NCAA Tournament.

It's a match made for K-State, and it's time to see it happen.

Eastern Illinois hires Cats' assistant coach

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eastern Illinois University athletic director Dr. Rich McDuffie announced on Monday that Mike Miller, associate head basketball coach at K-State, has been named the men's basketball coach effective immediately.

"I believe this is a great time to become head coach at Eastern," Miller said. "There is a very strong foundation at Eastern ... as an academic institution, as an athletic program and as a basketball program."

Miller has been K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge's top assistant for the past five years.

Miller
ASSOCIATE HEAD COACH

"Mike is just an outstanding person and obviously a great basketball coach," Wooldridge said in a released statement.

"He does a great job working with student-athletes, is an excellent teacher and does it all with class. Everyone at Eastern will like him because what you see is what you get," he said.

This past season, Miller helped the Wildcats earn their first winning season since 1998-99 with a 17-12 record.

Miller was the head coach at Texas State (formerly Southwest Texas) from 1995-2000 and led the Bobcats to two Southland Conference regular season championships (1997 and 1999) and the NCAA Tournament in 1997. He earned Southland Conference Coach of the Year honors in 1997.

Miller also served as an assistant coach at Texas State (1992-94), Sam Houston State (1991) and Western Illinois (1990).

"The response from every constituency that Mike visited during his interviews on and off campus confirmed that he indeed is the best fit for Eastern," McDuffie said. "He's been a successful Division I head coach directing Texas State to two Southland Conference championships as well as a second- place finish. He's been an associate head coach at Kansas State, which competes in an elite high major basketball conference."

Miller is a graduate of Monmouth (Ill.) High School and, in 1987, earned an undergraduate degree from East Texas State where he was a two-year basketball letter-winner.

Wildcats travel to Omaha, take on Creighton Bluejays

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With hopes of getting back on track and avoiding a season sweep, K-State will take on the 30th-ranked Creighton Bluejays at 3 p.m. today in Omaha, Neb.

The Wildcats (15-15, 2-10) head into the contest after being swept by Baylor in a three-game series over the weekend.

Despite the losses to the Bears, the Wildcats are looking to get back on track against Creighton, who beat K-State 8-3 in the Wildcats' home opener on March 1.

"They definitely had our number last time we played them," senior Terry Blunt said of the Bluejays. "It was at our place and we are looking to go to their place and get a win. You don't want to get swept by anybody during the year."

Blunt went 2-4 at the plate to lead the Wildcats offensively the last time the two teams met.

"I think we are going to stick to the things that we have been working in practice and we will be just fine," Blunt said.

Blunt said the team just needs to move on from the Baylor series.

"We just need to go out there and just say 'we are 0-0 today,'" he said.

Creighton is in the midst of a four-game winning streak that has earned the Bluejays its first national ranking since the 2000 season.

The Bluejays lead the Missouri Valley Conference in both slugging percentage (.455) and doubles (72), and are tied for first in triples (13) and home runs (22).

"Creighton is just a good ball club, a solid ball club," Coach Brad Hill said. "They are a senior-led ball club. They know how to approach every day. We are going to have to play extremely well, especially at their place."

Starting for the Wildcats is junior right-hander Brett Muegge. Muegge is 1-1 on the season with a 6.75 ERA.

"We now have a guy that has some mid-week starts for us," Hill said of Muegge. "Unfortunately for him, it has been two weeks since he pitched. It's nice to have a guy who has experience with a mid-week start. We threw B.J. (Kissel) at them last time, and that is just not his role."

Muegge said he needs to come out and pitch his game.

"I just want to establish my pitches in the zone," Muegge said. "I just mostly want to come out and get comfortable with all three of my pitches."

Muegge said the Baylor loss shouldn't affect the team, and the players should put it behind them.

"We beat Texas, we beat OSU, we beat Wichita State; that should tell you something about this team," he said. "I think that once we finally all come together – hopefully it's soon because we are running out of time – we should be just fine."

TENNIS

K-State comes home with split, mixed emotions

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis split two Big 12 Conference matches over the weekend, falling to Missouri 5-2 before shutting out Iowa State 7-0.

The Wildcats (7-7, 2-4) played their last two regular season matches out of state, with only the University of Kansas remaining in their eight-match road trip.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he had mixed emotions about the weekend.

"(There was) some good play and some not-so-good play," he said. "We let a couple of matches get away from us at Missouri and those are costly right now."

The weekend was highlighted by the shutout win over Iowa State, a match the Wildcats were expected to win. Bietau said he was pleased with the way his team handled the overmatched Cyclones.

"I hoped that we would win convincingly," Bietau said. "We did, and it's one of those matches where you don't stand a lot to gain, but you have something to lose, and we took care of business there."

The Wildcats got a lot of support from freshman Tereza Prochazkova, who won both of her singles matches. Prochazkova has now won eight of her last 10 matches and three of her last four doubles matches.

Prochazkova said she had been practicing hard and welcomes the wins.

"I have practiced hard since January, so I hoped that now I would start playing quite well and start winning matches," she said. "I'm more confident now than I have been.

I was really glad that I won the match on Friday (against Missouri's Lubica Nadassaka). I lost to her in a tournament in the Czech Republic. In the Iowa State match, I guess I was supposed to win, so I won the match that I was supposed to win."

Prochazkova's wins have been a welcome addition to the success that senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia have had this season. Kvaratskhelia has the highest career singles winning percentage in K-State history, winning 87 percent of her matches.

Rosenberg is just two wins shy of breaking the all-time singles win record in school history.

She collected win No. 76 over the weekend at Iowa State, leaving her one behind the school record of 77, set by Petra Sedlmajerova from 1999-2003.

Rosenberg said she doesn't focus on the record when she is on the court.

"I don't think about that. It's a secondary thing," she said. "It's really nice, but those two wins will be hard to get. I just try to think of it as one match at a time."

WBB | Governor Sebelius to honor Wecker, Koehn

Kansas Governor Kathleen Sebelius will recognize K-State seniors Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn as role models for young girls in a ceremony at 11 a.m. today at the State Capitol in Topeka.

Wecker is an All-American and was named the 2005 Big 12 Player of the Year and the recipient of the 2005 Bayer Senior CLASS Award.

Koehn is the NCAA's all-time career three-point record holder, as she finished her Wildcat career with 392 made 3-pointers.

Head coach Deb Patterson, the coaching staff, President Jon Wefald and Athletic Director Tim Weiser will also be in attendance.

MBB | Massey helps team finish 4th at Portsmouth

Over the weekend, K-State senior forward Jeremiah Massey helped the Norfolk Sports Club finish fourth at the Portsmouth Invitational by leading the team in points and rebounds in three games.

Massey

Massey, a second team All-Big 12 selection this past season, averaged 18.0 points on 55.3 percent shooting, 7.7 rebounds, 1.3 steals and 1.3 blocks in 25.0 minutes per game.

The Portsmouth is one of the premier NBA pre-draft camps with approximately 200 NBA representatives in attendance.

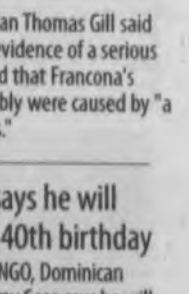
KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee quarterback Brent Schaeffer and receiver Bret Smith were charged with hitting a man who was arguing with Schaeffer's girlfriend in a campus dorm.

The players were arrested at a dorm where many athletes live. They were charged with misdemeanor assault and released on their own recognizance Sunday after the early-morning fight at another dormitory. Their arraignments are set for April 18.

Campus police had been called to the scene. Athletic department officials were investigating and had no comment Monday.

MLB | Boston manager returns for home opener

BOSTON — Red Sox manager Terry Francona returned to the World Series champions for their home opener Monday after he was hospitalized last week with chest pains.



Francona

Francona complained of tightness in his chest and was hospitalized in New York before last Wednesday's game against the Yankees. He was later transferred to Massachusetts General Hospital for more tests and missed Boston's three-game weekend series in Toronto.

Team physician Thomas Gill said tests showed no evidence of a serious heart problem and that Francona's chest pains probably were caused by "a recent viral illness."

MLB | Sosa says he will retire before 40th birthday

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — Sammy Sosa says he will retire from baseball before his 40th birthday, even if he fails to reach 700 career home runs.

Sosa

The Dominican slugger, who is 36, is in his first season with the Baltimore Orioles after playing the last 13 years with the Chicago Cubs.

Sosa, who has 574 career home runs, said he won't worry about reaching 700 if he isn't close before turning 40.

MLB | Royals drop home opener to Mariners

Kansas City, Mo. — A crowd of 41,788, a home-opening record at Kaufman Stadium watched as the Seattle Mariners put up seven runs in the eighth inning in the their 8-2 win over the Royals on Monday afternoon.

Shopping around

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When a student budgets for the month, most of what is budgeted is fairly easy to account for. Things like car payments, rent and utilities remain constant throughout the year. Budgeting for food, however, can be a difficult task. There are always instances when the only food left in the house is baking soda and the "mystery item" locked in Tupperware.

Manhattan has many different stores where food can be bought. There are the straightforward conglomerate grocery stores such as Dillons and Food 4 Less, the grocery/superstore hybrids like Wal-Mart and Kmart, and gas stations such as Dara's Fast Lane and Quik Shop, which carry many common grocery items.

Alex Goossen, freshman in parks, wildlife and conservation, said that the two most important things when considering a grocery store are convenience and expense.

"I don't have a car, so sometimes where I go determines on whether or not I have a ride," he said.

If a grocery store does not have an exact item, Goossen said he would not hesitate to go to the other store.

"If Dillons has something that is really expensive, I'll run over to Wal-Mart or Kmart since they are in the general area," Goossen said.

Goossen often buys economic food at the grocery store. Soup in a can, microwave noodle dishes and frozen pizzas frequently make his shopping list.

"I'm a college student; I'm too lazy to cook for myself," Goossen said with a chuckle.

Brady Peterson, freshman in computer engineering, prefers to shop at smaller grocery stores, but goes to Dillons when he needs a larger selection.

"When I buy meat, I prefer to get it at a smaller store because it is most likely cheaper," Peterson said.

For those who wish to eat healthier without spending an exorbitant amount, there is hope.

"It is easy and convenient to buy canned fruits and vegetables," said Nate Kohl, senior in nutrition and exercise and a fitness consultant at the Wellness Center at Peters Recreation Complex, said.

All grocery stores have generic brands of food. They are a cheaper way to get the same item, Kohl said.

"When buying fruit, it is best to look for sales, especially on bananas and apples," Kohl said. "It is also good to look at what is in season; there will be more out there and you can get it cheaper."

Rally brings women together, warns of dangers

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ordinary Women will be host to the annual Take Back The Night rally at 8 p.m. Friday. The event will begin with a rally featuring several speakers in the quad behind Hale Library. A march to City Park will follow.

TBTN is an event designed to bring women together and to make people aware of the dangers they face every day, said Beth Altenbernd, senior in hotel and restaurant management and OW member.

"This march is held to raise awareness, encourage strength and to honor and support victims of violence," Altenbernd said. "Women can share their feelings, stories and support with one another while taking an aggressive stand against the violence that affects them and their community every day.

"It is also a place where men can support their mothers, sisters, daughters and loved ones in the fight."

Besides support for one another, TBTN is significant for women as a collective voice for those who can't speak out themselves, said Nasrina Evenstar, graduate student in English and OW member.

"It's a symbolic gesture for women to show that we shouldn't have to be afraid to walk at night, and that women shouldn't have to worry about violence," Evenstar said.

Participation in the march itself is limited to women, but men can play an important and crucial part in educating other men and ending violence against women, said Heath Harding, educational administration assistant director.

"Men can help support women by using their privileges to speak with other men about the impact of violence in their lives and their families' lives," he said. "Men can help empower women to resist the fear and find proactive ways of reducing violence against women and men."

Harding said that men can participate by showing their support.

"Participating can lead to learning and a better understanding of different perspectives," he said.

The march will end at the pavilion in City Park, where there will be activities to further educate people about violence against women, Altenbernd said.

"We will have three slam poets, a dance choreographed by a member of OW, as well as other speakers," she said.

Evenstar said the activities will also include a concert and the Clothesline Project, which displays shirts with images designed by women who have survived acts of violence.

Though outwardly the events following the march may seem festive, the message of TBTN is serious, and Manhattan residents are encouraged to come out and support the event, Evenstar said.

"This is activism at its basic level, and it's good to get involved in the community and show that you, as a person, are opposed to violence," she said.

Tea event to help raise funds for Habitat for Humanity

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chocolate and tea are on the table this weekend to benefit the Manhattan chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

"Chocolate and Tea at Three" is the Manhattan Habitat chapter's most successful fund-raiser, said Kristen Wilmes, business director of the chapter and a K-State alumnus in accounting.

The event has raised $17,000 since it began in 2003 after being proposed by Pam Madaus, accountant with K-State's facilities department.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for people who aren't involved in Habitat," Madaus said. "It's an easy way to become involved. It's very rare to find someone who doesn't want to donate or doesn't like chocolate or tea."

The fund-raiser, hosted by Anne Wooldridge, will feature a chocolate fountain donated by Chocolate Elegance and teas from English black to Indian.

A live and silent auction will also be a part of the fund-raising event. Some watercolor paintings by Sharon Vinsen are items expected to be popular bids, Wilmes said.

The auction will also feature 12 hand-painted teapots donated by Ceramic Canvas Inc. The teapots were painted by well-known Manhattan residents and Kansans, including Sen. Lana Oleen; Rep. Sydney Carlin; Ruth Ann Wefald, former president of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges' CEO Spouses Council; and KSNT-TV Topeka's meteorologist Bruce Jones.

Local businesses have also donated 100 items to the auction. A few of the items are gift certificates donated by restaurants and salons, a football autographed by K-State football coach Bill Snyder and a basketball signed by the K-State women's basketball team.

Some of Habitat's other fund-raisers include "Row for Humanity" and "Direct Mailing Campaign."

"All of the money that goes into our homes is raised locally," Emily Ross, resource director of the Manhattan chapter of Habitat, said.

The event will be from 3 to 5 p.m. at the recently built Presby Place at 801 Leavenworth St. The cost is $25 per ticket.

Manhattan's Habitat is currently building a duplex as part of Manhattan's Urban Renewal Project. Habitat International is getting ready to break ground on its 200,000th home.

Nirvana, Public Enemy music preserved

The Library of Congress suddenly smells like teen spirit.

Fifty selections have been deemed worthy of preservation by the library's National Recording Registry, and this year's class features some edgy picks, including albums by Nirvana and Public Enemy, along with seminal releases by the Beach Boys, Allman Brothers Band and John Coltrane and John Williams' soundtrack for Star Wars.

The National Recording Preservation Board, consisting of 20 experts from the music industry and preservation field, culled its list from nominations made by the public for recordings considered "culturally, historically or aesthetically significant."

Nirvana's landmark 1991 album, "Nevermind", which launched a radio revolution and ushered in the grunge era, was right up there with the best of them. Also singled out was Public Enemy's 1990 release, "Fear of a Black Planet", arguably the most influential rap recording ever made.

dubbed in Spanish.

"Kids a Cookin' and Movin'" will feature eight recipes and a curriculum guide for use with the programs.

The program is targeted to limited-income families and those eligible for food stamps because of the federal funding it receives from the Food Stamp Nutrition Education Program, producer Ron Frank said.

Arnold said the crew behind "Kids a Cookin' and Movin'" hopes to expand the program to 14 states and add corporate sponsorship, which would give them more freedom than federal funding does.

Preston Trecek, graduate student in accounting, has worked for the ECC for four years. As a cameraman for the show, he said he likes its purpose.

"I like how they teach kids how to eat properly and exercise," he said. "Get them started early."

the issue of inequality is neither new nor acceptable," he said.

"Just as the president's men think the right words will win support for the program, they expect the program itself to evoke a warm fuzzy feeling among its participants."

Douglas said his father had a profound effect on his life, and he is now following in his footsteps.

"Since I followed in his footsteps as far as career choices go, it is assumed that I was influenced by him and this assumption is correct," he said.

Douglas said his father contributed to the community by providing support and information to labor unions in the area.

Lou Douglas also played a significant role in the Department of Political Science at K-State.

"My father was absolutely the leader of the Democratic Party in Riley County during the 1960s, which was a turbulent time," Stephen Douglas said.

Nancy Farnham, Abilene resident, said the lecture covered an interesting topic.

"I thought it was excellent," she said.

Architecture professor dies after short battle with illness

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and faculty mourn the loss of distinguished architecture professor James Dubois.

Dubois died early Sunday morning after a battle with pulmonary fibrosis, said Stephen Murphy, professor and department head of interior architecture and product design.

Dubois

"He'd had a lingering lung problem, but we didn't expect anything this rapid to develop," Murphy said. "The past week he wasn't able to come to class and then it was over."

Dubois graduated from K-State in 1978, earning both his bachelor's and master's degrees in architecture. He spent the last 20 years teaching at K-State and achieved the status of full professor, Murphy said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said Dubois' absence is a void that will affect students, faculty and administrators in many ways.

"Professor Dubois was an incredibly caring teacher, academic adviser and a great advocate for students," Bosco said. "He would talk with great passion about K-State, his students and his colleagues. This is really a shock. It's very sad."

During his tenure, Dubois served on more than 25 committees, wrote and received more than 30 community service grants and was beginning his fifth term on Faculty Senate.

Dubois actively worked in the restoration and preservation of a buildings throughout Kansas. Among his most notable projects are the Jayhawk State Theatre and the Union Pacific Station, Murphy said. In 1998, he won the Governor's Award for Historic Preservation for Community

Jones named director of Greek Affairs

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a nation-wide search, K-State decided to promote internally for Greek Affairs director.

Scott Jones, who has been serving as the interim director for the past year, found out he got the position on Friday.

"I was excited, a bit relieved," Jones said. "It's always sort of stressful being an internal candidate."

Four applicants had campus visits two weeks ago. Those four were selected from a pool of 34. The steering committee, which was comprised of students, faculty and alumni, reviewed the applicants and made the recommendations.

"The screening committee did a wonderful job of attracting four excellent applicants," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said. "Scott emerged as clearly a great match for us, and we are pleased he's going to continue serving K-State in this very important position."

The Greek Affairs director receives a $60,000-a-year salary. Sixty percent is paid by the university and 40 percent comes from fraternity and sorority dues.

Jones came to K-State in 1999 as the assistant dean of student life. In 2003, he started advising the Interfraternity Council.

He became the interim director of Greek Affairs last year, which Jones said he enjoyed.

"When I arrived here, I didn't really have any intention or plan to become the director of Greek Affairs," Jones said. "After I got in the interim position, it was something I really began to consider earnestly."

Before K-State, Jones worked at the Oregon State University from 1992-99, where he worked in housing and dining services. He worked at the University of South Dakota for one year as the greek adviser and student activities adviser.

K-State has been the best fit for him, Jones said.

"I'd love to see myself retire from K-State some day," he said.

Jones has a wife, Michele, and two sons – Taylor, 7, and Harrison, 4.

Also, he is still a student. He is working towards a doctorate in student affairs and university administration, which he hopes to complete in fall 2007.

Jones, who grew up in a smaller town in South Dakota, said Manhattan is just right.

"I love it," he said. "It gets almost a perfect mix in terms of being an ideal residential community along with the influence and excitement of the university community."

Shanda Walker, outgoing president of the Panhellenic Council, said she has had a positive experience working with Jones. Walker, senior in public relations, also was on the steering committee.

"I'm very excited. I think he'll be a huge asset," she said. "He's always willing to listen, always willing to help. He'd always be out helping us with projects."

Andy Kowal, incoming president of IFC, said Jones respects that both councils are primarily student run.

"He's an excellent advisor for students. He really creates an open environment," Kowal, senior in human resource management, said. "We're excited that it's Scott. We were able to hire someone that understands K-State's philosophy of student life."

He said Jones will help the greek

K-State student practices ventriloquism

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While other children were improving their English skills, 7-year-old Nick Levendofsky was already learning a new language. Since the age of seven, Levendofsky, sophomore in agricultural communications and journalism, has practiced ventriloquism. After attending a ventriloquist performance with his mother and grandmother, he decided to take up the craft.

Watching K-State alumnus Greg Classen perform motivated Levendofsky so much that when he returned home to Belleville, Kan., he checked out a 50-year-old book from his local library to teach himself how to be a ventriloquist.

Levendofsky would sit in front of a mirror and begin to teach himself a second– alphabet – one that required a motionless jaw and lips. It took him more than a year to master the necessary linguistics, but as soon as he had it down, he was performing for friends and family.

"I remember just being drawn to it originally. It touched me in a way that made me feel like I could do it," Levendofsky said. "I thought it was distinctly unique and that picking up on a dying art would be interesting to try. If it didn't work out, then fine, but what was the harm in trying?"

Levendofsky said his act

Faculty Senate considers pay increase with promotions

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Proposed promotion-related salary increases drew mixed emotions from Faculty Senate members Tuesday.

Senate members discussed and voted in favor for an 8-percent salary increase for promotion from assistant professor to associate professor. Moving from associate to full professor will result in an 11-percent salary increase.

However, the increase will come from the salary pool, and full professors may not directly benefit.

Tony Jurich, professor of family studies and human services, said that he would vote for the policy, but it gives nothing to people already hit by compression.

"I feel ripped off by the system," Jurich said.

He said he has been teaching for 17 years and has not seen very much of the money.

"We should value our other colleagues, but it seems that some of us get nothing out of this," he said.

In other business, Roger Adams, professor at Hale Library, wrote a passage about Jim Dubois, professor of interior architecture and product design and Faculty Senate member, who died Sunday.

"We will miss him," Adams said.

He said Dubois was a great friend and colleague. Instead of sharing a moment of silence, Adams suggested

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Pirate captain gets most votes in student election

RALEIGH, N.C. – Amidst raucous cheers and hearty applause from the audience, Elections Commission Chair Bonnie Pierson announced results for the 2005 Spring General Elections Wednesday night on Harris Field at North Carolina State University.

Although none of the four candidates vying for the position of student body president received the majority vote required, candidates Will Quick and The Pirate Captain rose above the fray and will go head to head in a runoff election next week.

Forrest Hinton and Tommy Ozbolt will also face off next week in runoffs, with Ozbolt leaving candidate John Small behind by a two percent margin.

This semester's election marked a record high in voter turnout, which totaled almost 27 percent of the student population, according to Pierson.

The fact was punctuated by the almost 150 students present at the announcement, several of whom were decked in anything from full pirate regalia to cardboard pirate hats obtained from the seafood chain Long John Silver's.

"I hear we got record turnout," the Captain said. "I be nothing but impressed."

The Captain also said he was thrilled with the prospect of participating in the runoffs and inspired by the support.

"I couldn't be happier," the Captain said. "The wind be in our sails. It warms our souls and carries our boats."

Quick, who lost the popular vote to the Captain, 44 percent to 21 percent, said that he felt good about the election results and was confident in his ability to come out on top next week.

"I felt from the beginning that I would be in the runoff, it was just a matter of who," Quick said.

Although he said he was "surprised that The Pirate Captain had received that much support," Quick said that he never overlooked the possibilities of the candidate during his campaign.

"I wouldn't say that I over- or under-estimated The Pirate Captain," Quick said. "[He] was a hard factor to predict."

NEBRASKA STUDENT TO COMPETE IN ROCK, PAPER, SCISSORS TOURNAMENT

LINCOLN, Neb. – University of Nebraska student Ryan Gartner thought the whole thing was a big joke when he received the letter in the mail indicating he had been chosen to attend the National Collegiate Rock, Paper, Scissors Invitational Tournament in South Beach, Fla.

"I didn't think it was serious," Gartner, freshman in Spanish, said. "I had to call to make sure it wasn't a joke. I didn't think it was real."

Gartner is one of 100 college students selected in a drawing to participate in the April 16 Rock, Paper, Scissors Competition sponsored by Nebraska Bookstore and GotUsed, a network of college book stores, said Chris Rodgers, regional manager of Nebraska Book Company.

Gartner signed up for a chance at the national competition during Big Red Welcome in August. There, he saw a big boxing ring on display.

"I thought maybe it was people fighting," he said. "But it was for rock, paper, scissors matches. They said you could sign up and be in one. I did it just to humor them. They randomly drew my name. I had forgotten about it."

Whenever Gartner tells his friends the news, they just can't believe it.

"I open it up by saying I won a trip to Miami," Gartner said. "They say 'Wow, no way!' Then I say it's for a Rock, Paper, Scissors Tournament. That's when the laughing starts."

Competitors, along with a friend of their choice, will fly to South Beach April 14, with airfare and hotel expenses paid, Rodgers said.

Gartner chose to bring along his friend Justin Brunken, senior in marketing.

"I'm pretty surprised he chose me," Brunken said. "I'm glad he did 'cause I get a free trip for nothing."

Brunken plays the role of Gartner's coach, helping him tune up during daily practices.

"I massage his arm every once in a while and I help him get it into his head whether they do rock, paper or scissors next."

Indeed, Rodgers said, some people take the game more seriously than others.

"Some people think it's pure luck, and some think skills are involved," he said. "It's about mind games."

Joyful Noise: Poems for Two Voices by Paul Fleischman
One of the best ways to enjoy poetry is to hear it read. A winner of the Newberry Medal, this book is designed for reading aloud. It allows two readers to enjoy hearing each other and the audience to appreciate the interplay of voices. Each poem deals with a different type of insect and is ideal for use in the classroom or for reading with children.

Wall represents hate, oppression, discrimination

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Messages of hate, discrimination and oppression painted on a white wall represent the barriers between people.

The Writing on the Wall Project allows students, faculty and community members to write hateful things on the wall that they have been called or that they have heard other people called, said Sarah Decke, coordinator for leadership development for the Department of Housing and Dining.

The wall is sponsored by K-State Residence Halls and Student Governing Association's Diversity Programming Committee.

"What happens is you have this huge wall of hate that is representing the barriers that stand between people," Decke said.

"At the end of the week we rip the wall down to kind of symbolize that we cannot stand to have these walls of hate against people."

This is the second time the wall has been constructed. The last time was in 2003.

"We decided just to do it every other year," Decke said.

SGA allocated more than $2,600 to the Writing on the Wall Project. This money helped pay for the materials for the wall and the paint students used to write their messages.

Tyson Moore, chair of the Diversity Programming Committee, said the committee choose to allocate funds to Writing on the Wall because it stood out.

"They put together a great presentation for us," he said. "They had pictures from last year and talked about the impact it had on students."

Dr. Drew entertains students on sex

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Dr. Drew Pinsky answers a student's question about a relationship Tuesday evening at McCain Auditorium. Pinsky, also known as Dr. Drew, is the voice of "Loveline", a radio show where he answers questions on topics relating love and sex.

Students were informed and wildly entertained as Dr. Drew spent the evening discussing all topics on sex and relationships.

Dr. Pinsky, of the radio show "Loveline", spoke at McCain Auditorium, providing insight and knowledge into the situations that students often find themselves in.

Zach Hauser, forums committee co-chair for the Union Program Council, said Dr. Drew was brought here because they look to find edgy, knowledgeable speakers who will attract students.

"Dr. Drew hits up on topics that are relevant to students, and a lot of students listen to his show already," he said.

Hauser said that the audience seemed timid at first during the question-and-answer section of the show before gradually gaining momentum.

"The topics varied, and those that came in and asked their questions were able to get direct answers," he said.

Clark Griffiths, another forum committee co-chair for the Union Program Council and senior in political science, said he was satisfied with the event, but felt it was lacking.

"All together it went well, Dr. Drew did hit up on loads of different topics. The conservative nature of school definitely played into the results of the show and put Dr. Drew into a bind to find willing volunteers," he said.

Griffiths also said that the turnout and ticket sales were dragging behind the expectations leading up to the event.

"I would have thought more people would have turned up to hear him, but we did end up selling many tickets at the door," he said.

Marty Katz, freshman in business, said the show was worthwhile.

"It was a fun and informative opportunity to get honest answers without having to hold anything back," he said.

"He did mention loads of different topics, and it seemed that the people there were really into it," Katz said.

Adam Robertson, freshman in open-option, said the show was entertaining.

"It was interesting to find out that much of relationships is based on the different biological setup between girls and guys," he said.

Student mows across U.S. for chronic illness charity

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Driving a lawn mower across the country in 90 days is Josh Schmidt's way of spending his semester.

Schmidt, freshman in business, left on the "Mow for Victory Tour" from San Bernardino, Calif., on Feb. 28 and will travel across 11 states, ending up in Randleman, N.C., on May 28. The trip will raise money for the Victory Junction Gang Camp, a camp for children with chronic illnesses.

"The lawn mower can get up to 20 miles per hour," Schmidt said. "It'll vary from day to day, but we average about 100 miles a day. The most I've gone is 130 miles."

Schmidt said the days can be long and tedious at times, but he listens to a satellite radio while driving the lawn mower.

"You get to take in what you're driving by," he said. "You notice a lot more than you would if you were in a normal vehicle."

Shelley Lujano, advertising assistant for Hustler Turf Equipment, said that Hustler Turf Equipment sponsors Schmidt's salary and the lawn mower, as well as the parts if they need to be changed.

"We're stopping at about 30 dealers along the way," Lujano said. "Two of the dealers have a goal of raising up to $25,000."

Lujano said this is also a NASCAR sponsored event, which is why the lawn mower is painted the way it is.

"The lawnmower (Petty Super Z) is painted like Richard Petty's number 43 Dodge, winner of 200 NASCAR races," Lujano said. "It will be auctioned off on eBay after the race and the proceeds will go to the camp as well."

Schmidt said the goal is to raise $500,000.

"I think that even if we fall a little short it would be good, too," he said.

Dylan Buller, freshman in civil engineering and Schmidt's friend, said what Schmidt is doing is great.

"It's a really good opportunity that he took," Buller said. "If I had the same opportunity I would definitely take it. I wouldn't even think twice about it."

Schmidt said that even though this is a once-in-a-life-time experience and he enjoys meeting people and the time he gets to himself, he's somewhat ready to be back.

"The first couple of weeks were the most exciting, but then it kind of plateaus," Schmidt said. "You have a lot of time to think about everything or think about nothing."

The experience not only affects Schmidt and his friends, but also the children that visit the camp in Randleman, N.C., throughout the year.

"The camp is disease-specific each week," Schmidt said. "It's for anybody. It's free of charge."

Lujano said that all of the doctors are specialized in certain illnesses and come to volunteer their time for a week.

Schmidt said he has learned a lot from his trip.

"I would tell people not to be afraid to try something new," he said.

Greek Affairs director faces many challenges

Dear Scott Jones,

Congratulations on your new position as Greek Affairs director. There are many issues facing you as the new director, one of which is the new "no frills" approach to sorority recruitment.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The sororities will be implementing a plan to eliminate the extras of the recruitment process and focus more on getting to know each potential member. The sororities will need your help and support implementing this policy into their recruitment plans.

Another issue you will face will be the disparity of fraternity house sizes. Right now there are houses that have more members than they know what to do with and others that are scraping to stay alive. There needs to be some kind of balance to the recruitment process. This will prevent the loss of any of the houses on campus.

Finally, the greek houses need help improving their overall image on campus. Although K-State has a great greek community, there is a feeling of "us vs. them" between greeks and non-greeks. Greek affairs needs to play a larger role in improving relations between the greek community and the unaffiliated students at K-State.

The Collegian wishes you all the best with your new position.

GEEK WEEK

Heroic battle

Superman a timeless classic; world can do without Spidey

CORBIN CRABLE

When my friends ask me which newspaper I'd like to work for after graduation, I'll offer them a sly smile and respond with "the Daily Planet in Metropolis."

After all, there's never a shortage of news there with local hero Superman keeping busy saving Metropolis time and again from the evil clutches of criminal masterminds.

My opponent will tell you that Superman's powers and influence are unrealistic, but as someone who grew up with the Superman films starring Christopher Reeve, I think that is precisely what makes superheroes great – for a moment you can suspend all belief in reality and just enjoy yourself, pure and simple.

There's no denying that Superman's powers would mean trouble for Spidey if the two were to clash. Spider-Man would surely be in for an ass-kicking of epic proportions – after all, he's a mere human whose "powers" are dwarfed by Superman's ability to fly, shoot laser beams out of his eyes and turn back time. Who hasn't wished that they could do that?

Spider-Man consistently does battle with a man in a green suit and romances Mary Jane Watson, a cookie-cutter damsel in distress. I've seen Coen Brothers movies with more depth.

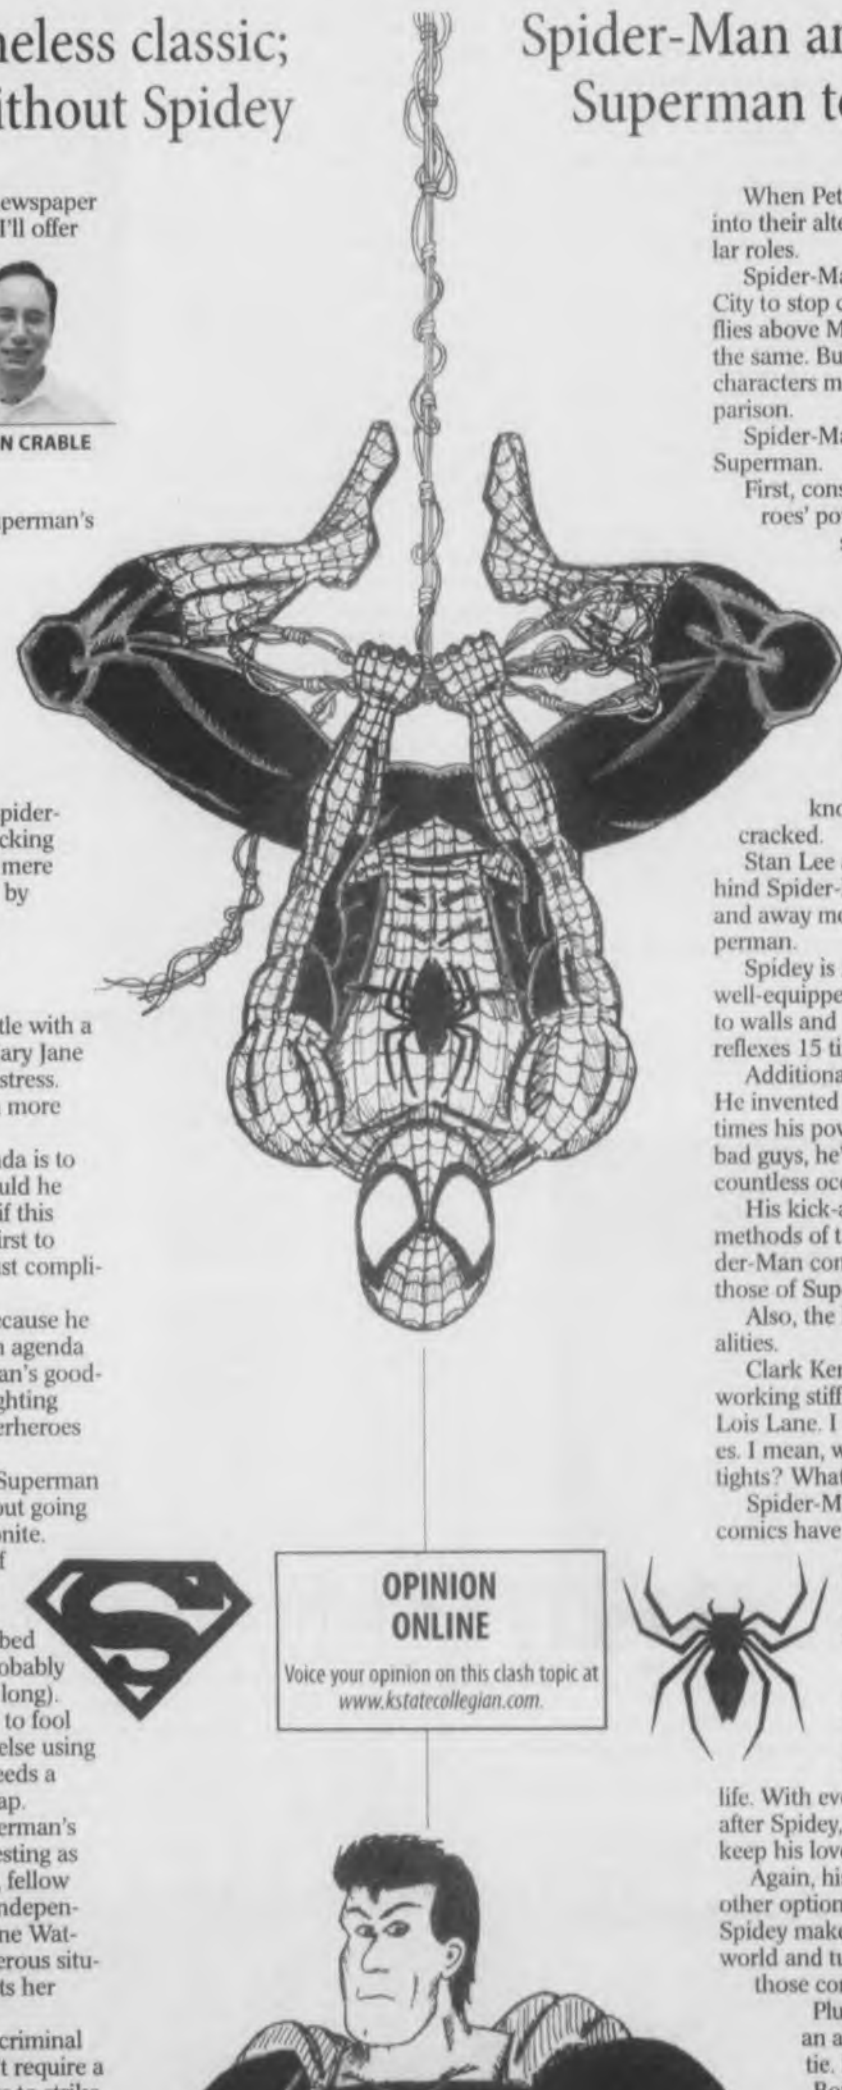
A large part of Spider-Man's agenda is to avenge the death of a loved one. Would he have embraced his superhero status if this hadn't happened? I doubt it. This thirst to avenge the death of his Uncle Ben just complicates his life.

Superman simply saves people because he is naturally good. He doesn't have an agenda for keeping Metropolis safe. Superman's good-hearted-but-tough attitude toward fighting crime is a refreshing break from superheroes with ulterior motives.

And contrary to what Jesse says, Superman isn't invincible. Don't even think about going near him with a big chunk of Kryptonite.

He fights crime under the guise of mild-mannered reporter Clark Kent (any good journalist would tell you that if you're a reporter who's described as being "mild-mannered," you're probably not going to last in the field for very long). Obviously, Superman has the ability to fool mortals into thinking he's someone else using nothing but eyewear. Spider-Man needs a mask to accomplish that, the poor sap.

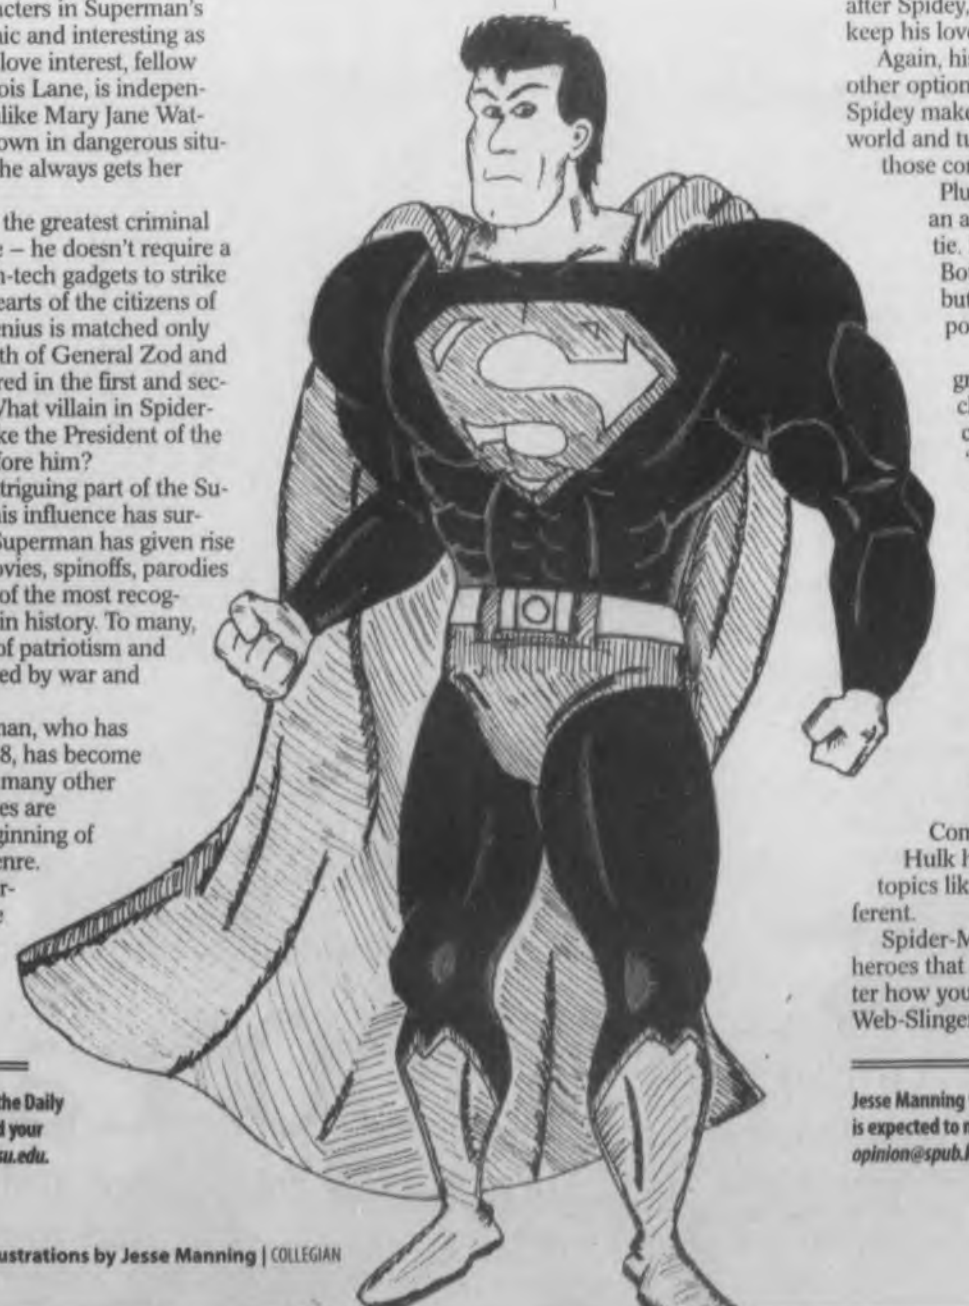
The secondary characters in Superman's world are just as dynamic and interesting as Superman himself. His love interest, fellow Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane, is independent and ambitious. Unlike Mary Jane Watson, Lois can hold her own in dangerous situations and in the end, she always gets her story. What a woman!



Lex Luthor remains the greatest criminal mastermind of our time – he doesn't require a flashy green suit or high-tech gadgets to strike fear and panic in the hearts of the citizens of Metropolis. Luthor's genius is matched only by the mind and strength of General Zod and his cohorts who appeared in the first and second Superman films. What villain in Spider-Man's world could make the President of the United States kneel before him?

Perhaps the most intriguing part of the Superman legacy is that his influence has survived the test of time. Superman has given rise to television shows, movies, spinoffs, parodies and comics. He is one of the most recognized cultural icons of in history. To many, he stands as a symbol of patriotism and peace in a world plagued by war and strife.

Let's face it: Superman, who has been around since 1938, has become the standard by which many other comic-book superheroes are judged. He was the beginning of the entire superhero genre.



Without him, Spider-Man would never have been created, and a world without Spider-Man is just super by me.

Spider-Man an awesome hero; Superman too predictable

JESSE MANNING

When Peter Parker and Clark Kent transform into their alter egos, they take on remarkably similar roles.

Spider-Man scours New York City to stop crime, and Superman flies above Metropolis looking for the same. But when these two characters meet, there's no comparison.

Spider-Man soars above Superman.

First, consider the two heroes' powers. So Superman is super – what's so inventive about that? His creators, Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster, didn't have an imaginative bone in their bodies.

Superman is a copout. He can do anything and everything: unlimited strength, flight, ice-breath, heat rays, X-ray vision. Hell, the guy can even turn back time. His story arcs are limited, since the outcomes are known before the comic books are even cracked.

Stan Lee and Steve Ditko, the masterminds behind Spider-Man, created a character that was far and away more complex and interesting than Superman.

Spidey is more limited in his powers, but he's well-equipped. He can lift about 10 tons, can stick to walls and has a precognitive warning sense and reflexes 15 times faster than Jackie Chan's.

Additionally, Spider-Man is a certifiable genius. He invented his own webbing, and while sometimes his powers aren't enough to take down the bad guys, he's used his smarts to trick them on countless occasions.

His kick-ass spider powers and resourceful methods of taking out opponents make each Spider-Man comic infinitely more interesting than those of Superman.

Also, the heroes have radically different personalities.

Clark Kent is stuck in the 1950s. He's a boring working stiff, and he's chasing the equally boring Lois Lane. I don't even want to get into his fetishes. I mean, wearing underwear outside of your tights? What's that about?

Spider-Man is the most complex character that comics have ever been blessed with. A "bookworm" in high school, Peter Parker lived every nerd's dream when he received his powers from a radioactive spider.

With all of that power came a lot of responsibility and a goal to keep his family and friends safe, a lesson he learned when he didn't use his powers for good and his uncle paid with his life. With every super-powered villain in New York after Spidey, Peter has to hide behind a mask to keep his loved ones safe.

Again, his more limited powers lead him to seek other options to defeat the forces of evil. And when Spidey makes a mistake, he can't fly around the world and turn back time. He's got to live with those consequences, just like real people do.

Plus, his girlfriend Mary Jane Watson is an actress, a model and an all-around hottie. Beat that, Lois Lame!

Both characters influenced our culture, but Spidey's lasting meaning is more important than Superman's.

Superman's a boy scout. He's a great big thick-headed one-dimensional character who never loses a fight. He can't do any wrong, and the people of "Metropolis" – wherever the hell that is – love him.

New York City has hated Spider-Man for most of his career. Labeled a menace by a tabloid newspaper, Spidey continued to do good. He's saved the city countless times, regardless of how people thought of him.

He had amazing powers – why not use them for good? That's a lesson for everyone: use your talents for the benefit of mankind.

Spider-Man and his Marvel Comics cohorts like the X-Men and the Hulk helped an entire generation to deal with topics like racism, acceptance and just being different.

Spider-Man is the star player in a company of heroes that puts Superman to shame, and no matter how you spin it, the Man of Steel can't beat the Web-Slinger.

Jesse Manning was recently bitten by a non-radioactive spider. He is expected to make a full recovery. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Music festival showcases local talent

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There was a variety of performers at Tuesday night Manhattan Town Center.

Some sang, some played a musical instrument, some did both and a couple spoke.

Students K-12 from north central Kansas participated in the fifth night of the annual Spring Music Festival.

Contestants could participate in four categories – drama, dance, vocal and instrumental.

"Most of the ones we get are vocals and instrumentals," Jocelyn Umberger, customer service director of the Manhattan Town Center, said.

The festival began the preliminaries March 15 and ends April 19. The finalists will perform the last show April 26. All shows are 6 to 7 p.m.

Each night, three finalists are chosen. Tuesday night's finalists were Cindy Okot-Kotber, eighth-grade student at Anthony Middle School; Travis Sheffield, eleventh-grade student at Rock Creek High School; and Berkley Matthews, sixth-grade student at South Middle School in Salina.

All contestants receive prizes from a merchant in the mall.

On the final night, first place will win a $500 gift certificate, second place wins $250 and third place receives $100.

Umberger said the mall receives positive feedback from the event.

"It's a lot of fun," she said. "I think it's a good opportunity for them to preform in a good family atmosphere."

Tami Ehrlich, store manager at Maurices, was one of three judges for the festival. She said it was difficult to choose the finalists and agree with the other judges, especially the third finalist.

"It was tough deciding," Ehrlich said. "The top two we all agreed on."

Matthews said she has performed since she was in Kindergarten and has won competitions.

"I performed a lot before," she said.

She sang "I Want to be a Cowboy Sweetheart," by Nickel Creek, which has a yodeling part in it.

Berkley Matthews, student at South Middle School in Salina, waves her hat to the crowd following her performance of "I Want to be a Cowboy Sweetheart" during the Spring Music Festival at the Manhattan Town Center. Matthews was one of three contestants who will move on to the finals in two weeks.

Research targets physical activity

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prevention can come in all shapes and sizes – literally.

"Some programs are used to prevent crime, substance abuse or whatever," said David Dzewaltowski, director of K-State's Community Health Institute and professor of kinesiology. "We're addressing overweight prevention."

A new project, called the Healthy Out-of-School Places Overweight Prevention Project, will study how to improve nutrition and physical activity among kids.

Dzewaltowski said a lot of research has been done on the growing number of obese youth, and this project will build on the work already done.

"It's for continuing that work, whether we can influence or prevent overweightness in children," Dzewaltowski said.

The program will be established for upper elementary school students and will be targeted to after-school programs.

Tanda Kidd, registered dietician and extension associate, said the weight problems with kids may be due to the activities kids are, or are not, doing.

"Part of it could be the sedentary activities like video games," Kidd said. "Another could be what kids are snacking on, what they're eating out of school."

Students will be provided with a healthy snack and participate in about 30 minutes of physical activity. Dzewaltowski said the current physical activity for students is only attractive to already active children, but this program will involve all the children in some type of physical exercise.

An hour of skill-building will also be incorporated in the program, teaching kids the importance of staying active and eating healthy.

This particular study will be performed in Kansas, and the research team will be recruiting school sites over the next six to 12 months in which the program can be implemented.

"This is a true experimental research study," Dzewaltowski said. "This is kind of a new area, randomizing sites. It's to determine if these programs are effective."

By teaching kids some of the main components of a healthy lifestyle, Dzewaltowski and the project team are hoping to help kids make right choices to keep them healthy in the future.

"Eating healthy is a skill," Dzewaltowski said.

City commissioners informed on issues, projects

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The recently elected city commissioners received a taste of their new positions Tuesday night at a city commission orientation session.

Tom Phillips, Jayme Morris-Hardeman and the re-elected commissioner Mark Hatesohl attended the session in which they were informed about budget processes, legal issues and upcoming city projects.

"This was the first opportunity we had to sit down with city department heads, and they seem to be on top of things," Phillips said. "Now, I'm just excited to continue to learn more about the departments and the issues that will need to be addressed."

Each city department director offered a description of their department along with a list of project goals.

Many of the city departments addressed the arrival of additional troops at Ft. Riley and had made compensations for additional housing, employment, education and transportation.

Morris-Hardeman said the Ft. Riley issue is a big component of the city's infrastructure, but there are also other issues that will require the commission's attention.

"Besides Ft. Riley, downtown development is another main element of the upcoming year that will require a lot of attention and receive a lot of public input," she said.

Bernie Hayen, director of finance, said a lot of information was presented to the commissioners, but the city staff would always be available to answer their questions and provide more details.

"This is a lot of information to take in, but all department staff can answer any questions that may arise," he said. "We are here to assist you and help you better understand city issues."

"I played almost 50 years ago, and it really is an honor that people still remember who Jack Parr is."

Jack Parr
FORMER K-STATE ALL-AMERICA BASKETBALL PLAYER

Living legends

Hall of Fame to honor Kansas' finest

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jack Parr is amazed people still remember who he is, let alone think enough of him to induct him into any hall of fame.

Parr, a former K-State All-America basketball player from 1955-58 who stands 6 feet 9 inches tall, recalled a man who recently came up to him and asked if he ever played basketball.

"I told him 'No, actually I was a jockey,'" Parr said. "He asked me again if I played basketball, and I told him I did. He then asked me when I played, and I told him I was the center at Kansas State when Wilt Chamberlain was at KU, and he asked me, 'Who is that?'"

Joking aside, plenty of people still remember Parr from his basketball-playing days, and consequently, he will be one of 15 sports figures inducted into the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame this Saturday.

In addition to Parr, two other former K-State basketball players, Mike Evans and Bill Guthridge, will be honored for their achievements as Wildcats, as well as former Wildcat football All-American Ray Hahn – who will be honored posthumously – giving this year's induction ceremony a purple tint.

Additionally, the keynote speech will be given by legendary K-State basketball coach Fred "Tex" Winter, who is credited with inventing the triangle offense. The master of ceremonies will be Wyatt Thompson, the current radio voice of the Wildcats.

K-State honored Parr, who is originally from Richmond, Va., this past basketball season when he became one of the first three men's basketball players in K-State history to have his jersey retired.

Over the past two years, Parr has been named to K-State's All-Century Basketball Team and was inducted into the K-State Sports Hall of Fame, in addition to the jersey retirement.

Parr said he appreciates the events of the past two years, and the induction to the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame is every bit as special to him as the other honors.

"I'm humbled to be on such an extensive list of great athletes," he said. "And to be joining guys like Tex Winter, Ernie Barrett and a lot of other K-Staters (in the Hall of Fame) is something that is really special, along with everyone else from the other universities.

"I played almost 50 years ago, and it really is an honor that people still remember who Jack Parr is."

Evans, from Goldsboro, N.C. played at K-State from from 1974-78 and is K-State's men's all-time leading scorer with 2,115 points and the Big 8 Conference's eighth all-time leading scorer.

"Kansas State was a great opportunity to get an education and play a sport I

CFB | NCAA panel backs 12th DI football game

INDIANAPOLIS — The NCAA Division I Management Council has backed legislation that would allow Division I-A and I-AA schools to add a 12th football game starting with the 2006 season.

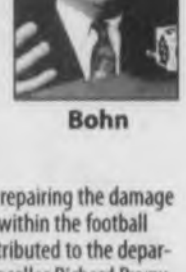
The plan was given tentative approval by the council during its meeting Monday, but still must be approved by the NCAA Board of Directors when it meets April 28.

Division I vice president David Berst said Tuesday he didn't know whether the NCAA board would give final approval for a 12th football game. Only the Atlantic Coast Conference was opposed to the proposal.

There was no discussion of the issue at the council's meeting.

NCAA | Colorado hires Bohn as new athletic director

San Diego State athletic director Mike Bohn has agreed to return home to take the same post within Colorado's troubled department, the university announced Tuesday.



Bohn

Bohn will be introduced as the replacement for Dick Tharp on Wednesday.

The 44-year-old Boulder, Colo., native has a tremendous task, repairing the damage done by scandals within the football program that contributed to the departure of Tharp, chancellor Richard Byyny and university president Betsy Hoffman.

FOOTBALL

Meier to remain with program

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The University Daily Kansan, the University of Kansas' student newspaper, reported Tuesday that K-State junior quarterback Dylan Meier had left the Wildcat football team and transferred to Pittsburg State University.

Meier
QUARTERBACK

K-State Sports Information Director Garry Bowman said Tuesday afternoon reports of Meier's transfer are false.

"Dylan Meier is still a part of our football team, and our compliance office has received no paperwork from him indicating a transfer," Bowman said.

The Wildcats are currently in the middle of their spring practices. However, Meier's involvement has been limited, due to off-season shoulder surgery.

Head coach Bill Snyder said Meier will practice lightly during the spring, but will probably not participate in K-State's spring game on April 30.

"Dylan will be restricted quite a bit during the course of the spring," Snyder said. "He'll get limited activity for him in the first three weeks of spring practice, and the last week, he will get a little bit more.

"I'm quite certain we'll hold him from the spring game."

WOMEN'S GOLF

Golf team turns in season's best outing

Wildcats place 6th in Oklahoma

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State's women's golf team got a three-day weekend thanks to Mother Nature.

Final round play at the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic on Sunday was pushed back to Monday morning due to inclement weather.

It apparently helped the Wildcats' cause, as they finished sixth, the team's best finish this spring.

Sophomore Helene Robert led the team with a tie finish for 20th.

Robert finished just 10 strokes behind Southern Methodist University's Lacey Jones, who won the tournament with a combined score of 231.

Even though she paced the Wildcats, Robert said she was not pleased with her performance.

"I wasn't really happy with what I did," Robert said. "I made too many mistakes. It was the same story for both days."

As a team, K-State finished with a combined score of 941, edging out Nebraska by one stroke. Missouri won the tournament with a score of 889.

The sixth place finish was the best for the Wildcats since the team finished fifth at the Marilynn Smith/Sunflower Invitational Oct. 11-12, 2004, in Lawrence, Kan.

K-State head coach Kristi Knight attributed the higher finish to a slow and steady work habit.

"The girls played well," Knight said. "They didn't score as well as they thought they should have. We're slowly, but surely, coming along."

After a first round score of 75, freshman Kali Quick finished the tournament by shooting 85 and 82 in the final two rounds and finishing in a tie for 45th.

Quick said she is looking forward to getting back on the course and improving her game after her performance dropped the last two rounds.

"Hit the ball," Quick said when asked what went wrong. "I don't exactly know what happened. My shots were going where I didn't want. Hopefully, it'll be better next time."

K-State had three golfers finish in the top 40. Along with Robert, freshman Michelle Regan finished tied for 38th with a score of 237, and sophomore Katy Heffel ended in a tie for 40th with a total of 238.

Tied with Quick at 45th was freshman Hailey Mireles, but Mireles competed as an individual. Senior Sarah Heffel rounded out the scorecard, firing a 244 to finish in a tie for 52nd.

K-State's next action will be April 22-24 at the Big 12 Championship at Austin, Texas.

Patterson should listen to offers from other schools

ANTHONY MENDOZA

There are many things that are guaranteed to happen at the NCAA Tournament.

The winning team will cut down the nets, CBS announcer Billy Packer will state the obvious, a highlight reel will play accompanied by "One Shining Moment" blaring out of your television speakers and there will be rumors of coaches leaving their respective programs to take over other teams.

Last week, the latter came about not surprisingly, only this time, it hit the K-State women's basketball program.

The rumor was Deb Patterson was taking her 175 wins in nine years at K-State and heading to Berkley, Calif., to take over the women's program at the University of California at Berkley.

Although she signed a contract extension last year through the 2006-07 season, this is the best time for Patterson to leave Manhattan and attempt to turn around a Golden Bears program that fired coach Caren Horstmeyer after she went 11-18 this past season and 52-91 in her five years at Cal.

With the graduation of Kendra Wecker, the Big 12's all-time leading scorer and K-State's all-time leading rebounder; Laurie Koehn, the NCAA all-time leader in 3-pointers made; and Megan Mahoney, K-State's all-time leader in assists, the Wildcats will be just another average team next year, even in the weak Big 12 North.

Yes, K-State will return two starters next year, but both Claire Coggins and Shana Wheeler were inconsistent this season.

Wheeler was a non-factor down the stretch offensively, and Coggins logged too many minutes next to Patterson on the bench because of her sporadic play and habit of getting into foul trouble.

Through her success these past four years, Patterson has set the bar so high that this team, as it currently exists, will not be able to reach the mark to which K-State fans have become accustomed.

The women's team will not be able to live up to its past, especially when it finds itself matched up with opponents from the Big 12 South, which will dominate the conference next season.

Baylor returns three starters from this year's national championship team, including the probable National Player of the Year Sophia Young.

If Patterson can't get past the second round of the tournament with the talent she had the last few seasons, it will not happen any time soon.

If she went to Cal, Patterson would be guaranteed that the expectations would not be as high as they are at K-State. Stanford dominates northern California basketball, so making the NIT is good enough, and making the NCAA Tournament would be huge.

Patterson, pack up and head west while your stock is still high as a basketball coach. If you honor the rest of your contract at K-State for the next two years, you will not be a hot commodity when there is an opening and athletic directors start throwing out names come March.

That's a guarantee.

Mimicking celebrity styles growing trend for all ages

Photos by Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While some people go to extreme measures and go on MTV to get a "famous face," most are more realistic about what they will do to look like a celebrity.

Penny Robinson, a stylist at GAIA Salon, said that many people come in to the salon hoping to leave looking like a star.

"They're not extreme-makeover freaks, but we get a lot of people who come in with a picture of a celebrity they really like and they want to get their hair done and make-up done to re-create that look," Robinson said.

Crimpers stylist Nora Henning said that while people use a picture of a celebrity as a guide, they don't expect to be that celebrity's clone when they leave the salon.

"I think people are pretty down-to-earth," Henning said.

The celebrity look that people want to achieve varies by age. Robinson said that girls and younger women want to look like either Ashlee or Jessica Simpson.

Sandy Wyatt, a stylist at Sheer Dynamics, said that Jennifer Lopez and Nicole Kidman's looks are popular among the young adult crowd. Henning said many young girls want to look like Britney Spears.

All three stylists said Meg Ryan's short, wispy cut is popular with all different age groups. But people know who they don't want to look like.

"You would think Paris Hilton would be one, but she's not," Wyatt said. "We hardly ever get that."

Henning said that more often people want their hair to look like the current popular trend that everyone, including celebrities, has. Right now people want long flowing bangs and longer layers.

Henning said that if people want a haircut they see in a picture, they need to look at the entire picture to see if they look enough like the person to pull off the look.

Certain hair colors may look good with some skin tones, but not on others.

Likewise, the shape and cut of the hair should depend on the individual's bone structure.

"You want to do whatever it takes to flatter yourself," Henning said.

Robinson said people should know that the way celebrities look on the red carpet is not how they always look.

"They need to remember that celebrities have a team of people to make them look like that," she said.

Henning said that celebrities have the ability to change their looks more often by using hair extensions.

"They have the option of going from long to short and back again," she said.

Hair extensions give more options to change hair and are a lot of fun, but they are more expensive and higher maintenance. Henning said that if Manhattan wasn't a college town, more clients would probably ask for hair extensions

Wyatt said that it often takes celebrities a long time to look the way they do.

"They may not look like they had their hair done or their make-up done, but they have," she said.

"It may look like it took just a few minutes, but it took hours."

Penny Robinson applies eyeliner to Kimberly Wilson. Robinson said more girls will be coming in within the next few weeks to get their hair and make-up done for prom.

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Scott

Name: Susan Scott

Title: Associate dean and assistant professor of Leadership Studies

How many years at K-State: 27

Favorite leisure activity: I love to read: women's literature, mysteries, anything dealing with culture, politics and religion.

Three adjectives that describe you: Committed, spirited and caring

Describe an ideal night for you: A potluck dinner with family and friends, lively discussion, and dancing to the Supremes.

Favorite aspect of K-State: I truly love the students. I think they are sincere, kind and well-intentioned.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? I am concerned about the cost of higher education everywhere. I would increase the amount of scholarship dollars available for all students, but especially for those with the most need.

Most embarrassing moment in college? My college years are off-limits, but just last week I thought I was receiving the usual prank telephone call from my good friend and colleague, Dr. Robert Shoop. After I responded, I discovered that it was someone I did not know and the phone call was serious. The details are too embarrassing to discuss further.

Favorite alcoholic beverage: For many years, it was Dewars on the rocks. Now it is the occasional glass of wine.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? Margaret Meade. Her scholarly, pioneer spirit took her places in the world unknown to most.

If you could drive any car, what would it be? I'm not a car person. I drive a black Jeep Liberty and it's just fine.

What is something that most students don't know about you: They probably know far too much about my children, Paul and Lilly. So let's go with the fact that I've been a Parrothead for almost 25 years.

THEY SAID IT

Alba

"I want him to think about me naked — not some woman he can throw money at."

— Jessica Alba, who plays a stripper in the movie "Sin City," telling the New York Post why she doesn't want her boyfriend going to strip clubs.

Rather

"I think they're doing a terrific job. I was always pulling for them. I'm pulling for them now."

— Dan Rather on how things are going on "The CBS Evening News" now that he's no longer behind the anchor desk, as quoted in USA Today.

"It appeared to me that he had been brainwashed in some way. He was just mean, he was yelling ... he was using curse words."

—The stepfather of Michael Jackon's accuser in court Tuesday. The comments were removed from court records.

Spears

"The time has finally come to share our wonderful news that we are expecting our first child together."

— Britney Spears, announcing she is pregnant with husband Kevin Federline.

Jersey-chasing another confusing aspect of women to ponder

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My roommate tells me that she is "seeing" a certain athlete here on campus. The problem is that I'm pretty sure she's only interested in him because he is a star or whatever. Is this OK?

A: Ah, yes. I am well aware of the infamous jersey-chasers. This is one of the many perks of being an athlete. If you are not aware, a jersey-chaser is a girl who tries to date athletes simply because they play a sport. They are basically sport groupies. Each sport has them in different numbers and varieties.

Jersey-chasers usually stick to the same sport. If you know a girl who has dated a number of athletes that is not proportional to the number of athletes in a cross section of society, she is most likely a jersey-chaser.

The female psyche has baffled me for many years, and this subject is no different. I have bounced around a few different ideas on the subject. Let me try to struggle through a much generalized explanation here.

My first theory is based on the fact that many women are attracted to fame. You don't have to be famous in the worldwide or national sense. You just have to be more recognizable to the local public than the average person is.

I don't quite understand why this is the case. Men are not attracted to women by how recognizable the woman's face is, but usually by how alluring it is. I don't quite understand why so many girls are infatuated with people just because they have seen or heard of that person before.

My second set of thoughts circle around the fact that there is a well-known theory that some of these women are in it for the money.

They are hoping that the promise of a lucrative career in the profession arena for these men will filter some cash down to them.

The problem with this is that there are a small number of athletes that actually do go on to the profession ranks, leaving this money-grubbing strategy with an extremely high level of risk.

Another problem with this theory is that if money is the main goal for these women, you would think that there would be more groupies going after men in the colleges of engineering or business. Your odds there would be much better. But for some reason, this just doesn't happen.

Trust me: there are not a lot of girls waiting outside of a Securities and Portfolio Analysis class trying to give out their phone numbers.

"You could be a huge dork just sitting around playing Dungeons and Dragons all day, but if you are ranked one of the top ten D & D players in the country, there are probably some girls out there that will bang you."

That leads me to my next theory, which somewhat contradicts the previous one. Many people believe that women are after guys who are successful in any given field.

Women are turned on by men who excel at anything they attempt. It doesn't really matter what it is you are doing. You could be a huge dork just sitting around playing Dungeons and Dragons all day, but if you are ranked one of the top ten D & D players in the country, there are probably some girls out there that will bang you. You can find groupies of almost any activity.≠Any skill that can set you apart from the rest of the crowd is seen by women as being attractive.

Then again, it has been seen that girls flock to guys who perform certain activities regardless of their skill level. This leads me to believe that women are attracted to men who show a strong interest in any activity that does not directly involve women.

Some women are attracted to men who love playing the guitar even if they aren't famous rock stars. You can impress women simply by showing that you have passion for something. This could be because women recognize and are impressed by the fact that you have the ability to care deeply about something in your life.

Or it could be because they see that passion and become jealous. They want to prove that they can move in and make men shift that passion to themselves in a relationship.

Concerning your situation, I honestly don't know what to tell you. This question got me thinking about women and I'm completely confused.

I have a test in an hour and I'm pretty sure that this subject just fried my last brain cell. I'm not even sure if I actually know what you are asking. The only conclusion I've come to is that women are crazy. I have to go lay down now.

Vials could cause flu epidemic

Scientists protest possible destruction of samples

By Emma Ross
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Thousands of scientists were scrambling Tuesday at the urging of global health authorities to destroy vials of a pandemic flu strain sent to labs in 18 countries as part of routine testing.

The rush, urged by the World Health Organization, was sparked by a slim, but real, risk that the samples could spark a global flu epidemic. The vials of virus sent by a U.S. company went to nearly 5,000 labs, mostly in the United States, officials said.

"The risk is relatively low that a lab worker will get sick, but a large number of labs got it, and if someone does get infected, the risk of severe illness is high and this virus has shown to be fully transmissible," WHO's influenza chief, Klaus Stohr, told The Associated Press.

It was not immediately clear why the 1957 pandemic strain, which killed between 1 million and 4 million people, was in the proficiency test kits routinely sent to labs.

It was a decision that Stohr described as "unwise" and "unfortunate."

That particular bug was "an epidemic virus for many years," Stohr said from the U.N. health agency's headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. "The risk is low, but things can go wrong as long as these samples are out there, and there are some still out there."

The 1957 strain has not been included in the flu vaccine since 1968, and anyone born after that date has no immunity to it.

Dr. Nancy Cox, chief of the influenza branch at the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, said her agency was notified of the situation Friday morning. She also said officials strongly doubt someone deliberately planted the dangerous germ or that this was an act of bioterrorism.

"It wouldn't be a smart way to start a pandemic to send it to laboratories because we have people well-trained in biocontainment," she said.

Most of the samples were sent starting last year at the request of the College of American Pathologists, which helps labs do proficiency testing. The last shipments were sent out in February.

3 Brits suspected of al-Qaeda ties

By Mark Sherman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – While the Sept. 11, 2001 hijackers were putting the final touches on their deadly plans for the World Trade Center and Pentagon, federal authorities say another group of terrorists was plotting attacks on other landmarks in New York and Washington.

Three British citizens with suspected al-Qaeda ties were scouting the New York Stock Exchange, just blocks from the Twin Towers, five months before the 2001 attacks, a federal indictment that was unsealed Tuesday alleges. Other financial institutions in New York and nearby Newark, N.J., also were under surveillance, as were two Washington buildings just across the Potomac River from the Pentagon.

It is unclear how advanced the years-long plot was, but its discovery last summer prompted the Department of Homeland Security to raise the terror alert for the targeted buildings. Security in those cities also was tightened.

A four-count indictment returned by a New York City grand jury alleges the men, already in British custody, visited and conducted surveillance of the buildings and surrounding neighborhoods between August 2000 and April 2001.

The plot was foiled when Pakistani investigators seized a computer with information from the surveillance. British authorities were alerted and arrested eight men, including the three suspects, on terrorism-related charges last August, Deputy Attorney General James B. Comey said.

The indictment "sends a message about our resolve to terrorists," Comey said at a Justice Department news conference.

The grand jury returned the indictment on March 23, but it was unsealed only Tuesday. Named in it are Dhiran Barot, 33, Nadeem Tarmohammed, 26, and Qaisar Shaffi, 26.

They could receive life sentences if convicted of the most serious charge – conspiracy to use weapons of mass destruction in the United States. The indictment lists those weapons as improvised explosive devices and bombs.

U.S. officials claim Barot is a senior al-Qaeda figure, known variously as Abu Eisa al-Hindi, Abu Musa al-Hindi and Issa al-Britani.

Prosecutors say the men conducted surveillance on the stock exchange and Citicorp building in New York, the Prudential building in Newark and the International Monetary Fund and World Bank in Washington, including video surveillance in Manhattan around April 2001.

VENTRILOQUIST | Dummy based on 'old farmers'

Levendofsky said his act picked up with the arrival of his dummy Elmer, whom he has performed with for more than three years. He said Elmer was created by Axtell Expressions, Inc., a company out of Ventura, Calif., that makes handcrafted figures.

"Elmer's personality comes out of the male figures I grew up around. I'd listen to old men talking about simple things like the weather and, as a result, his humor is the kind you'd find out of old farmers," he said.

Levendofsky said his act with Elmer is based a lot on audience participation.

"We like to find out a lot about the crowd and then relate jokes based on what they might like to hear," he said.

"One thing that always seems to happen in our show, though, is that Elmer at some point always has to go to the bathroom," Levendofsky said. "Because this tends to happen so frequently, now I just let him leave, and I'll take up a volunteer 'dummy' from the audience until he returns."

The rest of their show, he said, usually deals with current events and making people laugh.

Levendofsky said Elmer also likes to give a little piece of advice during their show.

"Never, never take a sleeping pill and a laxative on the same night," Elmer said.

Levendofsky said he has performed all over the state, and his act was made popular through word-of-mouth advertising. Levendofsky has performed at the K-State Alumni Center and as an opening act for country singer Jeff Bates at the Trego County Fair. He and Elmer will be performing in June as the opening act for Rivers Rutherford, another country singer.

Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean of academic programs in the College of Agriculture, said Levendofsky is a hard-working young man who takes on tasks and accomplishes his goals.

McClaskey said that she has seen Levendofsky perform, noting that his abilities are the result of hard work and dedication, as well as the innate skill of liking to entertain.

"It is not surprising to see Nick be able to achieve his aims as a ventriloquist because when he takes on something, he gets it done," she said. "He's taken the time to perfect his craft and that bodes well with his good nature."

community grow stronger.

"I think he'll be a great fit for the office and really help our greek community advancing in the direction we want to in the future," Kowal said.

And he does have a few ideas to get started.

Jones said he would like to see new ideas tried for fraternity recruiting, get alumni more involved and create an electronic newsletter for parents and alumni.

Also, a new position of assistant Greek Affairs director is going to be created, he said. It is a nation-wide search. Applications are due May 15, and he hopes to hire someone by early July.The position will have a $30,000-$34,000 salary and will be funded similarly to his position.

Jones said he is especially excited to continue working with the students.

"I get to work with some of the best and brightest students at K-State, whose positive outlook and dedicated contribution really do add value to the K-State environment," he said.

"Coming to a work environment like this something that I think every person really dreams of, and for me, it's a reality."

DUBOIS Dean, faculty to oversee classes until end of year

Service and Preservation Education.

Few people knew of Dubois' condition and he lived a relatively normal life until the end.

"Jim was a very strong individual, very disciplined and very focused and when this [disease] started to affect the family, he started helping everyone by telling them not to worry," Murphy said. "I know he'll be greatly missed by all of us."

Faculty members and Dennis Law, the dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, will oversee Dubois' classes until the end of the year.

The funeral is at 10 a.m. today at St. Isidore Catholic Student Center. The burial will follow at 2 p.m. in Burlingame, Kan.

Dubois leaves behind his wife, Marianne, and two sons, Joshua and Nicholas.

Administrators follow the family's wishes in these situations and haven't made any formal plans for a memorial on campus, Bosco said.

"I know someday we will find a way to recognize Professor Dubois for all his time and efforts here at the university," Murphy said.

that Dubois would rather have seen a debate.

"We all share in the grief over Jim's death, but he would want us to move forward," said Jackie Spears, associate professor of secondary education and president of Faculty Senate.

The Faculty Senate Committee on Technology report was given by Tweed Ross, director of technology services for the College of Education. Ross said electronic portfolios are being worked on.

"Something also being developed is a program that would allow faculty to forward a piece of work from a student to a plagiarism checker," Ross said. "It would then send it back and highlight it if any indications arise."

Debate also arose over the University Calendar Committee guidelines concerning the length of summer semester.

The guidelines will apply to summer 2010 and it is unclear whether it will affect the start of fall 2010. The guidelines were later approved.

"We just want to give the calendar committee the chance to progress and move forward," Spears said.

truly love with a passion," Evans said. "K-State gave me the chance to not only develop my abilities as a basketball player, but also the ability to communicate as well, which is what young people need to be able to do."

A two-time Big 8 Player of the Year selection, Evans went on to be a first-round NBA draft pick when Denver selected him with the 21st pick of the 1978 draft.

"I'm really happy and thrilled about it," Evans said of his selection to the Hall of Fame. "I wasn't expecting it. It a great honor to be mentioned with all the great sports legends who came before me."

Guthridge from Parsons, Kan. was a guard for K-State from 1958-60 and helped the Wildcats reach the NCAA Regional Finals with a 25-2 record in 1958-59.

After his time as a player at K-State, he joined Dean Smith's coaching staff at North Carolina as an assistant and, in 1997, he became the Tar Heels' head coach.

In just three seasons, he led North Carolina to 80 wins and two Final Four appearances.

"You don't reach those achievements with luck," Smith said in a released statement about Guthridge's accomplishments at North Carolina. "Bill was always a tremendous worker and a great, great organizer."

Hahn played as a guard for the Wildcat football team from 1918-22, and in 1922, he earned All-America honors.

In all, the 2005 Hall of Fame Class has 15 members, bringing the total number of honorees to 141.

Taxes must be filed by Friday

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's that time of year again.

Friday is tax day.

Patricia Parker, certified public accountant, said students have two options if they haven't filed their taxes yet.

Students can file their taxes online, through a software program or at H&R Block.

Taxes must be postmarked by Friday.

Parker said most students can do a simple tax form that requires a W2 and bank interest from savings and checking accounts.

"It is very simple to put these numbers on a return," she said.

Senators to change regulations

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will discuss election regulations and newly elected students will be sworn in tonight.

First, senate will go through business introduced at last week's meeting.

Proposed changes to election regulations are a result from this year's elections.

Some of the changes were requested by the university, David McCandless, 2005 elections commissioner, said.

Political campaigns will no longer be allowed to use K-State copyrighted or trademarked logos.

Also, chalking regulations are to be more defined. The changes specify that liquid chalk is not to be used and chalking is not allowed within 30 feet of the entrance of a building.

"As far as campaigning goes, part of the effort is to make it more manageable and less stress on the students as a whole," McCandless said.

Placing campaign materials around campus is going to moved back to 5 p.m. Tuesday after the informational meetings for the Student Body President and Vice President Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom recall times during they shared during their term as they clean out their office for the incoming president and vice president. Michael Burns and Grant Groene will be sworn into office tonight.

Leadership transition

Urkevich, Ankrom hand reigns to new pair

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It started with a photocopy of a hand giving a thumbs-up sign and a message "Best of Luck!" from former student body president John O'Hara.

Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom, student body president and vice president, were sworn into office April 8, 2004, and the sign was their only piece of advice, Urkevich said.

"That was our transition. We really didn't get anything else," she said. "I might leave the same for Michael, but there will be more to it than that."

Urkevich and Ankrom met with Michael Burns and Grant Groene, incoming president and vice president, on Tuesday to go over duties and other issues.

But the journey started before the photocopy.

Urkevich, senior in finance, started at K-State in fall 2001. She attended high school at Blue Valley North in Overland Park, Kan.

Urkevich got involved in Student Senate when she was a freshman and applied to be an intern. She also joined Alpha Delta Pi sorority, where she served as the scholarship chair for one year.

Then she served as a senator for the College of Business for two years. The second year she was chair of the Privilege Fee Committee.

She said she didn't have the intention of running for president to begin with.

"I knew I wanted to be involved," Urkevich said. "I definitely did not know I wanted to be student body president."

Ankrom, on the other hand, didn't get involved in Student Governing Association until O'Hara was elected president in 2003.

He became part of O'Hara's cabinet as the technology coordinator, which was when he began to work with Urkevich.

Ankrom, senior in management information systems, graduated from Winfield High School in Winfield, Kan., in spring 2000 and began at K-State that fall. He joined Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and became involved serving in several positions, including vice president.

The pair originally discussed running for the positions at a senate meeting.

"It pretty much started with passing notes back and forth at senate discussing the possibility," Urkevich said. "We finalized our plans before winter break."

Ankrom could have graduated in December but decided he could stay an extra semester for the opportunity.

"I kind of stretched it out in order to take advantage of this opportunity," he said. "I didn't really plan on running until I was technology coordinator, and somehow I got talked into it."

They announced their bid for candidacy Feb. 11, 2004. Urkevich and Ankrom ran on a three-prong platform.

Their most important issue was creating a student portal.

The Wildcat Information Network launched January 12.

Both said they are proud of WIN.

"It was the biggest issue that was controversial when we were campaigning that people didn't really think we could get it done," Urkevich said.

"We were pretty confident that we could deliver within the time frame we were in office," Ankrom said.

WIN includes a book exchange, campus calendar and virtual marketplace. It was Presidential cabinet applications due by 4 p.m. Friday

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students wanting to be on the cabinet of incoming Student Body President and Vice-President Michael Burns and Grant Groene have until 4 p.m. Friday to turn in their applications.

Applications can be found online at www.ksu.edu/osas and must be turned in to the OSAS office.

They are accepting applications for 13 cabinet positions, Burns said. The positions are chief of staff, academic quality coordinator, college council coordinator, governmental relations director, graduate student liaison, international affairs director, multicultural affairs director, residence hall liaison, K-State Manhattan-Salina relations liaison, public relations director and technology coordinator.

"We'll be a collective group that will work together to represent the student body's needs to university administration and to accomplish Grant and I's platform goals," Burns said.

All the different positions will have their own specific duties, but Burns said they will all work together to reach a common goal.

"Mainly the job will be to assist Grant and I with our job this next year," he said.

The time commitment for each position will vary, but Burns said it will range from 30 minutes to a couple of hours a week.

Not all of the cabinet positions from last term are returning. Erik Ankrom, the outgoing student body vice-president, said that while some positions can be created and removed, others are written into the constitutional bylaws that they have to occur every year.

"Some of them are permanent positions that have to be filled," Ankrom said.

Burns said he and Groene eliminated the All-University honors program liaison and the environmental quality coordinator. New for their term is the graduate student liaison, and some of the responsibilities from the removed positions have been reassigned to other cabinet positions.

Burns said he is hoping to have more than 30 applicants for the 13 positions. All candidates who apply will be interviewed, and they will announce who was chosen on April 26.

Students who want to be on the cabinet do not have to have previous student government experience.

"These positions are for any individual who is beginning to get involved in student government," Burns said. "Traditionally, many individuals who apply for cabinet positions have no prior SGA experience."

Burns said the cabinet positions are very important to his presidency's success.

"The cabinet positions are incredibly important to Grant and I because they will be a group who have the same interests and commitment to the student body as we do," Burns said.

"These individuals will help us be successful and will receive a lot of quality experience," he said.

The Cryptoquip is a substitution cipher in which one letter stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words and words using an apostrophe give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is by trial and error.

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Confusing conundrums

1. Which word, if pronounced right, is wrong, but if pronounced wrong is right?

2. A hunter arose early, ate breakfast, and headed south. Half a mile from camp he tripped and skinned his nose. He picked himself up, cursing, and continued south. Half a mile farther along he spotted a bear.

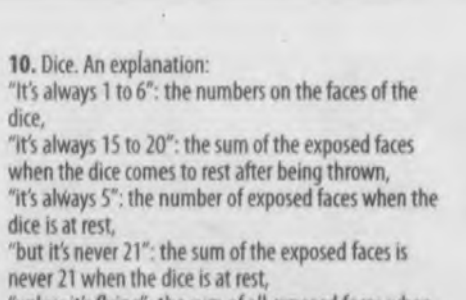
Drawing a bead, he pulled the trigger, but the safety was on. The bear saw him and headed east at top speed. Half a mile later the hunter caught up, fired, but only wounded the beast, which limped on toward the east.

The hunter followed and, half a mile later, caught and killed the bear. Pleased, the hunter walked the mile north back to his camp to find that it had been ransacked by a second bear.

What color was the bear that tore up his camp?

3. If today is Friday, what is the day that follows the day that comes after the day that precedes the day before yesterday?

4. Forward I'm heavy,
Backward I'm not.
What am I?



5. Albert is a keen dog admirer and over the years has had a number of dogs. He has had an Alsatian, a Dalmatian, a Poodle and a Great Dane, but not necessarily in that order.

Albert had Jamie first. The Dalmatian was an adored pet before the Great Dane. Sammy, the Alsatian, was the second dog Albert loved. Whitney was housed before the Poodle and Jimmy was not a Great Dane.

Can you tell each of the dogs' name and the order in which Albert had them?

6. Would you rather a crocodile attack you or an alligator?

7. How many seconds are there in a year?

8. What is in seasons, seconds, centuries and minutes but not in decades, years or days?

9. What English word has three consecutive double letters?

10. It's always 1 to 6,
it's always 15 to 20,
it's always 5,
but it's never 21,
unless it's flying.

Answers

1. Wrong

2. White. It is a polar bear, for the North Pole is one of the few places on earth where you can go one mile south, one mile east, and one mile north and still end up at your starting point. (The others are near the South Pole.)

3. Thursday

4. Ton

5. Albert had Jamie the Dalmatian first, then Sammy the Alsatian, Whitney the Great Dane and finally, Jimmy the Poodle

6. I would rather the crocodile attack the alligator. Read the sentence again to see the double meaning.

7. 12 (2nd of January, 2nd of February, etc.)

8. The letter "n"

9. Bookkeeper

10. Dice. An explanation:
"It's always 1 to 6": the numbers on the faces of the dice,
"it's always 15 to 20": the sum of the exposed faces when the dice comes to rest after being thrown,
"it's always 5": the number of exposed faces when the dice is at rest,
"but it's never 21": the sum of the exposed faces is never 21 when the dice is at rest,
"unless it's flying": the sum of all exposed faces when the dice is flying is 21 (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6).

Keith Clarke has been a faculty member the University of California Santa Barbara since 1996. His most recent research was on environmental simulation modeling.

Why you should go
Clarke will discuss "Complex Geography and Geographical Complexity." He will examine methods and techniques for complex geographical problems.

About Keith Clarke
Clarke has done work in global systems, global change and modeling simulation.

"I am coming from comprehensive approaches to geography," he said. "I have recently been thinking about big challenges that come with the system."

Al Cochran, professor of music and interim assistant provost, said the provost's office is excited to have Clarke at K-State.

"The particular topic he is addressing, it has ramifications and implications for us at K-State Research and Extension," Cochran said.

Cuban author to speak about exile experience

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Yale professor and leading historian Carlos Eire, will give a lecture about his book, "Waiting for snow in Havana: Confessions of a Cuban Boy" at 7 tonight in the Flint Hills room at the K-State Student Union.

Eire's book won the 2003 National Book Award for non-fiction and is a New York Times bestseller.

Lee Behlman, assistant English professor, said he is really looking forward to Eire's lecture.

"He specializes on the early modern period of Christianity, but his work has a really remarkable range to it," Behlman said. "The book is about growing up in a pre-Castro environment of relative wealth and privilege that turns to the experience of losing everything when Castro takes over."

Behlman said Eire is originally from Cuba and moved here when he was 11, leaving both of his parents behind and never seeing his father again.

"In 1962, Eire's world changed forever when he and his brother were among the 14,000 children airlifted off the island," he said. "The book is about the experience of exile in a very liberal and also in a very literal sense. It's about finding meaning in your life whenever presented with disaster."

Behlman said that the lecture is definitely worth attending.

"I can't attest to the fact that he is a very dynamic exciting speaker and also a very sweet man," he said.

TO THE POINT

Changes helpful for a smooth election process

Elections went much more smoothly this year than last year.

Some of this could be attributed to changes made to the election regulations as a result of last year's elections.

However, the changes came late and weren't perfect.

One pair had announced their bid for the presidency before changes were made, and several students made copies of regulations before the changes were finalized.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

This caused some problems with deadlines, and students were allowed to hand in expense reports late due to the confusion.

It is good that Student Senate is taking action quickly to make changes this year, so the same problems don't happen next year.

Suggested changes senators are considering tonight will help the election process run fairly and smoothly.

One such change allows candidates running in the primary election, presidential candidate, to post their campaign material the Tuesday after informational meetings, but all other candidates have to wait. They can post the Tuesday before the general election.

This will help the student body as a whole. It will allow all students to focus on one election at a time.

Also, the changes set a deadline to appoint an elections commissioner and elections review committee.

Fixing these regulations is a step toward preventing future trouble.

GEEK WEEK

Voyage into space

Epic Star Wars is fun to watch; Star Trek fans over-obsessive

GRANT BUELL

"May the Force be with you."

"Live long and prosper."

Both geeky phrases, but be honest: which one evokes more images of geeks in costumes, desperate fanboys at conventions and complete losers?

If you don't go with "Live long and prosper," I'll refer you to a film called "Trekkies" that might change your mind.

"Trekkies" is a documentary in which Denise Crosby, an actress from "Star Trek: The Next Generation," leads audiences through the bizarre world of extreme Star Trek fandom. Those in the film are, of course, the weirdest of the weird, but it seems like there's an awful lot of them.

Most of the movie's subjects wear their Starfleet uniforms daily, and some of them have transformed their surroundings to conform with whatever sterile Star Trek set they happen to have been engaged by the most.

It's tough not to laugh a lot at the lengths to which many fans go in pursuit of somehow living out their Star Trek dream. The movie ends up trying to sell the moral of the story as, "it doesn't matter how weird you are, everyone's okay in their own special way."

But it's easy to see how Star Trek has spun itself completely beyond the confines of what it is: entertainment.

There are many very geeky Star Wars fans; however, I'm of the firm belief that there are far more level-headed and well-balanced Star Wars fans. Star Wars remains what it really is for them: entertainment; and it manages to be very good entertainment.

Star Trek merely manages to be a pale and ridiculous shadow of its pretensions as the stuff of futuristic revolution. Star Wars is, simply, way cooler than Star Trek.

Star Wars has no documentaries on the insanity of its fanbase. This is somewhat surprising since the Star Wars fanbase is humongous compared to that of Star Trek.

You'd think there'd be a proportionate number of really crazy fans, right? There really aren't. This is because Star Wars is much more able to suck in your average Joe.

Star Wars deals in universal themes, ideas that aren't confined to the realm of sci-fi nerds. George Lucas used universal archetypes in his storytelling; the idealistic youth (Luke Skywalker), the damsel in distress (Princess Leia), the wise sage (Obi-Wan Kenobi and Yoda), the hardened mercenary (Han Solo) and the black-hearted villain (Darth Vader).

Lucas introduces themes that are thousands of years old and have been integral parts of the mythologies of many ancient cultures. Essentially, he's created a modern mythology, something that Star Trek can't quite claim.

Beyond being universally appealing, the Star Wars films are just much more inventive and interesting than Star Trek has managed to be. I'm even including the last two Star Wars debacles in this assessment, although marginally.

Despite their stale dialogue and stiff acting, the latest Star Wars films have shown us things we've not seen before, while Star Trek rarely manages more than nautical dramatics set in space and aliens with funny ridges on their face. The inventiveness and scale of Star Wars' design alone is reason enough to enjoy the films.

Star Wars and Star Trek are tough to compare. Trek is pure science fiction, while Wars is an epic fantasy that happens to be set in outer space. To the extent that they can be compared, however, Wars has a definite edge over Trek.

Star Wars reaches us on a much more visceral level. If I have to choose, I'd rather my entertainment make me feel than make me think. If I want to think, I'll go to class.

Star Trek has deep, thoughtful stories; Lucas films too basic

RYAN FLYNN

Star Trek and Star Wars have been compared to each other for years. Star Wars fans always claim dominance because their movies make more money. But Star Wars is far from dominant.

While Star Wars might make more money, Star Trek has more truth and honor in it than Star Wars could ever hope to have.

Star Trek is the dominant of the two sci-fi adventures, and the reasons are clear as can be.

First, consider the creators.

Gene Roddenberry, creator of Star Trek, is the model of a sci-fi folk hero, whereas George Lucas, the guy who created Star Wars, is a money-grubbing jerk.

When Roddenberry set out to create Star Trek, he wanted to create a realistic portrayal of what the world would be like 300 years into the future. He didn't want to create a show about a utopia in which everyone is happy and free. Instead, he made a world with real people and real problems.

When Lucas sat down to write the first Star Wars movie, it seems like he tried to write a story that would bring in the most money. All the special editions and re-releases are evidence of this. He couldn't just let his work speak for itself. He had to re-release it and squeeze every last penny out of it.

Secondly, Star Trek is much more adept at taking on complex issues.

The plots of the Star Trek movies and series all had a higher purpose and meaning. While obviously entertainment was their primary function, Star Trek went on to address current issues of interest.

Roddenberry was able to show the problems of today's society in a futuristic environment. Star Wars fails even to attempt to address the issues that Star Trek tackled, like race relations, women in the work place and religion.

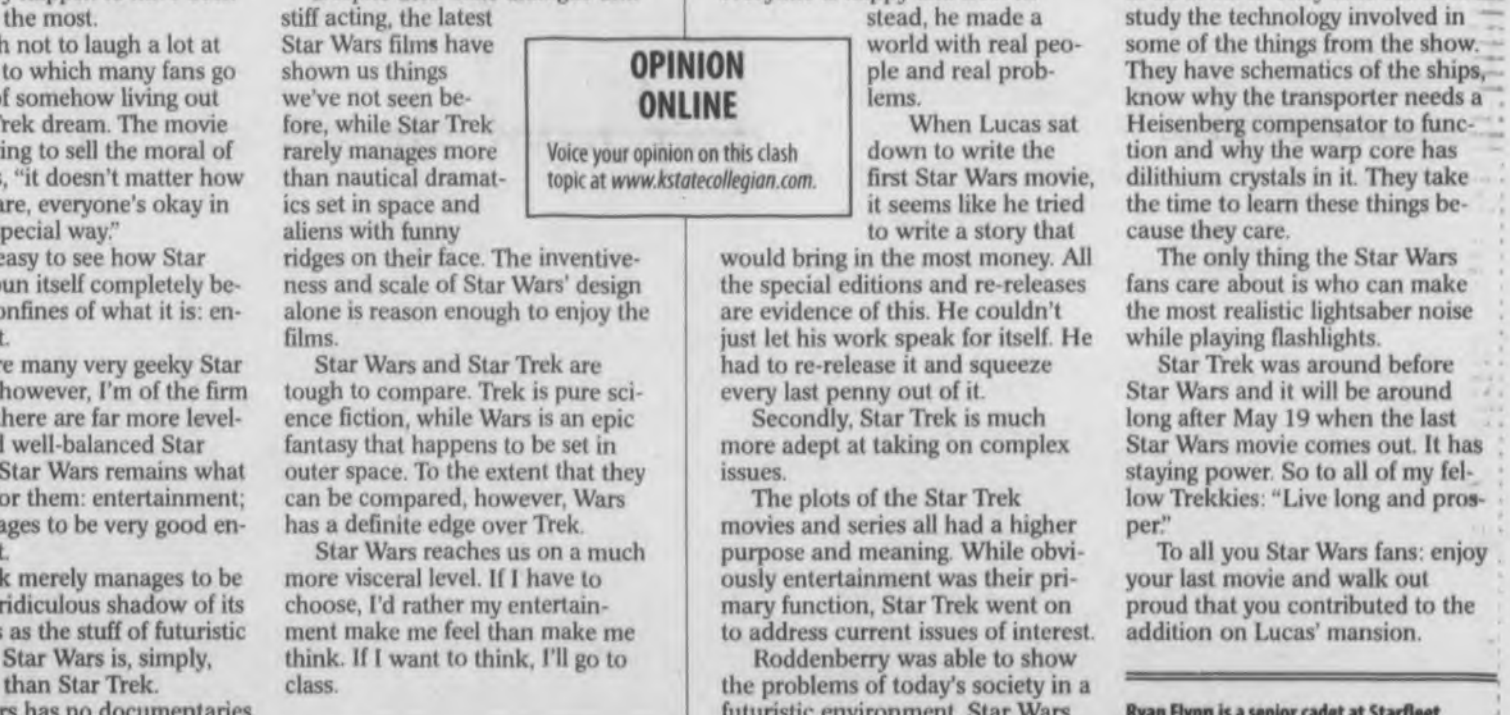
Star Wars fails to look at any issues except good versus evil. Honestly, who cares? Good always triumphs over evil.

Congratulations – I applaud you, George Lucas. I wasn't really sure that good was good and evil was evil. But now that I have Star Wars to show me the difference, I can rest easy.

Star Wars fans always talk about how well Lucas defined good and evil and the epic battle between the two. Life is not quite that simple. There are many complicated issues in the world to which Star Wars turns a blind eye while Star Trek tackles them head-on.

Thirdly, look at the fans.

While probably being the most mocked of all sci-fi groups, Trekkies are some of the most devoted people you could ever know. Though extremely weird and often obsessed, these Trekkies show a passion that is unmatched.



Trekkies are arguably the strongest and most devout fan base in all of sci-fi. They take the time to study the technology involved in some of the things from the show. They have schematics of the ships, know why the transporter needs a Heisenberg compensator to function and why the warp core has dilithium crystals in it. They take the time to learn these things because they care.

The only thing the Star Wars fans care about is who can make the most realistic lightsaber noise while playing flashlights.

Star Trek was around before Star Wars and it will be around long after May 19 when the last Star Wars movie comes out. It has staying power. So to all of my fellow Trekkies: "Live long and prosper."

To all you Star Wars fans: enjoy your last movie and walk out proud that you contributed to the addition on Lucas' mansion.

Oh my gosh, a Johnson County chick driving an SUV with Chi Omega tags? Someone should write a story about how different her life is from everyone else's she grew up around.

I might have missed you with my car today, but don't worry. There's always tomorrow.

I like how the clock in the Union really looks like K-State students: cheap and plastic.

How stupid are the people in Metropolis? They can't even recognize Superman when he puts on glasses.

Wouldn't Superman's super-sperm rip a human woman in half?

I agree. Kappa Kappa Gammas have such a holier-than-thou attitude. They need to relax and just take life in stride.

For your information I keep the Kerry-Edwards sticker on my car so no one gets me confused with you backwards clowns who voted for Bush.

"Buffy the Vampire Slayer" was the worst television show ever made.

Emergency, emergency. Drunk girls: stop burning popcorn in Ford. We like to sleep.

Gotta love the dorms when the damn fire alarm goes of at three in the morning.

Whoever just caused the fire alarm at Ford at 2:15 a.m.: I've got words for you. You are going down.

Is anyone else freaked out by the fact that Claire Coggins' hair is no longer blonde?

I'd like to thank the guy that helped me move my car off Claflin this morning. By the way, you were really cute.

I just saw the new clock tower, and I'd just want to say they've got the same exact clocks at Wal-Mart.

Price of comics hurts small businesses

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dave Forsyth, a comic art and comic book collector from Wamego, Kan., holds a handful of Superman comic books that he owns. Forsyth's collection of comic books fluctuates, but he said he has had as many as 2,000 to 5,000 books at a time.

Catrina Rawson
COLLEGIAN

Dave Forsyth's first comic book was a copy of Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

But his rarest book was probably a 1970's edition of The Spectacular Spider-man, a 14-by-17 sized issue that prefaced the famous series The Amazing Spider-man that would come out in the 1980's.

"Quite simply, I liked super heroes, and I liked comic books," Forsyth said. "I started collecting art and have a comic art collection."

After collecting and buying comic books for some time, Forsyth decided to start his own business as a platform for his passion.

"The store brought more comics," Forsyth said. "The store went off like a bang. I was out of the red in six months."

Forsyth's Comic Card Gallery opened in 2002 but closed down a year later due to what Forsyth would later call "the demise of the comic book industry."

Marvel and DC Comics have been two of the most popular lines of comic books in the industry. Of Marvel's most popular characters and comics, the best of the best include the Hulk, Iron Man, Uncanny X-Men and the Amazing Spider-Man. Some of DC's most popular include Batman, Superman and the Flash.

Jason Bumm, junior in graphic design, said he has been interested in comics since he was young "because of the superhero aspect."

"Superman is my favorite, by far," Bumm said. "He basically stands for good. There's nothing he couldn't really overcome."

The storylines, artwork and characters are what made Marvel and DC Comics big. While both lines have remained popular over the years, a distributing company called Diamond Distributing bought both companies and created, what Forsyth said, "the demise of the comic book industry."

After Diamond took over Marvel and DC, prices went up and the little guy just couldn't take it. Forsyth said by 1995, 50 percent of comic shops were out of business due to the Diamond Distributing monopoly.

This "takeover" had been assisted by earlier rulings by various courts across the nation that had labeled several comic book issues "obscene" and "pornographic," Forsyth said.

Rising prices haven't helped matters. Issues could be picked up for 75 cents in the 1970's and were still reasonable at $1.50 in the 1980's, he said. But the prices now range from $3.95 to $7.50, a hefty amount of pocket change for the average kid.

While still interested in his passion for comic books, Forsyth has given several parts of his collection to other collectors. His collection fluctuates, but Forsyth said he has had as many as 2,000 to 5,000 books at a time.

Although many stores have folded under the pressures of the industry, Manhattan residents can still visit one store that offers some of the most popular comics on the market.

Jon Miles, co-owner of the Patch and Crow's Nest on Claflin Road, said his store offers at least one issue from about 300 titles each month. Some of the store's most popular items include the Marvel Ultimate Line, a new telling of old favorites.

Miles said his own interest in comic books didn't begin until he was about 21 and working in a store that sold games and comic books. After keeping himself up on the newest issues, Miles said he was hooked.

While the market may be struggling, Miles still sees people walking in and out of stores and conventions, seeking the perfect issue or crossing the line from hobbyist to collector.

For those who want advice on what to look for, Miles said finding an exclusive title can mean more than finding one in mint condition.

"If you are getting into collecting, look for rarity, not just quality. And get into comics for reading. Read what you like.

"If you're not enjoying them, you won't get out of them what you want," Miles said.

K-State student chosen to meet Nobel Laureates in Germany

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student has been selected to attend a meeting of Nobel Laureates and other students in Lindau, Germany.

Mark Smith, graduate student in physics, said the U.S. Department of Energy, the National Science Foundation and the Oak Ridge Associated Universities select students across the United States for the honor. Smith was nominated by the U.S. Department of Energy, who will sponsor him and cover all costs of attending the meeting.

The meetings have been held since 1951 and Nobel Laureates in chemistry, physics and physiology/medicine will convene at Lindau from June 26 to July 1 and will be making presentations on topics of their choice. There also will be open and informal discussions with the students and other researchers there, he said.

"It is very thrilling to have been chosen to attend the meeting," Smith said.

"It will be nice to interact with the Nobel Laureates and other students in an international setting."

Students have to be in their second or third year of graduate school and also American citizens to be nominated. In addition to the quality of their research work, grade point average and overall performance and an essay is also required to be nominated, he said.

Smith said in addition to the Nobel Laureates, there will also be other prominent scientists along with students and other qualified researchers at the meeting. They will be able to interact with one another and exchange knowledge that will increase their understanding of subjects outside of their own area of interest.

Tim Bolton, professor of physics, said this is the first time K-State is sending a representative to the meeting, and it is a great honor and a prestigious award for K-State.

"Mark Smith has an outstanding academic record and is also progressing well with his research," Bolton said. "He is an excellent representative of the university and the state of Kansas and his selection will ensure that future nominations from K-State are well received."

Australian football gains popularity at K-State

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If he builds it, they will come. That is what Steve Stampbach, senior in computer science, hopes will happen at K-State with Australian Rules football, otherwise known as "footy."

"Footy," which is more or less a cross between football, rugby and soccer, is to Australia what the NFL is to the United States, Stampbach said. Since 1996, footy has slowly started spreading to America, and now it has even reached K-State.

"The beautiful thing about footy is that there are positions to suit any caliber of athlete," Stampbach said. "Footy is a continuous sport – it's perfect for the high school athlete who wasn't quite good enough to play at the college level."

Stampbach, whose parents are from Australia, caught wind of footy about three years ago. In Australia, the sport is professional and is played under the AFL – Australian Football League. Recently, the sport has crossed seas to the United States, and currently boasts about 50 club teams nationwide.

"One thing the U.S. is lacking is quality, competitive club teams and leagues," Stampbach said. "Australia has a great club system."

Unbeknownst to many, a footy team was created in Kansas City, Mo., in 1998 called the Power. While the Power only has about 20 active players, they are still a competitive club team. In hopes of obtaining new players, the Power are traveling to Manhattan this Saturday to hold an exhibition and scrimmage.

"They're going to come up and show people what the game is about," Stampbach said. "If we get enough interest, we're going to try and start a team at K-State."

If a K-State team is formed, it would be able to align with the Power and compete with them nationwide, Stampbach said.

Stampbach, who currently practices with the Power once every two weeks, has Matt Seuling, the Power's head coach, excited about a future between Kansas City and K-State.

"The K-State connection looks very promising, based on my connection with Steve," Seuling said. "We're kind of in the rebuilding phase, with a small market of only about 20 guys. We could definitely use some more bodies."

Since footy is an amateur sport, people of all ages can compete together, Seuling said. The Power's age range stretches from roughly 19-45. Seuling said he is hoping a newly-established collegiate following will help entice K-State students to join the bandwagon.

Stampbach said he is willing do anything to initiate a footy craze at K-State.

"We ideally want to get 20 guys and have regular practices once a week," Stampbach said. "They can participate in games with the KC Power and eventually travel down to the national

Track & Field | Eveland named Athlete of the Week

On Tuesday, K-State junior pole-vaulter Breanna Eveland was named the Big 12 Conference Track and Field Athlete of the Week for the second straight week.

Eveland

The honor came for Eveland after she recorded a winning height of 13-07 1/4 at the Texas Relays last week.

This is the fourth honor for the program during the outdoor season and the third straight.

TENNIS

Women victorious at Kansas

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis completed their marathon road trip with a close 4-3 victory over the University of Kansas Wednesday in Lawrence.

It was the fourth win on the road for the Wildcats, who finished the last of their eight consecutive matches away from home.

The Wildcats started their final road match of the season strong, winning the doubles point decisively before winning the top three singles matches to secure the win.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he saw a gritty performance from his squad in the tight match and improved doubles play.

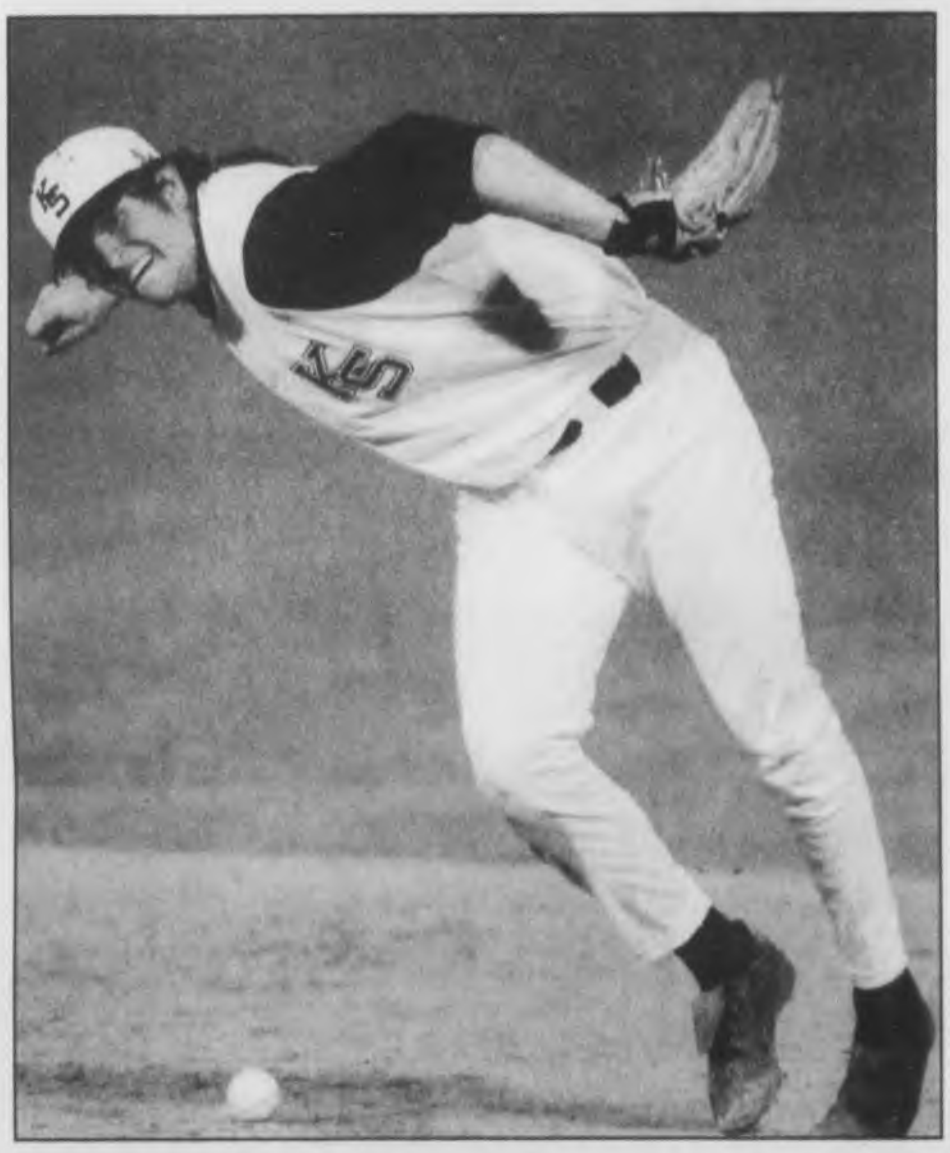
"It ended up being a really tough match," Bietau said. "Obviously, we're very happy to win it. Our doubles was better today. We started off the year thinking we would be pretty strong in doubles and in the last couple of weeks we were beginning to wonder a little bit. But they got back on track today.

"It's always good to win 4-3 matches, especially when you have to come up with something a little bit better than what you've been doing to win it."

En route to victory, senior Maria Rosenberg tied the K-State all-time singles win record at 77, set by Petra Sedlmajerova from 1999-2003.

Rosenberg was surprised to learn she tied the record.

"I tied it?" she said. "I didn't know, but that's nice."



Rosenberg tied the record by beating Kansas' Elizaveta Avdeeva in straight sets, 7-5 6-4. She said the the second set was up for grabs, and she was thankful to come away with the win.

"It felt good that I won the second set," she said. "It could have gone either way. It feels good that I am capable of playing in close matches. I definitely was not going to take my opponent lightly, I never take any opponents lightly, but I did think that I had a good chance of winning it."

The Wildcats will return home Sunday for the first time in more than a month to take on No. 62 Colorado. The match is set for 11 a.m.

BASEBALL

Not prepared

K-State catcher David Baker tries to tag William Jewell's Jesse Robertson during the first inning at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats will try to bounce back from the loss when they will be host to Texas Tech this weekend in a three-game homestand.

William Jewel beats Wildcats 6-1 after canceled game

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Creighton cancelled the Wednesday night game against K-State, the Wildcats were left to look for a new opponent. In place of the Bluejays, the Wildcats took the field Wednesday night against William Jewel and came away with a 6-1 loss.

K-State (15-16, 2-10) was out-hit by William Jewel 14-4, and left eight runners stranded on base.

After the loss, head coach Brad Hill took the blame for his team's performance.

"That's what happens when you are not ready to play, and that's the coach," Hill said. "They came to play and we didn't. That's me, that's my fault."

Hill said players at the plate can feel a lack of intensity in the dugout.

"It takes the whole team being into it, not just the guys on the field."

Junior Brett Muegge (1-2) picked up the loss for the Wildcats after he pitched 4.2 innings and gave up four earned runs on eight hits with one walk.

"He just wasn't sharp," Hill said. "He was up in the zone, and they jumped right out on us. They hit some balls hard early and he got defensive and tried to guide his pitches."

Starting senior outfielder Terry Blunt was taken out of the game after his second at-bat, and Hill explained his reasoning after the game.

"We are just trying to get some kids to realize that they need to play hard and not be effected by bad at-bats," he said.

Hill said that William Jewel came to Manhattan to play.

"They came over here to prove a point, and it was embarrassing," he said. "It doesn't matter who you play, every day, you have to line up and play and respect your opponents."

Hill said he hopes the team can learn from the loss and become more focused heading into this weekend's home series against Texas Tech.

"We are going to practice hard (Thursday) and work on some things Texas Tech does," he said. "This can do some serious damage to us if we let it."

MLB | Royals place third-baseman Teahen on DL

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals placed third baseman Mark Teahen on the 15-day disabled list Wednesday and purchased the contract of infielder Joe McEwing from Triple-A Omaha of the Pacific Coast League.

Teahen

Teahen, the key piece of the trade that sent Carlos Beltran to Houston last year, left Monday's home opener with a lower back strain.

McEwing, 32, was signed to a minor league contract on March 22. He has a .253 career average in 664 major league games with St. Louis and the New York Mets, who released him during spring training.

CBB | North Carolina's McCants declares for draft

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — North Carolina junior Rashad McCants said Wednesday he will enter the NBA draft, after helping the Tar Heels win their fourth national championship

McCants

McCants, the team's second-leading scorer at 16 points a game, said he was in the process of hiring an agent, a move that would prevent him from returning for his senior season. But he said he would continue working to earn his college degree.

McCants said he came back to school after his sophomore season to win a national championship.

MLB | Sosa disputes retirement story

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Sammy Sosa hasn't decided on how much longer he wants to play baseball.

Sosa

A report in Monday's El Caribe newspaper in Sosa's native Dominican Republic quoted the 36-year-old slugger as saying he will retire before his 40th birthday, even if he fails to reach 700 career home runs.

"I really didn't say that, that I'm going to be retiring. I said I don't want to play until 47. Maybe it got a little bit confused," Sosa said.

CBB | Center to transfer from Oklahoma State

STILLWATER, Okla. — Center Frans Steyn will transfer from Oklahoma State to a Division II program in hopes more playing time will give him an opportunity to show he has the potential for a professional basketball career.

Steyn

Steyn, a 7-foot-2 center from South Africa, played in 18 games last season and averaged 2.7 points and 6.5 minutes. He started four nonconference games as the Cowboys experimented with a bigger lineup, but his playing time diminished after that. He played only two minutes total in the Cowboys' final 13 games.

Steyn said he had made a few calls but hadn't picked a new school yet.

Women's players rough up columnist during pick-up game

TYLER MCCLELLAN

I've played basketball for the better half of 21 years now, and I've learned many things about the game, one of which is court etiquette.

For example, when my team is up by 30 points, it's general practice to lighten up the defense to keep from completely humiliating the other team.

Another example would be when a woman is your opponent. You don't want to be that guy who blocks all of her shots or the guy who knocks her down trying to grab a rebound.

The reason I say this is because last week, my friends and I decided to play a couple of basketball games at the Peters Recreation Complex.

We had been holding the court for two games when trouble arrived.

Warming up for the next game were Kendra Wecker, Claire Coggins and Laurie Koehn from the K-State women's basketball team.

We agreed to play a game, and since my team was still holding the court, we got the ball first. Matched up in man-to-man defense, I had the personal pleasure being guarded by Coggins – and she put me in my place.

With the ball at the top of the key, I decided to cut through the lane and maybe catch a pass for a lay-up. As I start to cut, I felt this forceful thud in my side, which turned out to be Coggins' forearm.

Apparently, Coggins decided the best place on the court for me was in the corner.

Thinking about the best interest of my team, I decided to try my luck and get inside the paint. As I stepped in to do so, I felt another mind-rattling thud in my side.

Again, Coggins had decided this move wasn't in my best interest.

Reluctant to move, my team finally scored, and it was my turn to play defense.

In my mind, I was thinking, "Is that how we're gonna play ball? You wanna get rough? I can play rough. Oh, it's on."

I stepped out on Coggins to defend. I played a bit of a cushion, so if she decided to drive to the basket, I would be able to block her shot and devastate her into playing tentatively.

At least, that was the plan.

At this point, my conscience started to weigh out my options.

On one hand, I thought "She needs to pay, and I'm going to bring the pain."

On the other hand, I remember my court etiquette and think, "Blocking her will only make me 'that guy.'"

As I was deciding whether or not to block her shot, Coggins stepped up right in front of me and hit a shot.

I decided it was time to bring the pain.

After tightening up the defense, both teams made a series of shots and the game score was 5-5. This is where I met my next dilemma.

Wecker, Koehn and Coggins all started setting picks for each other.

With Wecker, Koehn and Coggins all putting on quite the show from behind the three-point line, the game quickly got out of hand.

It was now 14-5 (in Rec rules teams only play to 15) and I was going to make my last stand. I had stolen the ball and was on my way to make a lay-up on the other end when, out of nowhere, someone hit me, took the ball and shot a three.

Game over.

Koehn, Wecker and Coggins applauded our efforts, and I walked off the court with my body bruised and my pride tarnished.

I had never been pushed around by women like that before, and my first thought was, "How embarrassing." My second thought was how great it was to be beaten into submission by those three.

Welsh band wildly successful

"Fuzzy Logic"
The Super Furry Animals debut that shows their distinctive style of fusing art rock, punk, and pop into the structure of a perfectly catchy pop melody.

"Radiator"
The Animals' masterpiece. The songwriting deepened as did their sound, as more layers were added to their already lush mixes of styles. This is one of the best albums of the nineties.

"Guerilla"
This album found Super Furry Animals delving into the vast world of electronica. Many tracks found the group fleshing songs out into wild and appealing experimentation.

"MWNG"
An album whose vocals were sung entirely in Super Furry Animal's native Welsh language. Even though you can't understand what they are saying the music is better than ever and speaks to the listener much more than any words could.

"Rings Around the World"
The Animals' first mainstream success. The band brings together all of their strengths into one magnificent whole.

"Phantom Power"
Super Furry Animals get political (more than usual). Saddened by a horrible tragedy on American soil and infuriated with the way the president botched the situation, the Animals' record this beautifully somber album.

Super Furry Animals known for liberal activism

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Welsh band Super Furry Animals is known for its eclectic music, genre jumping and left-wing political activism. Formed in 1993, Super Furry Animals have had a wildly creative and successful tenure in the music scene.

Born from the newly created primordial ooze that was the early-mid nineties post-grunge/alternative scene, Gruff Rhys, Dafydd Ieuan, Cian Ciaran, Guto Pryce, and Huw Bunford created the group Super Furry Animals in Cardiff, Wales. All of the members were in bands prior to the Super Furry Animals' formation. Most notably was a jangle pop band named Emily of which Gruff Rhys was a member.

The band gained notoriety and also the label of being eccentric with many of its early singles, sung entirely in its native Welsh language. Super Furry Animals fused elements of pop, rock, punk, electronica, prog, and whatever else seemed to be sitting around to create a wildly infectious sound. What made the Animals stand out was irreverent attitude, witty lyrics and undeniably excellent melodic awareness that combined to create perfect pop music that was just a little left field.

In 1995, the band signed a contract with Creation Records. It was at this time that the band decided to sing most of their songs in English in order to reach a wider audience. By the spring of 1996, the band had recorded and released their debut album, "Fuzzy Logic."

The album was greeted with phenomenal reviews by press on both sides of the Atlantic. The band was noticed for catchy songs that had intonations of their own principles hidden within the intelligent lyrics. Super Furry Animals became recognized as much for their off-stage antics as their music, most notably for arriving at music festivals being carried in an enormous tank.

In fall 1996, the Animals released a single called "The Man Don't Give a ----," which contained a sample from Steely Dan's song "Showbiz Kid." It was a moderate hit, reaching number 22 on the U.K. singles chart.

Come 1997, the band re-entered the studio to record and release their second album, "Radiator."

The album was met with immense critical approval and the album turned out to be one of the Animals' best albums. Two years later, they released "Guerilla," an album that had experimental forays into electronica and techno.

Super Furry Animals have proven to be just as successful and prolific in the 2000s as they were in the 90s. Mid-2000 saw the release of "MWNG" an album of songs sung entirely in Welsh.

In 2001, they released the album "Rings around the World." The album was their first released on a major label. Because it was released on a major, it allowed Super Furry Animals to reach an even wider audience. They had a few minor hits with songs such as "It's not the End of the World?" "Juxtapozed with U," and the title track.

2003 was the year when "Phantom Power," Super Furry Animals' sixth album was released. The album showed the group settling down a little. Instead of their usual exuberant sonic assault, many of the songs were more solemn and somber. This was due in large part to the political tone the album had. Through its fourteen tracks, the Animals' managed to tackle the Sept. 11, 2001 tragedies, the Bush White House, and their illegitimate war.

Just recently Super Furry Animals released "Songbook Volume1," a singles collection that compiles all singles as well as rare non-album tracks such as "The Man don't Give a ----." Also, many of their albums have been re-released with bonus CDs included. Now is a better time than ever to get yourself acquainted with the wild and wonderful world of Super Furry Animals.

College dating scene limited for homosexuals

LACEY STORER

I have spent many a column exploring various aspects of dating life at K-State. From shacking to breakups to getting it on, I've touched on a little bit of everything of what it's like to date at K-State.

Except what it's like to date at K-State when you are gay. What exactly is the gay dating scene like at K-State?

"There's not much of one," is what Jason, one of the guys I interviewed, said. This was pretty much the sentiment I got all around. It makes sense, as only a small percentage of the nation's population is gay, and not all of them are attending K-State.

My classmate Maggie gave me this example. If you are straight, you have almost 50 percent of the population to choose from. Usually, three-fourths of these people are considered undateable, which leaves you with a small pool to choose from.

The same applies to homosexuals, Maggie said, except they start out with only 5 percent of the population, she estimated. Pickings are kind of slim.

Besides lacking a sizeable gay population, Manhattan also lacks any particular place for them to go and mingle, like larger cities offer. Whereas most straight students head for Aggieville in hopes of finding some romance, or at least some action, gay people have to search a bit harder.

Rock-a-Belly Deli seems to be the unofficial gay bar in Manhattan. Both Jason and my friend Jamie said they and their friends go there some nights.

As for the club scene, Maggie often heads to the club Xcalibur in Junction City. Jason said he and his friends go to Lawrence to a club that has Alternative Lifestyle Night every Wednesday night.

For Maggie, the bars don't hold much appeal because many straight females have no problem kissing other women.

"There are plenty of girls that are curious, but finding somebody who is actually a lesbian is difficult," Maggie said.

"It's frustrating to kiss a girl and then have her look around to see how many guys were watching."

An important factor of dating when you are gay is having gay friends. Your gay friends introduce you to their gay friend, and then you have an entire network of gay people to hang out and hook up with.

Jamie said a lot of hooking up happens at parties, where it's known that everyone else is gay.

And while most straight couples never have to worry about feeling safe because of who they are dating, it is a concern for some gay people.

All three said they feel relatively safe and comfortable being gay in a conservative atmosphere. Maggie said she's been yelled at a few times, but said that doesn't happen too often.

From what I gathered in this brief overview of gay dating at K-State, the biggest difference is the limited options there are. I don't think I will ever again complain that there are no guys to meet or no places to meet them.

Ban on silicone breast implants may be lifted

By Lauran Neergaard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – In a surprising turnaround, federal health advisers Wednesday recommended allowing silicone-gel breast implants to return to the U.S. market after a 13-year ban on most uses of the devices – but only under strict conditions that will limit how easily women can get them.

Mentor Corp. persuaded advisers to the Food and Drug Administration that its newer silicone implants are reasonably safe and more durable than older versions. The 7-2 vote came just one day after a rival manufacturer, Inamed Corp., failed to satisfy lingering concerns about how often the implants break apart and leak inside women's bodies.

FDA's advisers said Wednesday that Mentor had performed more convincing research that the implants only rarely break in the first few years after they're inserted – about 1.4 percent over three years – and showed some evidence that they may last as long as 10 years.

But they stressed that sales should resume only if Mentor meets some strict conditions:

– Prospective patients must sign consent forms acknowledging implant risks, including that they ultimately may break and require removal or replacement.

– Mentor may sell silicone implants only to board-certified plastic surgeons who complete special hands-on training to insert implants in a way that minimizes odds of breakage.

– Mentor must open a registry to track how patients fare long-term, and continue more formal studies to nail down how often implants rupture within 10 years, something no one yet knows.

Because implant breaks don't cause immediate symptoms, patients should get an MRI scan five years after their implant is inserted and every two years.

They should consider having broken implants removed to minimize risk of silicone oozing into the breast, or beyond.

"We are holding it to higher standards than other implants," said FDA adviser Stephen Li, a Florida medical device-testing expert. "This device has a 30-year history that, at best, is checkered. Given that history, it behooves us to have a higher standard."

"Patients can determine whether or not for them it is worth it to have a device that might need to be replaced within a 10-year period of time," added Dr. Marilyn Leitch, a cancer surgeon at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center who also supported Mentor sales.

Women must understand that Mentor's best research has tracked implant recipients for only three years so far, said New York dermatologist Dr. Amy Newburger, who opposed allowing widespread sales.

"I don't have the assurance that it's safe," Newburger said.

Sharon wants Bush to threaten Iran

By Anne Gearan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The Bush administration said Wednesday it is committed to diplomacy as the best way to stop Iran from developing a nuclear weapon and sought to play down differences with Israel over the urgency of the threat from Tehran.

Israel's prime minister, Ariel Sharon, had made a case for tougher international measures to thwart Iran when he met on Monday with President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney at Bush's Texas ranch.

Sharon pressed Bush to threaten Iran with penalties, an approach that Bush favored until recently.

As part of Bush's second-term effort to repair ties with European allies, the White House agreed last month to support arms control negotiations that three European countries have begun with Iran. Those talks have not moved quickly, and Sharon argued that European negotiators may be softening their stance.

"We want to see this resolved through the diplomatic efforts of the Europeans. We want to see it resolved in a peaceful way," White House press secretary Scott McClellan said Wednesday.

McClellan gave no indication that Bush was swayed by a presentation from Sharon and his chief military adviser, who brought along Israeli intelligence documents on Iran's nuclear reactor program.

The Israelis argued that Iran is nearing a "point of no return" in developing a weapon that could be used against its declared enemy Israel, U.S. and Israeli officials said afterward.

In an interview with CNN on Wednesday, Sharon said Iran was years away from possessing a nuclear weapon, but only months away from overcoming "technical problems" in building one.

"Once they will solve it, that will be the point of no return," he said.

That is a darker assessment of Iran's capabilities than U.S. officials have offered publicly.

"Our intelligence community has used in the past an estimate that said that Iran was not likely to acquire a nuclear weapon before the beginning of the next decade. That remains the case," State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said Wednesday.

Rudolph pleads guilty in Olympic bombing

By Kristen Wyatt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA – In the end, Eric Rudolph proclaimed himself willing to take the lives of others in his personal war on abortion – but he was not willing to sacrifice his own life.

Bargaining away his freedom in order to escape the death penalty, Rudolph pleaded guilty Wednesday to bombing the 1996 Atlanta Olympics and carrying out three other attacks on abortion clinics and a gay nightclub across the South.

He issued a statement laced with Bible verses to justify bombs packed with roofing nails and screws, saying the attacks were eye-for-an-eye retribution for a society and a government that sanctioned abortion.

"Because I believe that abortion is murder, I also believe that force is justified ... in an attempt to stop it," Rudolph wrote in the rambling statement handed out after he entered his pleas in back-to-back court appearances, first in Birmingham, Ala., then in Atlanta.

In return for his guilty plea – and for revealing where he buried a cache of explosives – the 38-year-old Rudolph will get four consecutive life sentences without parole for the four blasts that killed two people and wounded more than 120.

While victims and their survivors got some answers as to why they were targeted, they heard little remorse, and a lot of defiance.

In the Atlanta courtroom, he sat stone-faced and answered questions calmly and politely. But in Birmingham, he winked toward prosecutors as he entered court, said the government could "just barely" prove its case, and admitted his guilt with a hint of pride in his voice.

With his head tilted back, Rudolph looked down his nose slightly as U.S. District Judge Lynwood Smith in Birmingham asked whether he set off a 1998 blast at an abortion clinic there that killed an off-duty police officer and maimed a nurse.

"I certainly did, your honor," Rudolph said.

Emily Lyons, who lost an eye – and nearly her life – in the clinic attack, wept and said she was almost physically ill as she watched in court from her front-row seat.

"He just sounded so proud of it. That's what really hurt," she said.

In his statement, Rudolph said the purpose of the attack on the Olympics "was to confound, anger and embarrass the Washington government in the eyes of the world for its abominable sanctioning of abortion on demand."

meant to include landlord ratings, but doesn't.

"In retrospect, it's not what we wanted it to be," Urkevich said. "It's a great start, though."

Also part of their platform was online teacher and course evaluations, which would be part of WIN. This, however, has not been accomplished.

"Even though that isn't a goal we accomplished, we still set a platform for it," Urkevich said.

Burns and Groene also had it as part of their platform.

Lastly, they wanted to have a Targeted Diversity Initiative program, which became reality with the Diversity in Action Conference March 11.

Both said there was teamwork involved in making the event happen and gave a lot of credit to their cabinet.

"It was definitely a collaboration," she said.

Urkevich said she was excited the conference actually happened and how it turned out.

"We didn't care if we got our platform issue accomplished," she said. "It was just really, really awesome that it happened."

Urkevich and Ankrom were elected March 10, 2003. They won by three votes over Vicki Conner and Jeremy Sandall.

"That's so weird," Urkevich said quietly. "That was just a testament to the candidates. Clearly both sets had something to offer."

Today is their last official day as student body president and vice president. Tonight Burns and Groene will take over.

Burns said he and Groene are as ready as they can be, and going over their duties with the pair helped.

"We both really look up to Hayley and Erik," Burns said.

Both Urkevich and Ankrom graduate this semester and have been cleaning out their desks this week. They're even cleaning out what was left behind by other presidents.

"Some files that were here 10 years ago are not necessarily relevant today," she said.

This will be the second time Burns is taking Urkevich's place. This year, Burns served as the Privilege Fee chair, the position Urkevich held the year before.

After graduation, Ankrom is going to begin working as a systems analyst for Cerner Corporation, a healthcare technology company based in Kansas City, Mo.

He said he'd do it again.

"It paid off, no regrets," Ankrom said.

Urkevich is going to law school at either the University of Pennsylvania or the University of Texas. After law school, she said she was unsure, but was considering either a career in business or politics.

"I really think you can affect change – real change, for real people," she said. "I like that idea."

As for now, both are ready to have the last month of school off.

"It's kind of bittersweet," Urkevich said. "It'll be nice to have about a month left in my senior year to have some time to myself."

presidential primaries, and candidates for the general election can place materials around campus 5 p.m. the Tuesday prior to the election.

Currently, all candidates can place material around campus on the Sunday before the informational meetings.

Another item of importance added to the regulations states all campaigning that is disorderly, lewd or indecent is prohibited.

McCandless said there were some campaigning that was disorderly, lewd or indecent this year.

"It's just a response to some of the things we've had go on this year," he said. "When someone's campaign materials make people recoil with shock or disgust it is probably something we don't want associated with our election process."

Also, senate will turnover tonight.

The new student body president, vice president and senators will be sworn in and meet for the first time.

Michael Burns, president-elect, said the only business they will be conducting is nominating people for senate chair. Then, it will be decided on next week.

Burns said he and Grant Groene, incoming vice president, met with Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom, outgoing president and vice president, to review what's expected of them.

FOOTY | New sport comparable to soccer, rugby

Stampbach has already made progress by establishing a small coalition of footy players at K-State. He currently has about 12 or 13 guys he's been teaching the techniques of the game. Still, Stampbach said, he wants more.

"It's very easy to add a new team to the league," he said. "I've got contacts all over the U.S. You eventually travel and compete, and it becomes a great social activity.

"I've played almost every sport under the sun, and not only is footy the most fun, it also has the most camaraderie."

What exactly is footy, one might be asking? Well, it's played with a ball that is a combination of a football and rugby ball. In order to distribute the ball, a player can either kick or hand-pass (punch) the ball. There are goals at either end of the field that the ball must be kicked in to. If a player kicks the ball into the center goal, the team earns six points. However, if a player misses the center goal and kicks the ball into either aligning goal, the team earns one point.

Footy is most comparable to soccer, in that the game is constantly moving in a 360-degree motion, Stampbach said.

"Footy is soccer with hands and tackling," Stampbach said. "And there's no offsides. Since it is a full contact sport with no pads, it is similar to rugby. However, the tackling is more controlled than rugby."

Matt Greenstein, freshman in finance, said he believes footy will attract many former football players.

"Anybody who played football in high school will love this sport," Greenstein said. "It's great because you get to hit people – I think it will attract a following at K-State."

Stampbach said he hopes the demonstration and practice this weekend makes a good impression on the students of K-State.

"Even if you come out for just 10 minutes, that's great," Stampbach said. "All you need is cleats and clothes you would work out in."

TAXES | Extensions available for late tax filings

Students can also fill out an extension form and mail it before Friday or have an accountant e-file it for them.

Extensions are granted by the Internal Revenue Service to anyone who files for one on time and gives them an extra six months to file their taxes.

While an extension gives additional time to file a tax return, any money is to be paid by Friday.

Parker said there is an interest penalty for failure to pay taxes on time. There is also a penalty for failure to file taxes or file for an extension.

Daraiyu Arata, attorney and pre-law adviser, said students sometimes think they don't have to file their taxes and sometimes they aren't required by law to file.

If they do file, they'll get the money back that was withheld from their employer, she said.

"If they don't file, the money will just sit in the treasury with the IRS," Arata said.

"If students don't have a clue about their taxes, they should check with their parents and parents' accountants in regards to a W2 for part-time jobs," Parker said.

New law would give loan breaks

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students in engineering, mathematics and science may save money, just by choosing to work within their major after college.

A bill introduced to the House on Tuesday will forgive interest on undergraduate student loans for math, science and engineering majors who spend five years in their profession after graduation.

Rep. Frank Wolf, R-Va., and Rep. Vernon J. Ehlers, R-Mich., sponsored the bill in an effort to increase the number of people pursuing careers in the fields of engineering, mathematics and science.

However, not all students who graduate with a degree in science,

16 drug warrants executed

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Law enforcement officials have been investigating drug activity in northeast Kansas for months, which led to the issue and execution of 16 warrants Thursday morning.

The Riley County Police Department worked in conjunction with the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, Kansas Attorney General's Office, Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Office, Riley County Attorney's Office and Pottawatomie County Attorney's Office, investigating illegal drug trafficking in Riley, Pottawatomie and Ford counties as well as Jackson County, Mo.

Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline said the warrants are all related and possibly linked to gang activity. Officials executed the warrants without incident.

"The execution of the arrests is an indication of the collaboration of different agencies," Kline said.

Thus far, officials have confiscated cocaine, marijuana, large amounts of cash, weapons and pain medications investigators believe were obtained illegally.

Symbolic destruction of discriminatory words promotes campus unity

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Writing on the Wall was torn down in the culmination of "End Discrimination Week" on the Haymaker/Moore lawn.

The Wall, which was sponsored by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls and the Student Governing Association's Diversity Programming Council, was built last weekend, and people were free to paint words of hate on the wall starting Monday. Volunteers were guarding the wall 24 hours a day because of safety reasons, Tiffany Happer, senior in architectural engineering, said.

There were two speakers that shared their experiences with hate and discrimination.

Peter Wetzel, sophomore in elementary education, said to fight hate, quoting Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in his speech.

"To fight hate, we have to know hate," he said.

Words, as well as actions, are capable of inducing hate.

"Words are powerful. Not unused. They are still said," he said.

Discrimination and hate, however, don't have to happen.

"It's important for people to see that oppression doesn't have to exist, and we can do something about it," he said.

The other speaker, Candi Hironaka, associate director of educational administration, is third-generation Japanese. She said walls do not help with eliminating hate.

"Walls are built to keep something out and also to keep something in," she said. "You walk around that wall and everyone can see words directed at you."

However, the wall is a "visual projection" of hate.

"We hear words and they are gone for some. But by seeing words, it can be more hurtful," she said.

Hironaka, who teaches leadership in practice, said relationships with others can help with discrimination.

"Leadership is about relationships with others. If leaders aren't stepping up, progress won't be made," she said.

Burns, Groene sworn in; new Student Senate convenes

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the final meeting for the 2004-05 Student Senate and the first for the 2005-06 Senate.

Michael Burns and Grant Groene, along with newly elected senators, were sworn in Thursday.

The new Senate nominated candidates for Senate chair. Tyson Moore, vice chair; Matt King, chair of the governmental relations committee; and Ashley Boldt, intern coordinator, were nominated for the position. Senate will vote at next week's meeting.

Before the newly elected Senate met, former senators met.

The main topic of discussion was the Center for Student Activities Referendum, which students will vote on April 26.

If passed, the referendum will reallocate $10.27 of student fees that went toward funding the expansion of Hale Library. The reallocation will help fund an addition to the K-State Student Union.

The referendum will not increase student fees, but the fees will continue until as late as 2025. If the referendum fails, students will pay until the bond expires in 2015.

CSA would house Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, Student Governing Association and Union Program Council.

Work, conference and lounge rooms will be available for all students. The center would cost $6.5 million. Student fees would fund $4.5 million and $2 million will be raised by the administration.

Hayley Urkevich, former student body president, said this is great opportunity since fees won't increase.

"We really are at a unique situation to sort of leave this as our legacy," Urkevich said.

Senator Shiloh Dutton said it wasn't Senate's place to take a stance on the issue.

"It is not the position of a legislative body who already passed this referendum to take a stance on it. I think it's improper," Dutton said.

Students compete for Greek Idol

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was like the real American Idol, without the harsh criticism of Simon Cowell.

K-State fraternities and sororities gathered in City Park Thursday to watch their fellow chapter members perform for the third annual Greek Idol.

"This was a good chance for greek students to get together and show their talents," Kate Newman, Greek Idol coordinator and member of Chi Omega, said.

To organize Greek Idol, Newman said she contacted Greek Week representatives from each chapter to find members to participate in Greek Idol. From that, everything just came together.

Kristen Seiwert, freshman in public relations, won the vocal category as well as the entire event with her performance of "Sin Wagon" by the Dixie Chicks.

"It went really well," Seiwert said. "I was scared about the dance sequence, but everything turned out fine."

Seiwert, a member of Gamma Phi Beta sorority, said the intensity of the crowd helped her performance.

"The song is all about energy," she said. "I had a fan club out there. Some of the girls in my sorority had signs up and everything."

While the choosing the song to perform can be challenging, Sadie Crawford, member of Pi Beta Phi sorority, said she got her song by chance.

"It was on the radio when they called and asked me to perform," she said.

Crawford sang "Son of a Preacher Man" by Dusty Springfield.

Josey Heller, member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, won the women's instrumental and vocal category with "Sunshine and Rain", which she wrote with her sister.

The winner of the men's instrumental and vocal category were Mikey Needleman and Justin Briggs, both of Sigma Nu fraternity. EWB, which lead singer John Bostwick said is not a real band, won the group category. The members of EWB are in Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Blockbuster reaches settlement with states

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Blockbuster Video patrons will be seeing some changes in the chain's "No Late Fee" advertising program in the coming months.

Blockbuster, Inc. recently reached a settlement with 46 state attorneys general, including Kansas' Phill Kline, who said the company's advertising campaign misled consumers.

"The End of Late Fees" program began January 1.

Under the new regulations, customers have a 7-day grace period to return a rented movie or game after its initial due date. If the product is not returned by this time, the rental is automatically converted into a sale, and Blockbuster will charge the member's account or credit card the selling price.

If the product is returned within 30 days of the sale, the price will be credited back to the customer, minus a restocking fee paid to the store.

The attorneys general alleged that Blockbuster's advertisements did not clearly state that renters would be charged for an item if it was not returned within the one-week grace period.

As a result, many consumers thought they could keep their rentals as long as they liked without a fee.

Kline said in a news release distributed by his office that consumers should not be faced with deceptive advertising.

"This case is important because it reminds advertisers that they cannot use a catchy slogan or phrase if that slogan is misleading," he said in a statement.

"This case is important because it reminds advertisers that they cannot use a catchy slogan or phrase if that slogan or phrase is misleading."

Phill Kline
KANSAS ATTORNEY GENERAL

"Slogans can be misleading and violate the law if they do not fully and accurately describe the complete terms and conditions attached to the offer."

A manager at Manhattan's Blockbuster Video, located on Westport Drive, declined to comment, but said pamphlets explaining the policy are available inside the store.

Under the settlement, Blockbuster, Inc. will pay $630,000 in state attorneys fees and full refunds to customers who were unaware that their rentals would be converted into sales.

The company must also provide conspicuous signs and brochures in each store to display its policy for returning rentals.

Blockbuster agreed to the settlement without any admission of wrongdoing.

Sara Patterson, freshman in kinesiology, said she will appreciate the clarification of the store's new policy.

"I think it's really confusing," she said. "It seems like every time I go there, they have new rules."

Post office to remain open late; taxes due tonight

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Today is Tax Day, and the post office is open late.

Manhattan Post Office, located at 500 Leavenworth St., will be open for regular business hours from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The latest it will accept mail to be postmarked as April 15 is 5:45 p.m.

Erica Koch, tax associate, said H & R Block will be open from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. They will also be taking walk-in appointments for tax help all day.

The International Revenue Service's Web site gives some tips for mailing off tax forms.

- Make sure everything is complete.
- Make sure the return is signed.
- Give a daytime phone number.
- Attach a copt of your W-2, W-2G or 2439 form to front of the form and attach Form 1099-R if federal taxes were withheld.
- Use coded envelope. If you do not have the envelope, go to www.irs.gov and click on the "Where Do You File?" section.
- If you owe taxes, make a check or money order payable to the United States Treasury and write your name, address, Social Security number, daytime telephone number and form number on it. Do not staple payment to the return.

TO THE POINT

Consumers need to protect themselves

Blockbuster promised its customers an end to late fees and the "start of more." That's exactly what Blockbuster is providing – more fees.

Consumers should protect themselves when buying into a good sales slogan.

The recent lawsuit against Blockbuster Inc. brought to light just how many people neglected to read the fine print when Blockbuster introduced its rental policy at the start of the year.

The lawsuit was backed by 46 states, including Kansas, and said the slogan was misleading and a false advertisement.

Consumers were keeping rentals for longer periods of time, believing they were free from late fees. However, they did not realize Blockbuster had the ability to turn their rental into a sales transaction and then later charge a restocking fee when the movie is returned.

The company should fully and clearly explain policy changes. A brochure next to cashiers counter does not fully ensure that the customer will read it. Continually running an ad claiming "the end of late fees" but not informing the consumers about new restocking fees is deceptive.

Although Blockbuster now must actually inform customers about the policy through conspicuous signs and brochures in response to the lawsuit, it is still vital for consumers to know all the terms and conditions.

Just remember, if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

GEEK WEEK

Spy vs. Spy

Bond the original super-spy; spoof agents just don't compare

Recently, one of my close friends called me and said "Gorney, I just got the new 'Scene It' game – James Bond edition. Let's go play it." It turned out to be an awesome game, testing my knowledge of the Bond films and almost shattering my over-inflated ego.

MATT GORNEY

I tend to become frustrated when I miss a question with an easy answer.

When originally assigned this column, my first thought was, "How do I write a column?" – this being my first column ever. My second thought was, "Who is Derek Flint?"

I did some research and learned that Flint is just Austin Powers without the time travel. One Web site went as far as to say that the sexist attitudes in the Flint movies would make even the time-traveling international man of mystery blush.

Attitudes aside, we are still left with an Americanized version of 007 who is, at best, barely fit to stand in Bond's shadow.

Don't get me wrong – Derek Flint is a great agent. He is so good that in his first movie, "Our Man Flint," the leaders of the intelligence world call on him to save their collective butts.

He is so good that his bosses wait until their other agents are killed to call him in. It is then his job to stop the evil group of scientists trying to take over the world...by taking control of the weather.

James Bond is the original super-spy; nothing is going to change that. In addition, the Bond franchise has produced 20 official movies with five different actors in the leading role, survived the fall of the Berlin Wall and the 20 movies combined have made $1,217,223,288 at the box office.

Going even further than his suave personality, hardened exterior and the ability to bed any girl he wants: Bond has the most useful gadgets anyone could want.

Who wouldn't want an invisible car? Parking would be a breeze because tickets can't be issued to a car that can't be seen. Also, wheel locks and towing would be difficult. What about a phone that can control a car, scan fingerprints, has its own electrical-defense system, can pick locks and make long-distance phone calls?

To truly judge a super-spy, look at the villains that they face. Throughout many of the early Bond flicks, our hero had to face down S.P.E.C.T.R.E., a truly devious organization with evil agents stationed around the world.

These agents secretly planned ways to really screw things up, such as laser satellites and igniting the Cold War by capturing space capsules.

All Flint had to deal with was a crazy group of scientists who wanted to control the weather, and he only had to face them once.

In his second adventure, Flint stopped a group of women from brainwashing the citizens of the world through their beauty salons. Scary. Yeah, right. That is definitely more realistic than an insane media baron trying to start a war just to grab headlines or a lunatic trying to flood Silicon Valley and cripple the electronics industry. James Bond, of course, defeated both.

The only way to solve this debate would be to pit both Flint and Bond in a fight and see who wins, but nobody has even heard from Flint for more than 30 years. He probably wouldn't even have the gadgets to show up.

You know you can count on Bond. He'll be there in a pressed suit with a shaken martini in one hand and Flint's girl on his arm.

Derek Flint, 1960s spy spoof, more suave than Bond himself

James Bond.

So suave, so genteel. The original metrosexual.

But I would like to dethrone him from his current post as ultimate global super-spy, and replace him.

ABBY HILES

That's right, forget 007. Let's bring in his predecessor – the fabulous, infamous, and masculine Derek Flint.

Right now, minds are reeling: Who the hell is Derek Flint?

Flint is the quintessential man of mystery. The man's man, ladies' man, man about town...oh, who am I kidding, man about the globe.

So to make this easier for you Bond freaks out there, let me break down exactly why Flint is better.

CHICKS

Let's face it: every beautiful woman in history was a Stepford Bond girl. They are dispensable in nature, never repeated in a movie and basically just a way for Bond to get laid by the end of the feature.

Bond girls have often been considered empowered or feminist in nature. And I'm sure there is some evidence to support that.

That is until you meet Flint's four lovely multi-national femmes fatales. In each Flint flick, his posse delivers the most kick-ass women in spydom. They protect him, give him a quick shave and at night complete the menage-cinq in Flint's gorgeous 1960s Mod loft.

Granted, they too are sexual beings in Flint's world, but then again, everyone is susceptible to his charms.

GADGETRY

Bond had Q to solve all of his problems.

If he needed a powerful explosion, Q was there to give him a ball point pen that – when clicked three times – equaled a bomb. Q was the brains behind the entire operation. And Bond willingly accepted his role as Q's plaything and let him create what he wanted, always trustworthy of handed down gadgets, never creating any of his own.

Flint, however, wouldn't trust a governmental agency to come up with his gadgets. Oh, no. Instead, Flint creates his own, including a cigarette lighter that contains 82 death-dealing devices.

Perhaps Flint's most amazing gadget would be his heart-restarter. Especially since to prepare for really extreme circumstances, Flint likes to stop his heart for hours at a time to get ready.

THE MAN WHO PORTRAYS THE LEGEND

Throughout movie making, there have been a record five men who have portrayed Bond, ranging from Sean Connery (by far the best Bond) to Pierce Brosnan. In order to keep this fire alive, they keep reinventing him and – in a way – killing his true essence.

Flint, however, has only been brought to life in two movies and by one man: James Coburn.

Oh, sure you probably know him as the Commodore from "Maverick," but back in his day, James Coburn was one of the sexiest men alive. And if the Flint movies "Our Man Flint" (1966) and "In Like Flint" (1967) don't convince you of that, try renting "The Great Escape." He plays an amazingly brilliant Aussie and steals hearts.

I'm not asking Bond lovers to give up on their hero. His character spans decades and is still being kept alive today.

But in the true essence of Geek Week, I wanted to show you another amazing spy who's own spoof of Bond has created the likes of the recently beloved and spoof-tastic Austin Powers.

Flint's charm, women and gadgets all make him a far better '60s spy to aspire to be. And besides, he's American. What more can we want?

Abby Hiles and James Coburn have retired to Bora Bora. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

I'd like to thank myself for helping myself move my car off of Platt Street this morning. And by the way, I'm really cute.

I called in earlier about the bisexual dilemma in a fraternity. That wasn't a joke, and it's not bashing. I'm actually in a fraternity, and I want to know what to do.

Sorority girls remind me of Stewart off of "Mad TV": Look what I can do!, look what I can do!

It's Wednesday night, and I'm sitting in the parking lot of Wal-Mart scoping out guys. Oh, I love college.

I knew my girlfriend was a nympho, but I just found out she has Tourettes, too.

Happy 21st, Mark.

Hey, the faculty can start emptying their own trash cans and maintaining their own buildings with their 11 percent raise. The classified employees haven't got one in five years.

To the blond in the gold and black convertible: you're so hot. Will you go out with me?

I kept trying to take a picture of one of the Dillons twins, but the bush kept getting in the way. Get it? The bush!

To the bisexual fraternity guy that called in: come to QSA sometime. I'd love to meet you. We can go out for coffee.

This is ridiculous. Gas is $2.19, and I'm actually excited about it.

Game Guy to sell collectibles

Games, videos available at auction

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Game Guy is saying its final goodbye this weekend.

There will be an auction at 10 a.m. Saturday to sell all of its games, videos, DVDs, music and other collectibles.

The store had been located in Aggieville, but on May 17, 2004, its roof collapsed after high winds caused a wall from a construction site next door to fall.

Tom Mahoney, owner of Game Guy, said they thought about reopening, but decided against it.

"The best place for a retailer like myself is to be in Aggieville, and there weren't any open locations," Mahoney said. "Also, the game market right now is pretty saturated."

Game Guy was open for about 10 years. It bought and sold used games, videos, DVD's and music.

Although Mahoney said he's sad to see everything go, he's ready to move on and let his former customers get a good deal.

Wiping down a Mario sign, former Game Guy owner Tom Mahoney prepares for his auction, which will be 10 a.m. Saturday. The auction will contain leftover merchandise, store fixtures, display, collectible items and other memorabilia.

Joslyn Brown
COLLEGIAN

Mahoney said he's not sure what he'll do next, but doesn't think he'll open a similar store.

"I'm keeping my options open," he said. "I'm more of an innovator than a follower."

Vern Gannon, auctioneer with Gannon Auctions, said if students want to come to the auction, they will just need to get a number, and then they can bid by raising their number.

"It is kind of an interesting auction for that age group," Gannon said. "It'll be a fun day."

Burns to focus on tuition

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael Burns is looking toward the future and sees a change in the tuition program.

Burns, incoming student body president and senior in agriculture education, is proposing a tuition program in which the tuition rate would be constant throughout students' undergraduate years. The plan, which would average the tuition and charge a flat rate all four years, has been put into place at other universities across the country.

The University of Colorado, the University of Illinois and the University of Kansas are just a few universities who have put a tuition program in place or are looking at similar proposals.

Burns said he is looking at the program to benefit the students.

"I think the students who have been here three to five years have seen a rise in the tuition," he said. "This will give new students the knowledge of the costs before they get to K-State."

Did you know?

Fixed tuition contracts

- Fixed tuition contracts
- Pay tuition at beginning of the year
- Tuition will be on per-hour basis
- Cost per hour will remain same every year

Burns said the fixed rate would encourage students to remain at K-State.

Sue Davis, director of communications and resources at Southern Illinois University, said SIU has had a similar plan for over 10 years.

SIU's plan was a "projected tuition plan" in which the students had a two-year fixed tuition, and two years where the tuition was estimated, Davis said.

In fall 2004, all public universities in the state of Illinois had to move to a fixed-tuition plan after following enactment of a new law.

Davis said the important thing is to inform students of the costs of college.

"They will have some idea of what they will be paying," she said.

Lex Tate, associate director for university relations at University of Illinois-Urbana-Champaign, said financial planning was a big reason for the legislature signing it to law.

"Predictability is appealing to the state legislature and the universities, so we got in line behind it," Tate said.

While the law benefits smaller universities, Tate said IU didn't need the marketing.

Burns said while they cannot promise students a rate at this time, the president, vice-president, and their cabinet will work to draft a proposal to present to the university.

The most likely year for the tuition draft will be fall 2007, Burns said.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the university would be prepared to consider what the program has to offer.

Rawson said the program is just a different way of pricing, but it has a disadvantage.

"It would be challenging for the administration to track the students and their tuition costs," he said.

Geology professor returns to his roots

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A professor of geology will be returning to his geography roots when he takes over as head of the Department of Geography this summer.

Richard Marston, sun chair professor of geology at Oklahoma State University, has been named the new head of the geography department, following the decision of current director John A. Harrington Jr. to return to teaching full-time.

A national search led the College of Arts and Sciences to nationally and internationally recognized geographer and researcher Marston.

"He has tremendous credentials," said Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. "He has an outstanding recognition in terms of his research accomplishments."

Marston earned his undergraduate degree from the University of California Los Angeles in 1974 and a doctorate from Oregon State University in 1980.

Marston's goals for the geography department include expanding the Geographic Information Systems Spatial Analysis Laboratory to serve the entire campus, helping faculty succeed, remembering that students come first, he said.

"Being a department head is probably the most challenging job on campus," Marston said.

Marston said he is excited about K-State because of its productive faculty and research grants.

"I'm thrilled to be coming up there," he said. "The department is on the rise."

Marston is also the incoming president of the Association of American Geographers and editor of the Journal of Geomorphology, Provost Duane Nellis said.

"The faculty and students that interviewed him felt he had excellent leadership skills, he's nationally and internationally recognized in his area and that he would bring a new and exciting perspective to Kansas State University and the geography program," Nellis said.

MEN'S GOLF

Golfers to finish regular season this weekend

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a couple days off to work on their games, members of the K-State men's golf team are hoping to end their regular season in fine fashion April 16-17 at the FirstEnergy Intercollegiate in Akron, Ohio.

"We keep getting stuck in tournaments," Coach Tim Norris said. "It's easy to go back to your old habits – we've had a few days to work on things again."

Although the Wildcats have yet to play the 72-par Firestone Country Club North Course, Norris said he is optimistic about his players' ability to perform.

"I've heard about this course and that it yields low scores," Norris said. "The weather's supposed to be good, so this will be a good opportunity to see what our guys can do."

In the 15-team field, Norris said he expects Pennsylvania State, Arizona and Toledo to put up a solid fight. At the same time, Norris said, K-State's greatest competitors are always themselves.

"Penn State and Arizona made it to the finals last year," Norris said. "And you can't rule out Toledo with its home-course advantage.

"If we play up to our potential, though, we'll be alright."

Coach Norris and the Wildcats, ranked No. 64 in the nation by GolfStat, have opted to switch the lineup around for this weekend's tournament.

While seniors Matt Van Cleave and Nick Schumacher and junior Ben Kern are consistent faces in the lineup, Norris chose to substitute junior Jonathan James and freshman Kyle Yonke for junior Tyler Cummins and freshman Clay Hodge for the tournament this weekend.

"Jonathan and Kyle have been right there for us all spring," Norris said. "We're going to let Clay and Tyler have a break. Any four of those guys are capable players."

James said despite issues with his swing, he is excited for the tournament and ready for the challenge.

"I'm just going to relax," James said. "I've had a problem getting comfortable with my swing. I just need to calm down and trust what I am doing."

Van Cleave said he is confident the Wildcats can regain their composure this weekend.

"I think after last weekend (at the ASU Thunderbird Invitational), everyone's just ready to go out there and give it another shot," Van Cleave said.

The Wildcats tee off at 7:30 a.m. on Saturday.

Cats' coach stays busy with recruitment during off-season

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It has been more than a month since the end of the season, but this is far from a time of relaxation for K-State men's basketball head coach Jim Wooldridge.

With three scholarships left to fill, an opening at the associate head coach position and the task of improving the returning players from a squad that went 17-12 in 2004-05, Wooldridge has little time to rest.

It was a season in which Wooldridge's future with the team was under constant scrutiny, but Director of Athletics Tim Weiser opted to retain Wooldridge for a sixth season.

Thursday afternoon, Wooldridge spoke with the Collegian about the offseason.

When the spring signing period opened Wednesday, there was no announcement from K-State. There have been no signings at the post position, where the Wildcats lost seniors Jeremiah Massey, Justin Williams and Travis Canby, as well as junior Marques Hayden, who left the team in February and announced he is transferring to Washburn.

But don't fear, Wooldridge tells Wildcat fans. He said basketball recruiting, which has a fall and spring signing period, is a much different animal than football recruiting, which

TRACK AND FIELD

Cats divide team for tourneys

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will divide its track and field team for the third time in four weekends and will travel more than 5,000 miles in three days this weekend.

Wildcat athletes will journey to compete at the Audrey Walton Combined Events in Columbia, Mo., the Mt. SAC Relays in Walnut, Calif., and the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz.

"We are kind of all over this weekend," K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

The Audrey Walton Combined Events will be the site of the first-ever female decathlon in the United States, where the Wildcats will send junior Breanna Eveland, sophomore Lindsay Grigoriev and assistant coach Austra Skujyte to compete.

Skujyte captured the silver medal in the heptathlon for Lithuania at the 2004 Olympics in Athens, Greece, and she won two NCAA heptathlon championships.

Eveland, who received a second consecutive Big 12 Female Athlete of the Week honor for winning the pole vault at the Texas Relays last Saturday in Austin, Texas, said she is nervous about competing in her first decathlon.

"I just hope to finish it," Eveland said. "It is kind of scary because it is my first one ever. Ten events is kind of a lot for me, but hopefully I will do well."

The Wildcats will send most of their sprinters, distance runners and throwers to Walnut, Calif., for the Mt. SAC Relays.

"Mt. SAC is one of the best meets in the country throughout the year for the middle-distance and distance events," Rovelto said.

K-State junior middle-distance runner Christian Smith will compete in the 1,500-meter run on Friday and the 800-meter run on Sunday.

"I think both the races will be great opportunities to run fast," the three-time NCAA All-American said. "I am really looking forward to both of them."

Smith, who finished 24th out of 117 finishers in the 1,500-meter run at the 2004 Mt. SAC Relays, said the competition was better than he expected.

"Last year, I underestimated how good everyone was going to be," he said. "Hopefully this year, I won't do that. Every single race will have multiple people who will run fast, and you have to be prepared to run with them or get beat."

Smith last raced on March 26, and he said he has enjoyed his time off.

"The last couple weekends have been pretty nice and relaxing," he said. "The training has been really hard because I have picked up the mileage a little bit, but since I have not raced in a while."

Tempe, Ariz., is the third destination of Wildcat athletes, where a number of K-State jumpers will compete at the Sun Angel Classic on Sunday, including senior Chaytan Hill, sophomore Candice Mills and junior Kyle Lancaster.

Hill, who finished second at last Saturday's Texas Relays in Austin, Texas, said the traveling has started to take its toll.

"It is not so much tiring," Hill said. "It just takes a toll because of missing classes and trying to catch up while you are also trying to train hard. It gets kind of overwhelming at times, but we make it through."

Pitching staff changes mistake by Braves' manager

MATTHEW GIRARD

I'm usually not one to criticize or question Atlanta Braves manager Bobby Cox.

The man has led the Braves to 13 consecutive National League East championships, five World Series appearances and a World Series title in 1995.

He is arguably the best manager in Major League Baseball; but, why did he move pitcher John Smoltz back into the starting rotation this season?

Since sitting out the 2000 season with arm troubles and taking over the closing duties in 2001, Smoltz had been one of the most prolific closers in baseball. The right-handed, 18-year veteran completed 92 percent of his save opportunities and had registered at least 44 saves for three-straight seasons.

This season though, Cox took Smoltz out of the bullpen in hopes of bolstering a starting rotation that had only two legitimate starters – I use legitimate loosely because of the Mike Hampton factor.

Although Smoltz has 163 career victories, unfortunately, this experiment has not worked out so far.

In two starts, Smoltz is 0-2 with an ERA approaching double digits. In his first start, the Warren, Mich., native was shelled by the Florida Marlins, lasting only 1 2/3 innings. Five days later, Smoltz tied a career high with 15 strikeouts against the New York Mets, but gave up a late-inning home run to lose the game.

To add insult to injury, the Braves new closer, Dan Kolb, gave up three runs in the ninth inning to lose to the Washington Nationals on Tuesday. The bullpen again reared its ugly head Wednesday by giving up six runs in the ninth, after being down by only one run, to give the Nationals its first series win against the Braves since 2003, when the club was then named the Montreal Expos.

The loss dropped Atlanta to one game over .500 and into a three-way tie for first in the NL East.

I know it's still early in the season, but that still leaves Cox plenty of time to remedy the situation and move Smoltz back to the bullpen and time to make a run at a 14th consecutive division title.

Tennis | Federer extends winning streak to 25

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — Off to the best start to an ATP season in 21 years, Roger Federer extended his winning streak to 25 Thursday with a three-set victory over Fernando Gonzalez at the Monte Carlo Masters.

Federer

The top-ranked Swiss star dropped a set, but still beat the Chilean 6-2, 6-7 (3), 6-4 to improve his record to 35-1 this year.

Federer has won 18 straight finals and is trying to capture his third-straight Masters title.

His only loss this year came in the Australian Open semifinals to Marat Safin.

NFL | Ex-Dolphin Williams to pay child support

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Former NFL rushing champion Ricky Williams will pay $4,200 per month in child support under terms of a paternity suit settlement with a former South Florida woman.

Williams

Cherie Clark, who now lives in Hawaii, will have custody of the child, Kekoa Blaze Williams.

Ricky Williams agreed to establish a $300,000 trust fund for the boy and pay for his medical and life insurance, along with attorney fees in the case.

The agreement was approved Wednesday by Broward County Circuit Judge Renee Goldenberg.

NBA | Wolves owner calls players "failed experiment"

MINNEAPOLIS — According to Minnesota Timberwolves owner Glen Taylor, the team's acquisitions of Latrell Sprewell and Sam Cassell two summers ago were a "failed experiment."

Before Minnesota's fifth-to-last game in a terribly disappointing season, Cassell figured his time with the Timberwolves was nearing an end.

For a story published in Wednesday's editions of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, Taylor said he regretted trading for Sprewell and Cassell — despite significant contributions from the two veterans that led to a run to the Western Conference finals last season.

CBB | Wake Forest's Paul to announce plans for NBA

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — All-America point guard Chris Paul plans to give up his final two years of eligibility at Wake Forest and enter the NBA draft.

Paul

The school scheduled a news conference for Thursday afternoon, when Paul planned to announce his decision.

As a sophomore, Paul was the leading vote-getter on The Associated Press preseason All-America team, and he was named to the first team after the season.

He averaged 15.3 points and 6.6 assists for the Demon Deacons (27-6), who set a school record for victories.

Wake Forest also was ranked No. 1 for two weeks early in the year.

Jobs add to students' duties

Students juggle classwork, studies, free time

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For K-State student Ben Laster, life without a job is unfathomable.

"I've never not had a job while I was in school. I've worked since I was 14," said Laster, senior in golf course management and cashier at Dara's Fast Lane.

"Even if I had a lot of money, I'd work two shifts a week," Laster said. "It gets me out of the house, and I actually like working. I've met a lot of people who come into Dara's. The best part of my job is meeting lots of people. People know me as the 'Dara's Guy.'"

Laster said he has worked at Dara's Fast Lane for almost five years to support himself while in college.

"I do get a bit of financial aid, but I have to work to pay for rent, bills and bar tabs," said Laster, who works about 25 hours a week.

Budgeting time to study can be challenge for Laster.

"I usually work from either 4 or 6 (p.m.) until midnight, so I tend to be up pretty late if I have homework," Laster said. "I usually sleep in later because I take afternoon classes. I have to take later classes because I cannot get up for morning classes."

Laster said that although he has worked a few weekend night shifts at Dara's Fast Lane, he usually tries to avoid these shifts because of school.

But not all students can avoid working night shifts.

Dayna Hull, student at Highland Community College in Wamego, said she usually covered night shifts when she worked at Gumby's Pizza and Pub.

"When I worked at Gumby's, I was going to school during the day, and I would usually work the night shifts," Hull said. "It got to be almost impossible to work at Gumby's until five in the morning and then make myself get up and drive 20 minutes every morning."

Hull said she had to get a job during daytime hours.

"I like Gumby's and all of the people that I worked with, but I had trouble making it to classes after only three hours of sleep a night," Hull said.

Hull, who currently works at Mr. Goodcents, is totally self-supported and works to pay for her rent, bills, gas, car payments, insurance, groceries and extracurricular activities.

"I have to work, but I also like to have money to be able to go out and do things with my friends," Hull said. "You can't just spend your whole life working – you'd go crazy."

Like Hull and Laster, many students work out of necessity.

"I work because I need to eat," Liz Harmon, senior in history, said.

Harmon said she usually works about 25 hours a week between her three jobs. Harmon works in the McCain Costume Shop and as a research assistant for graduate students, and she also researches for and helps to put homes on the National Historic Register.

Harmon uses a sewing machine to fix the seams in a pair of pants at the McCain Costume Shop. Two of Harmon's other jobs include working as a research assistant for graduate students and helping to put homes on the National Historic Register.

"For one of my jobs, I work with a professor and that gives me more experience in my major," Harmon said.

Like Harmon, Meghan Dowdy, senior in history, has found that working on campus can be rewarding.

Dowdy works about 25 hours a week as a student intern at the reference desk in Hale Library.

"I like my job because when I work at the reception desk, I can do homework and we have computer access," Dowdy said.

Harmon also said that it can be tough for her to keep up with school and her hectic work schedule.

"It can be tough, but I manage to keep up with the things I do and I get experience, and that's more important than anything," Harmon said.

Hood best on 2nd listen

"Outside Closer"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

I had no idea who Hood was until earlier this year. After hearing their latest album, "Outside Closer," I finally know how much I was truly missing out.

Hood is a band from Leeds, England. The bandmates have been together since 1991, releasing many albums and singles in their native country. With each release, Hood added a new sound and style to its music. The band wasn't exported overseas until 2001's "Home is Where it Hurts" EP. Since then, the band has released "Cold House," the critical smash that perfected Hood's foray into electronica.

This brings us to 2005 and "Outside Closer." I can't quite put into words the beautiful and autumnal sound of this album.

I wish I could say my relationship with "Outside Closer" was always wonderful, but my first impressions were far from enthusiastic. After purchasing the album, I was stunned.

After reading so many positive reviews of this album, I was expecting so much more. I was expecting this awe-inspiring album to knock me on my ass and melt the parts of my mind that weren't already ravaged by hallucinogens and alcohol.

I listened to this album as much as I could.

Slowly but surely, I found myself loving the album. Small sections of songs would stick in my brain, and I would prick up my ears to examine some of the interesting instrumentation.

Songs like "Any Hopeful Thoughts Arrive" begin with a looped guitar sample and stuttering hip-hop beats. The song slowly evolves as layers upon layers of voices, instruments and echo effects are added to the mix.

Toward the end of the song, a haunting horn section enters, elevating the song to a climax with a jittery string line. It is absolutely breath-taking.

Then there are songs on the album like the single, "The Lost You." It starts out with some crazy electronics that sound like Prefuse 73. Then the start-stop beats lead into a drum machine, and right when everything is about to explode, Hood throws a sample from a movie into the track. But as soon as it had stopped, the electronics start up again, leading into a twisty, brilliant track.

Few albums are full of so much contradiction. The album itself sounds like a blustery autumn day, but it brims with the life of a summer afternoon.

Hood never aspires to be more than what they are, an extraordinary sum made out of extraordinary parts. "Outside Closer" was nothing like I had expected; it is not an album that will knock the listener out on first listen.

Instead, this album is a slow-killer; it slowly seeps into one's consciousness until its beautiful sounds blow the mind from inside out.

Students perform original work in slam poetry contest

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rhymes, social commentary and emotions blended Thursday night as 13 slam poets read original works as part of the slam poetry competition.

The event began with a reading by noted slam poet and K-State alumni Taylor Mali. Mali read six original works to lead into the slam competition, which was open to the audience.

"My favorite poem Mali read was the Viking poem," David Brown, senior in electrical engineering, said. "It gets me every time; it's just a good story. I saw him when he was here last year and when he was on Def Poetry Jam and I really like his work."

Samuel Nelson, freshman in English, has been writing poetry for 12 years. Nelson read two poems for the competition.

"This is my first time to read. I'm pretty nervous, but nerves are always a part of it. I think that's part of the energy of slam poetry," Nelson said.

Each contestant had five minutes to read original work.

Krystle Richard, sophomore in mass communication, placed third in the competition with her poem, "The Black Woman in Me."

"I like being able to express myself and many of my poems have a racial context and I usually have an audience that may not be able to directly relate to my work, but this allows me to bring the audience into my world," Richard said.

Placing second in the poetry slam was Tony Herrman, senior in mass communication, who read the poem titled "Eating Granny Smith".

Herrman said the poem was inspired by a Granny Smith apple sitting on his desk.

"There was great competition here, and it's great to have $75 to spend on the country breakfast in the Union Courtyard," Herrman said.

First place went to Nathan Jackson, senior in speech, who read his poem titled "Doodoo Box". The poem was a scathing attack on television that had the audience laughing uncontrollably.

Jackson said that his poetry is usually inspired by his moods.

"In writing this poem, I was going to write about something else, but I was watching TV and I got angry and decided to say something about what I was feeling," Jackson said.

"Winning is always good, but tonight it's all about the poetry."

Health risks higher for minorities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minorities in Kansas are more likely to develop serious health problems and less likely to have insurance that pays for them, according to a state report.

The report, issued Wednesday at the state's first Minority Health Conference, also found that Blacks, Hispanics, Asian-Americans and American Indians are less likely to engage in preventive health habits. It blames language barriers, discrimination, poverty and educational flaws for the disparities.

"They're dying in their 50s and 60s, not in their 70s, 80s and 90s," said Kim Kimminau, the study's lead researcher, a senior vice president at the Kansas Health Institute, which conducted the report for the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

The study found that the AIDS rate for blacks is double that of whites, and blacks are 50 percent more likely to develop lung or prostate cancer. Black newborns account for 16 percent of infant deaths and 13 percent of low birth weight babies – while making up only 7 percent of the state's births.

And while 90 percent of Kansans have health insurance, that number drops to 75 percent for Hispanics – who also have the highest rates for teen pregnancy, the lowest rates for prenatal care and the highest rate of alcohol abuse among middle school students.

Hispanics are the state's largest minority group, making up 7 percent of the population, and many struggle with English.

"I speak a little English, but not enough," said Martha Tabares, who was being treated for a cough Wednesday at the Swope Health Services Clinic in Kansas City, Kan. "It's hard. It makes you think about not going when you are sick."

Tabares is also one of the 25 percent of Hispanics without health insurance.

"When they are sick, there aren't too many clinics or doctors for us," she said. "Where else can we go?"

Researchers also found that Native Americans are most likely to die early from diabetes and that Kansans of Asian and Pacific Island descent tend to be reluctant to undergo certain health screening tests.

"These are Kansans," Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said in the conference's keynote address. "These are our co-workers. These are our neighbors. These are our friends. ... We are failing too many of our citizens."

The study, conducted over four years, recommends that the state form a minority health office, as all but five states have done, to monitor programs, set goals and manage funds set aside for minority health programs.

"It's not enough to have a comprehensive statewide program for cancer or diabetes," Kimminau said. "We need to look at focusing targeted, effective interventions for populations in need."

State population decline may limit representation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kansas is in danger of losing political influence and drifting away from its agricultural roots if its population doesn't increase over the next five years, a University of Kansas researcher said.

Xan Wedel, a researcher at the university's Policy Research Institute, said the state's population is growing so slowly that it risks losing another representative in Congress.

Census figures released Thursday show the Kansas population grew by 1.7 percent between 2000 and 2004, compared with 4.3 percent nationally.

"If we continue to be outpaced in growth by other states, I would say in 2010 we definitely are at risk to lose another representative," Wedel said.

Kansas last lost a representative in 1990, when its delegation shrunk from five to four.

The state has about 46,000 more residents now than it did in 2000, but most of that growth – 45,000 – has been in Johnson County. During that time, urban areas such as Topeka, Kansas City and Wichita gained residents, while rural areas lost them.

Thirty counties, mostly in the northwest corner of the state, had population declines of more than 5 percent.

"We've already been seeing that for some time," Wedel said. "We see farm sizes increase, because the family farm is dying and corporations are coming in and buying more ground."

been revealed to protect investigation efforts as officials continue to process other scenes. However, most of the activity was located in Manhattan.

Riley County Police Department director, Mike Watson said that drug use is a leading cause of property crime in Manhattan.

"I think this will have a serious impact on crime in the area," Watson said.

Riley County Attorney, Barry Wilkerson, said he expects the suspects to appear at 1:30 p.m. Friday in court for charges pending.

"We seek the most severe penalty for these actions," Kline said.

WALL | Symbol of oppression, hate destroyed

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Students in the theater department paint different sayings on the Wall of Oppression Thursday afternoon. Theater students polled students in the department to find words and phrases to add to the wall, which was torn down Thursday night.

the event the last time it was done in 2003, said the idea came from a conference she attended at the University of Utah.

The wall helps show the different forms of hatred.

"It puts a face to diversity and discrimination," she said.

Sarah Decke, coordinator for leadership development, said the wall can remind us of our words of hate.

"We aren't going to truly live together peacefully if we don't remind each other of how hurtful hate can be," she said.

Although the program had the same level of success this year, it was still beneficial.

"It impacted a new group of people," she said.

In addition to The Wall, Haymaker also put together a display of flags in their front lawn. There were five different colors to represent 2004 hate crime statistics.

Hironaka asked the crowd to be courageous.

"Challenge to exercise your courage muscle. Speak up. Don't be silent," she said.

BILL | Loan interest could be paid

math or engineering would be eligible to receive interest relief as outlined by the bill.

Interest on loans would be paid back up to $10,000 or until the completion of the loan's repayment period.

If a student's income after graduation would exceed four times the national per capita disposable personal income, they would no longer be eligible for loan-interest relief.

The current national per capita disposable personal income is $27,589, according to www.whitehouse.gov.

"It's like if you graduated and got $150,000 a year job, you wouldn't qualify.

"You would qualify if you were working in research for $16,000 a year," said Dan Scandling, spokesperson for Wolf's office.

Scandling said the bill is in response to recent trends in those fields.

"There has been a steady decline in the number of graduates, while the demand in the field increases," Scandling said.

According to a February 2005 study by The Task Force on the Future of American Innovation, "Benchmarks of our Innovation Future," the United States is falling behind other countries in science and engineering fields.

In 2000, North American universities accounted for only about 500,000 of the world's science and engineering undergraduate degrees, according to the report.

In comparison, European universities had about 850,000 undergraduate degrees awarded in science and engineering.

Richard Hayter, associate dean external affairs for the College of Engineering, said he has noticed the decline in engineering majors compared to the growth in the field nationally.

"I applaud the Congress for recognizing the trend that we have been seeing internationally," he said.

However, Hayter said it has not been as noticeable at K-State.

"At K-State our enrollment is essentially level," he said. "We have seen a slight decline, but certainly not as we have seen throughout the country."

Hayter said he is unsure that attracting more math, science and engineering students would hurt recruiting for other undergraduate programs.

"I would imagine the potential is there whether we realize that or not," he said. "I would have a hard time thinking that it would affect it though."

has only one signing period starting in February.

While no new Wildcats were signed this week, they are coming.

"I would just ask people to be patient with this," Wooldridge said.

"The spring signing period tends to drag out even longer and further into time, and I anticipate that's what we end up doing here this year."

Fred Peete is an example of a late Wooldridge spring pickup, as Peete signed in late April of last year before becoming the team's second-leading scorer in 2004-05 as a sophomore transfer.

Wooldridge inked three players in the fall to letters of intent – 6-foot-5, 225-pound sophomore transfer guard David Hoskins, 6-foot-8, 245-pound power forward Ousmane Cisse and the 7-foot-1, 265-pound Sidiki Sidibe.

In the next "three to four weeks," Wooldridge said he expects to begin filling the three remaining scholarships.

Although Wooldridge could not comment about possible recruits, he did say, "We are going to bring in what we believe are some high-level players to go with a good mix of existing players."

As for the existing players, Wooldridge said this offseason would be no different than any previous year in his tenure. Like last year, he said he expects almost all returning players to stick around Manhattan for the summer.

"Everybody has specific things we've talked to them about that they need to improve on," Wooldridge said. "That's from skill level to working on their body type to working on balance and agility."

Wooldridge mentioned center Tyler Hughes and forward Cartier Martin – both entering their junior seasons – as examples of players who need to improve some physical attributes.

Hughes started five games last season and averaged 2.2 points and 2.9 rebounds per game.

Martin started all but one of 29 games and averaged 10.5 points and 4.8 rebounds per game.

"Tyler, he needs more endurance; he needs more strength; and we've put a lot of time into that," Wooldridge said. "Cartier needs more agility."

The offseason will be especially important for Hughes, Wooldridge said.

"This is a big transition year for him," Wooldridge said. "Going into an upperclassman category, and the fact that we are losing so much inside, he needs to be able to produce more a year from now."

As current players strive to become better and Wooldridge tries to bring in new ones, he will be doing so without the man who has stood by his side during his K-State career.

On Monday, associate head coach Mike Miller was named head coach at Eastern Illinois.

It will be Miller's second stint as a Division I head man, as he led Texas State from 1994-2000.

Wooldridge said he knew the day would come when Miller would leave for a head coaching spot.

"In life, you look for opportunities to enhance yourself and be better and take on more challenges, and that's a characteristic of Mike," Wooldridge said.

"He's looking for opportunities that are challenging. You don't keep guys like Mike Miller forever. Those guys move on and accept other challenges out there."

He said things would be different without Miller.

"We've become very close," Wooldridge said. "He had his hand print all over our program. He was afforded a lot of responsibilities in this program because of his experience, who he is and his expertise."

There has been speculation about who might replace Miller and when that might happen, but Wooldridge said there is no rush to fill the spot.

"It's more of a process we'll work through even while we are recruiting," Wooldridge said.

"There's no time table on it. It's an important aspect of what we have to do in the offseason, but it's not something we're going to do today."

Saying there's not one particular characteristic he's looking for – whether that be someone with K-State roots or a person with previous ties to Wooldridge.

He did say there had been some dialogue with possible assistant candidates.

"We've contacted some people, and people have contacted us," Wooldridge said.

"It'll work its way through in due time."

Wecker drafted 4th by San Antonio; Mahoney picked 34th

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In less than 10 seconds, forward Kendra Wecker went from being an amateur collegiate basketball player to a top-five Women's National Basketball Association draft pick.

When WNBA president Donna Orender announced the San Antonio Silver Stars had selected Wecker as the No. 4 overall pick in Saturday's 2005 WNBA draft – the highest-ever draft pick in school history – it was the culmination of Wecker's four-year run as a Wildcat.

"I am totally pumped about being a professional and playing at the next level," Wecker said. "The chance to play and compete with – and against – some of the best players in the world is going to be exciting."

Wecker

Expected to go anywhere from No. 2 to No. 4, Wecker sat and waited patiently while a nationally televised audience watched Minnesota's Janelle McCarville, Mississippi State's Tan White and TCU's Sandora Irvin go at picks one, two and three, respectively. Then Wecker's name was read, and the 2005 Big 12 Player of the Year had a new team in San Antonio.

Mahoney

Wecker said she likes the situation she is headed into with San Antonio, a team that relocated from Utah during the 2003 season.

"They have three new coaches down there, and they're just getting their organization going again," Wecker said. "I'm excited about it. I talked to the coaches before the draft and got to know them a little bit, and now I'm going there to play."

Wecker wasn't the only Wildcat who saw her dream of playing professionally realized, as the Connecticut Sun chose forward Megan Mahoney in the third round at No. 34, a pick many considered risky since Mahoney's recent injury to her Achilles tendon that caused her to miss the NCAA Tournament and required surgery.

Mahoney said she appreciated the Sun coaches for sticking with her throughout her setback.

"I think it speaks to (Sun) coach Mike Thibault and the organization and their willingness to take a chance on me," Mahoney said. "I feel blessed for them giving me the opportunity, and I am confident that I am going to get back in shape and prove him and his decision right."

K-State head coach Deb Patterson said she was excited for the opportunities in store for both players.

"We are just thrilled to see both Kendra go No. 4 overall and Megan to go in the third round," Patterson said. "Both teams (San Antonio and Connecticut) play a lot like we do and are next-level extensions of what our players have experienced at Kansas State."

Stagg Hill Transmission burglarized

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stagg Hill Transmission, 2333 Skyvue Lane, was burglarized at 5:30 Sunday morning.

A patrol officer heard a window break, and Riley County Police dispatch received a call from a witness who observed a white vehicle leaving the area.

The suspect, George Paul West Jr., 44, reportedly broke into the shop and removed several items, according to a news release from the RCPD.

West fled the area, and officers set out "stop sticks" to deflate his tires. He then failed to yield on Fort Riley Boulevard and Miriam Rohloff, 43, struck his vehicle.

Both were treated for moderate injuries at Mercy Regional Health Center and were released. The two vehicles were disabled, and an RCPD patrol unit sustained minor damage.

West was arrested for aggravated battery, fleeing and eluding and burglary; his bond is set at $50,000.

Kansas Highway patrol is investigating the accident, according to the release.

Kansas Board of Education reviews evolution curriculum

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A committee writing new science standards for state curricula has loosened the strings on teaching evolution, but the debate is not over.

According to The Associated Press, the first draft left in place the current standards, which holds evolution as a key concept for students to learn.

The second draft includes wording calling on teachers to teach, not preach.

The State Board of Education met to review the second draft April 13 in Hutchinson.

Kathy Martin, State Board representative for the sixth district, said the committee has one more draft to approve, which will be done sometime in June.

Walter Dodds, professor in biology, said he doesn't see the evolution debate ever being settled.

"The people that are creationists argue on belief," Dodds said. "Scientists base their

A chance at freedom

K-State architecture students build ramp for disabled woman

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Architecture students dedicated to community service worked over the weekend to give hope and freedom to a local disabled woman.

Barbara Hanks, a resident of Manhattan for over 40 years, worked as a nurse at Mercy Regional Health Center and in the Fort Riley Intensive Care Unit.

After years of working, her knees failed, and she suffered from severe back pain. Hanks underwent a series of Cortisone shots, but something went wrong during the third shot, and intense pain has confined Hanks to her wheelchair for the past two years.

"I really want to stay home," Hanks said. "You just have to make adjustments to life, but I never thought it would be like this."

Hanks is now restricted to the first floor of her home. She can't reach the cabinets and has trouble lifting pots and pans, making cooking difficult. The doors aren't handicap-accessible, but Hanks said she's learning to cope with these changes.

One of the biggest challenges, however, was her wheelchair, which offered her mobility but also confined her to the house for more than a year. A temporary ramp wasn't erected until September 2004, so Hanks could attend her mother's funeral.

Nevertheless, the ramp posed its own issues. Public transportation would rarely pick Hanks up because of the liability the crude ramp posed.

Over the weekend, architecture students worked to help Hanks overcome these challenges.

The students are working in conjunction with "Freedom by Design," an organization dedicated to community service. This is the first year for this program at the collegiate level.

K-State and five other universities were chosen among the 14 schools that applied for the opportunity to help in these projects. Next year, the organization hopes to include 10-12 schools.

The K-State team leader Staci Wayne, junior in architecture, said the team has worked hard to make this design a reality.

Sebelius vetoes abortion bill

Staff and wire reports

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius vetoed her second abortion bill in two years on Friday, saying the bill that imposed more regulations on abortion clinics was choosing "pure politics over good policy."

Sebelius

The bill's requirements include clinics hiring surgeons as medical directors and obtaining licensure from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. Sebelius took the same action on a similar bill in 2003.

MONACO'S PRINCE REMEMBERED AT FUNERAL

Monaco residents said goodbye to Prince Rainier III Friday at a funeral in the same cathedral where he married Princess Grace Kelly 50 years ago. Rainier, 81, ruled Monaco for 56 years and left behind three children, son Prince Albert II, and Princesses Caroline and Stephanie.

HIT ME BABY

Pop singer Britney Spears will have to trade in her crop tops for maternity wear as she and her husband Kevin Federline announced it this week.

Spears

The announcement came after weeks of rumors, and US Weekly reports the singer is three months along.

POPE'S TERM OFFICIALLY ENDS

Cardinal Eduardo Martinez Somalo officially ended Pope John Paul II's pontificate Saturday by burning the former pope's Fisherman's Ring and lead seal.

All 115 cardinals began moving into St. Martha House Sunday in preparation for the conclave, which begins today.

BIRTH CONTROL LEGISLATION

House and Senate leaders introduced the Access to Legal Pharmaceuticals Act Thursday, not allowing pharmacists with particular religious or moral beliefs to deny filling birth control prescriptions.

The bill would only allow the pharmacist to refuse a prescription fill if it could be filled by another employee at the same pharmacy.

AOL SUED FOR "CHILD PORN"

A 19-year old woman sued AOL because she says Matthew Wright, a monitor of the company's kids' only chat room, seduced her while online years earlier.

The woman accuses Wright of persuading her to send him naked photos of herself and participate in phone sex.

The Time Warner Inc. online company said Wright was fired immediately.

RADER GOES TO COURT THIS WEEK

Inside sources told the Wichita Eagle newspaper this week that Dennis Rader, BTK suspect, has confessed to the 10 killings and that his DNA matches evidence found at some of the crime scenes.

Rader has a preliminary hearing on Tuesday, where prosecutors will have to prove they have sufficient evidence to take the case to trial.

BTK stands for "bind, torture, kill" – his method of killing.

Rally sends message of hope

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The atmosphere was electric on Friday night when Ordinary Women members and more than 100 other women demonstrated their opposition to violence against women during the annual Take Back The Night rally.

The event began with a rally in the quad behind Hale Library. It continued with a march through Aggieville to City Park, where slam poets, dancers and musicians performed original compositions, and the T-shirt project was on display.

The rally is designed as an event where women can gather for support and voice their outrage against violence, but it is also an event where men can show support for their friends and loved ones, said Eric Ramseier, graduate student in English.

"I've personally seen the ills of violence against women, and I wanted to come offer my support for them and for the empowerment of women in any way I can," he said.

Amanda Mosteller, senior in history and women's studies, said the rally is a stand against violence .

"I came here because violence feeds on silence, and if we come together, women and men, we can show that we won't take it any longer," she said.

One of the main attractions at City Park was the T-shirt Project, which features shirts designed by women who have been, or who know, victims of violence.

It was a moving and enlightening display, bringing home the fact that violence happens more than people realize, said Mary McGivern, sophomore in psychology.

"It conveyed a powerful message," said McGivern. "It's something that makes you feel angry and hurt, but at the same time it gives you a message of hope."

Four slam poets recited original compositions geared toward educating women about violence.

But the poetry also included a message of hope, said Candace Feldman, junior in theater, who recited her poetry at the rally.

"A lot of the poems are very serious," she said. "But I like to lighten the mood by speaking about the beauty of women."

Feldman said reading poetry is a way of giving a voice to the countless women who do not have one or can not speak out.

"When I read poetry by women, for women, I empower a vast group of women, and through their energy, they empower me back," she said.

The rally was a success, said Beth Altenbernd, senior in hotel and restaurant management, who was the master of ceremonies .

"It's the best rally we've ever had, in my experience," Altenbernd said.

Altenbernd said the rally was also very pertinent to the times we live in and events that are happening in the United States and around the world.

"It makes me feel really hopeful, because we're all in a little bit of doubt right now about where we're going and where the country is going," Altenbernd said. "It shows the people who come here that all you have to do is organize and voice your opinion, and you can get a lot done."

Students present research projects

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students in the Developing Scholars Program presented posters Sunday at their fifth annual reception.

Anita Cortez, administrative director, said the students show the research projects they worked on throughout the semester.

Developing Scholars Program was started in 2000 to offer under-represented students research projects under the guidance of faculty mentors.

Students are given $1,000 per semester as a stipend for work done in research lab.

First-year scholars are required to take a one credit hour seminar each semester in which research methods are covered.

Freshmen, sophomores or transfer students who are members of a group that has been historically under-represented in higher education are encouraged to apply. Freshmen or sophomores who are first-generation college students are also urged to apply.

Cortez said the number of applicants accepted depends on the number of spaces that open up when students leave the program and how much funding is allotted each year to the program.

Students are required to reapply each year, but if they are doing what is expected of them, they will be readmitted, Cortez said.

Danielle English, freshman in public relations, applied for the program after receiving a brochure in the mail last summer and was accepted. Her mentor was Young-Ok Yum, assistant professor in speech, communication, theater and dance.

English's project, "Factors Influencing Intercultural Communication Satisfaction," addressed what the largest factor is in satisfying intercultural communication and if gender made a difference in any of the topics in communicating.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Sydney Sampleton, freshman in open option, explains her research, "Was Michael Moore's defense for Fahrenheit 9/11 effective?", to her sister Somer Sampleton, Manhattan resident, as a part of the Developing Scholars Program, which was held in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art Sunday afternoon.

After her interview with Yum, English chose the topic and they decided to work on it together.

English said there was a lot of library research involved with the project. During second semester, she met with her mentor once a week to go over the data and code the data to support the hypotheses.

Sydney Sampleton, freshman in open option, did her research on "Was Michael Moore's defense of Fahrenheit 9-11 effective?"

"I chose this topic because I found it interesting and controversial," Sampleton said.

The research was based on William L. Benoit's Image Restoration Theory, which takes mistakes celebrities and icons have made and places labels on them.

Sampleton said while the research was overwhelming at first, it was really interesting once she got into it.

English said through the project she learned how to do research in college and how to better prioritize time.

"In learning how to do undergraduate research, this project has helped put me on the right path for graduate school," she said.

Sampleton said the project wasn't hard and that she enjoyed getting to know minorities.

"It was a good experience, and I met a lot of people," she said. "The money factor is definitely a good thing, as well."

Cortez said students in the program learn from the hands-on experience and speaking with experts in their field of study.

"The more the students do, the more credentials they gain to get other things, such as scholarships," she said.

TO THE POINT

Board should approve new science standards

The Kansas Board of Education has a huge decision to make regarding the way children learn about evolution.

A committee is now writing new science standards.

The first draft is the same as the current standards, which hold evolution as a key concept for students to learn, but does not prevent teachers from teaching other theories.

However, the second draft emphasizes the importance of the separation of church and state by stating that teachers should teach, not preach.

The second draft of the new science standards is clearly superior. It specifies that teachers should not cross the line and delve into discussions about non-evolutionary theories.

Theories with a religious foundation should not be discussed.

When students pose questions on religious theories, teachers should respond by suggesting the students research religious theories on their own. Then they may suggest that the students should decide what they personally believe after completing their research.

Teachers must also emphasize that regardless of what students may or may not believe, evolution is an important scientific theory.

The Kansas Board of Education should approve the second draft of the new science standards when deciding what Kansas students should learn in the classrooms.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Healthy monster

'Sesame Street' should allow Cookie Monster to continue eating sweets

JACI BOYDSTON

I like to think of myself as a fairly tolerant, open-minded person. I'm pretty sure I have my PBS-filled childhood afternoons to thank for that. After returning home from school each day, I would anxiously wait until 4:30, when, for 30 precious minutes, I found myself immersed in a more caring, accepting world; a world in which kind-hearted people of different backgrounds, races and even species lived together in harmony. The utopian village of "Sesame Street" – probably the one street in New York City lacking a crazy, trashbag-wearing dope-fiend running around prophesizing the Armageddon – taught kids that everyone, no matter how different or eccentric, was a valued addition to society. On "Sesame Street," the silly quirks that defined each character were appreciated and lauded, not criticized and swept under the rug. Ernie's unnatural love for his rubber ducky was celebrated with a song, the Count's mild obsessive-compulsive disorder bothered no one and Cookie Monster's penchant for gobbling up cookies while getting crumbs everywhere except in his mouth was exactly what made him so loveable.

Times, they are a-changing. The decision-makers at "Sesame Street" have decided to back away from the very diversity that makes the show so valuable for children. Citing concerns over skyrocketing cases of childhood obesity, they are now snatching away the one source of joy in Cookie Monster's life - the cookie. Gone are the days of wanton cookie-benders. Instead of singing, "C is for cookie/ That's good enough for me," Cookie Monster will now explain to kids the difference between a "sometimes food" and an "anytime food." The show's goal of combating childhood obesity is certainly commendable, and I suppose there's nothing wrong with encouraging kids to munch on some carrot sticks every now and then.

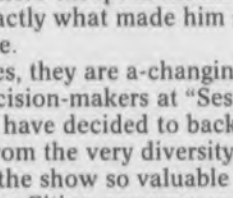
But if Cookie Monster gets a makeover today, who knows what tomorrow will have in store? Where do we draw the line between encouraging healthy lifestyles and trying to squeeze everyone into the same cookie-cutter mold?

Instead of celebrating diversity and the quirks that make us individuals, we're teaching kids they need to be thin, beautiful and normal to fit into a world where shows about plastic surgery are on every channel and even the oldest female celebrity still gets carded at liquor stores.

Cookie Monster isn't the first victim of this movement toward perfection. It's been over a year since Barbie divorced Ken to pursue the swingin' singles life with an Australian boogie-boarder. Never mind she's pushing 60. Even the Care Bears have gotten into the act with a line of aerobics instructor bears, as if we needed more aerobics instructors in this world.

Standing tall amidst this sea of conformity should be the one show that has always taught kids it's OK to be different, but sadly, "Sesame Street" is bending to societal pressures, as well.

If it's not OK for Cookie Monster to eat cookies, who will be targeted next? Will city health codes force Oscar to pack up and leave his trash can in favor of more suitable housing? Will Bert and Ernie, after 30 years of happy cohabitation, be ousted by the hostile conservatives of Sesame Street? And how long will it be before the legislature passes a constitutional amendment prohibiting them from marrying?



Oops, that's Kansas, not "Sesame Street."

For the past 35 years, "Sesame Street" has shown kids a world filled with diversity and kindness. Everyone – big, small, furry, feathered, grouchy, gay or gluttonous – was appreciated and valued on that magical, utopian street. Taking away Cookie Monster's cookies is chipping away at the diversity that made the show so great.Please – let him eat cookies.

Life more than just good, bad; live by feelings, fall in love

LUCAS MADDY

A couple of Tuesdays back, after the rain, the back door of Longhorn's was ajar, and that special "rain breeze" floated in from the alley. Nature can provide some of the best feelings: warmth of the August morning sun on a bowed back ... and rain breeze.

While feeling this breeze, I was also listening. Listening to a friend relate the story of his father's death from a slow-moving disease.

He spoke with harsh, wretched caution of pain endured, struggling to put into words how he had felt. He finally settled on describing it by using one word: blackness.

Blackness, he said, was how his life was colored during that period. Then, nearly angry, he wished that when his time to kick the bucket came, it would be unexpected and sudden.

His logic? It would be less painful for friends and family to mourn his passing than be forced to suffer through it with him.

The inevitability of death cannot be argued. Mortality is the absolute equalizer – not racist, bigoted, rich or beautiful. Regardless of the plot, climax and resolution, death will always be the final act.

Everyone is passing on - some know at what rate, others are unaware. The choice to be made is how fully to live. Those who experience the most fulfilling lives are the ones who measure their futures in minutes or hours. The suffering is done by those who assume they have decades remaining, not days.

We hear people describe years as good or bad.

"Yeah, I remember '85. Good year, good year. Royals won the Series, I'll never forget that."

How can a whole year balance as good or bad? This is the sum of life, not a bottle of wine! Why waste time labeling the past?

I'm no expert at living, but I have yet to be struck by lightning, and my heart still beats true, so I'm shooting par at least.

I watch people I think are happy, who have tasted a bit and want more – people who are never naked for they always wear a smile. For a crude comparison, smiles are life's chastity belts, repelling the advances of anger and sadness.

The best way to end up 95 years old with nothing but good memories: keep a short memory in the meantime. Smile and laugh while having a good time, and keep that one good time in mind to tune out your next rainy day.

Life is brief. We are remembered by our ability to overcome, gain social status, friends, fame.

We live by our feelings. Supposedly the feeling of love is one in which we feel most alive. I plead the Fifth, but I've heard stories.

Short of finding a soul mate, I've compiled a list of feelings, accomplishment- and failure-based, that should kick-start a life or two. All evoke the highest level of a certain emotion – fear, sadness, elation, loneliness or courage.

Take note. Check those you have done, and highlight those you have left.

1. Live for a time with only a dog for a friend – hopefully a short time.
2. Observe undetected while an animal is born in the wild.
3. Go to bed with the ache of hunger in your belly.
4. Write a letter – to a friend, parent, grandparent, etc. There are few joys in life like receiving a handwritten letter.
5. Find a spot high enough to see the stars and nothing else. Pass out while watching them, preferably without the assistance of alcohol.

Five is my favorite number, so I'll stop there. If you think of others, add them. Good luck.

P.S. Fall in love – once.

Lead the Way 5K race draws participants of all ages

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Lead the Way 5K race Saturday featured competitors of all ages.

The race, which was sponsored by the Leadership Studies and Programs Ambassadors, American Humanics Student Association and the KSU Students for Organ Donation, had 65 racers competing in three different age groups: 18-35, 36-50 and 51 and above.

Proceeds will benefit the community several ways.

The Leadership Studies and Program's Ambassadors will put its share of the registration fees toward a scholarship for leadership students. American Humanics Student Association will put the proceeds toward community-based programs, scholarships and funding. KSU Students for Organ Donation will bring in a speaker about organ donation.

Alex Serra, junior in kinesiology and race director, said she liked the race atmosphere.

"I liked meeting and talking to people and seeing other people in the community be so supportive," she said.

K'La Ruane, sophomore in cultural anthropology and German, said she decided to run because of her boyfriend.

"I came out to watch my boyfriend run, and I decided I couldn't just sit by and that I should try," Ruane said.

Ruane's boyfriend, Zach Swim, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he likes running because it helps him think.

"Not only does running keep me in shape, it's good to organize my thoughts," he said.

Five men from Goodnow Hall decided to race together. Eric Mann, Kipp Van Dyke, Kyle Aach, Issac Bari and Matt McCaffrey wanted to sponsor a Goodnow team to run. For their efforts, the Hall Governing Board decided to pay half of their entry fees to support them.

Mann, junior in mathematics and statistics, said it was good to show Goodnow's contribution to K-State.

"It shows that Goodnow is involved all over campus, and it promotes campus unity," he said.

The race started in the Bosco Student Plaza, went north on Denison Avenue and came back toward campus through the Jardine Apartment Complex. The race's final leg started at Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street and went past the All-Faiths Chapel and Anderson Avenue to end in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Swim said the worst part of the race was when "the back part was on the hill. It had no shade and it was a gravel road."

Ruane said the worst part wasn't the course, but the racing.

"There was a guy in his 50s, and he passed me," she said.

Racers take off from the starting line of the Light the Way 5K on Saturday morning. The course went from the K-State Student Union to Kimball Avenue and back.

K-State sophomore runs his own business through College Pro Painters

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most college students spend the summer working for someone else, but Scott Douglass, sophomore in business, will spend the summer running a franchise painting business through College Pro Painters. College Pro Painters has been around for 30 years and is the largest exterior painting company in North America.

Douglass discovered the job in an ad through Career and Employment Services. He started training in December and will work until school starts in August. Douglass said most people who do the program are in the College of Business, and they can earn three hours of college credit.

Douglass is in charge of hiring and training painters, marketing, lining up jobs and managing the business' finances.

"Basically, it's like I'm running my own private business, but through them," Douglass said.

He hires several crews, and each crew has a crew leader who is in charge of supervising the painters. Douglass won't actually paint; he will instead visit job sites to check on his crews.

"He'll go to every house throughout the day and make sure we're painting the way he wants us to and the way the customers want us to," said Matt Schneider, sophomore in general business at Southwest Missouri State University and one of Douglass's crew leaders.

Schneider and Douglass have been friends since high school. Some of the other employees are Douglass's friends, and they are all about his age. Douglass said that for the most part, his employees have no problems working for someone their own age, but there are some exceptions.

"They think they can get away with more," Douglass said.

Running his own business takes much of Douglass's time.

"I go back to Kansas City every weekend during the spring," he said. "Once the summer rolls around, I'll probably be working at least 50 hours a week."

Douglass said working so much takes a toll on both his social life and schoolwork.

"It's hard to balance the time between school and work and then finding time for yourself to just hang out and relax," Douglass said.

The business will probably make about $100,000. He will keep all the money leftover after he pays royalties to College Pro, pays the painters and pays for supplies.

"People who are franchisees, on average, tend to make $10,000 a summer," he said.

Club encourages sportbike safety to prevent reckless driving

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though it may be the last thing on some sportbikers' minds, safety is a priority for Mike Gamache.

Gamache, senior in mass communications, and Jesse Greenwald, research associate in the Department of Computing and Information Sciences, formed the KSU Sportbike Club for the purpose of promoting safety and commonsense driving.

The KSU Sportbike Club was started in fall 2003. Since then, it has accumulated between 40 and 50 members.

The club encourages safe behavior whether people are riding down the street or doing stunts in a parking lot, Gamache said.

"The guys you see driving around, showing off are trying to prove something," Gamache said.

Some members of the club do practice stunt driving. However, they do it in a safe environment, Gamache said. When they are driving in public, the members always try to put safety first.

"The club doesn't really have any written rules or anything," Greenwald said. "If we see someone doing something stupid, we look down upon it."

Mike said that the sportbikers who drive recklessly create a bad reputation for those who are safe and conscientious about the safety of others. At times, it can be upsetting to him.

"I'm embarrassed to ride a motorcycle because of the stupid things people do on them," he said.

As the weather continues to warm up, more and more sportbikers have taken to the streets, and the KSU Sportbike Club has started meeting regularly at Gumby's Pizza Wednesday evenings.

Any laidback, safety-conscious sportbike riders are welcome to join, Gamache said.

No. 65 Wildcats lose to Colorado in close match

COLLEGIAN

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis team dropped a 4-3 heartbreaker to the University of Colorado on Sunday in the Wildcats' first home match in over a month.

The No. 65 Wildcats lost the doubles to start the match before rallying to win three singles matches.

In the end, the effort wasn't enough to get the win, but the Wildcats didn't go quietly.

Three singles matches went into a third set, and with the score tied at three, the outcome of the match hinged on the tie-breaker in freshman Fernanda Da Valle's match with Colorado's Gleisy Torres Torres.

With every other match completed, Da Valle traded points with Torres Torres for most of the tie-break before dropping the final three points and the match 4-6, 6-4, 7-6, (7-4).

"I thought 'Just keep fighting and try to win,'" Da Valle said of her mindset late in the match. "I didn't feel comfortable with my game, but I said to myself, 'I can do it.'"

Da Valle's match was one of the many nail-biters in the afternoon. Senior Maria Rosenberg came back after dropping the first set to beat Colorado's Lynzee Kever 5-7, 6-3, 6-2, and freshman Tereza Prochazkova went into a third set before losing to the Buffaloes' Veera Nurmi 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he knew this would be a tough test.

"When it comes down to a breaker in the third set of the last match, you know that it's close," he said. "Colorado has got a good team, and I knew this would not be an easy match to win. So, I'm pleased that we got into a position to be able to think about winning the match."

Although the team lost, there was cause for celebration for Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia.

Rosenberg set the K-State career - singles win record with her victory over Kever. It was career win number 78 for Rosenberg, putting her one ahead of Petra Sedlmajerova, who won 77 from 1999-2003.

Rosenberg said she knew the record would be tough to beat.

"It feels good," she said. "I knew it was going to be tough because the last matches are always the toughest."

By defeating Kendra Strandemo in straight sets, 6-2, 6-4, Kvaratskhelia surpassed former K-State All-American Karina Kuregian on the singles wins in a season list with her 29th win of the season.

The Wildcats are back in action Wednesday when they take on No. 31 Nebraska in Manhattan. The match is slated for 2 p.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility.

MLB | Detroit, Maroth rough up Royals 6-1 on Sunday

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mike Maroth pitched 7.2 strong innings and Ivan Rodriguez had three hits, including a home run and two-run double, to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 6-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals on Sunday.

CBB | Reports: Doherty hired at Florida Atlantic

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Former North Carolina coach Matt Doherty will be the new basketball coach at Florida Atlantic University, two newspapers reported Saturday.

Doherty

The Palm Beach Post and The Boca Raton News, citing unidentified sources, reported on their Web sites that a formal announcement of Doherty's hiring could come as soon as Monday.

Doherty toured the campus Wednesday and met with athletic director Craig Angelos and school president Frank Brogan about the position.

Florida Atlantic would be the third coaching stop for the 43-year-old Doherty, who lasted three seasons as Bill Guthridge's successor at North Carolina before being forced to resign.

NFL | Owens tired of talking about new contract

PHILADELPHIA — Terrell Owens finally found a topic he was tired of talking about — his desire for a new contract.

Owens

Owens released a statement through a public relations firm Friday night saying he was done talking to the media about a possible contract extension with the Philadelphia Eagles.

Owens, who helped lead the Eagles to the Super Bowl in his first season in Philadelphia, is looking to renegotiate the seven-year deal worth almost $49 million he signed last March.

CBB | Boyle hired as new Cal women's coach

BERKELEY, Calif. — Joanne Boyle had no qualms about taking over the struggling women's basketball program at California.

Boyle

The former Richmond coach has overcome greater challenges, including a stroke that could have debilitated her for life.

Boyle was named the eighth head coach in Cal history on Friday, succeeding Caren Horstmeyer. Boyle agreed to a five-year contract with the Golden Bears after leading Richmond to three straight 20-victory seasons and the NCAA tournament last season -- the Spiders' first appearance in 14 years.

OLY | New York, London sweeten Olympic bids

BERLIN — Sweetening its bid with financial and promotional incentives, New York promised Sunday to market every Olympic sport — for free — in the seven years leading up to the 2012 Summer Games.

With 80 days to go before the July 6 vote to select the host city of the games, London also appealed directly to the sports federations, offering special hotel rates, price discounts, television exposure and other inducements.

New York and London were the only cities to announce major new initiatives, targeting their plans specifically to the federation officials who run the Olympic sports and appealing to their budgets. Most federation chiefs are also IOC members eligible to vote in Singapore.

Future looks optimistic for baseball season

JOSH WITT

For five and a half innings Sunday afternoon, it looked like the same old story for the K-State baseball team at Tointon Family Stadium.

But thanks to patience at the plate and opportunistic hitting, the Wildcats staged a remarkable comeback and defeated Texas Tech 13-12 on freshman Cris Tapia's RBI single in the bottom of the ninth.

No, it's not the College World Series, but the Wildcats' 2-1 series win – the team's first Big 12 Conference series victory since March of last season – is cause for hope that second-year head coach Brad Hill is turning the corner with this team.

And yes, "turning the corner" might seem like a wild notion for a squad less than a week removed from a home loss to William Jewell.

But that doesn't mean it's not the case.

After a come-from-behind 7-5 win against Texas Tech on Saturday, the Wildcats came out sluggish Sunday.

Missed opportunities plagued K-State, as the team stranded 10 runners in the first five innings, which led to a 10-2 deficit heading into the bottom of the sixth inning. It didn't help that ace pitcher Adam Cowart only went 4.2 innings, giving up seven runs.

The Wildcats were well on their way to dropping another Big 12 series – they had lost 12 in a row dating to last year – and a roller-coaster season would hit another low point.

A good chunk of the more than 800 in attendance were hitting the exits early.

They should have stayed.

K-State showed patience at the plate in the bottom of the sixth inning as the Wildcats exploded for seven runs.

Six times Wildcat batters walked, with leadoff man Terry Blunt logging two of his four walks in the inning.

But unlike the previous five innings, K-State cashed in.

Sophomore Jared Goedert ripped a two-RBI triple, and junior Joe Roundy hit a 3-2 pitch out of the park to spark the inning and cut the Red Raider lead to 10-9.

Then the Wildcats showed some endurance and finished out the game after the two teams traded runs in the seventh inning.

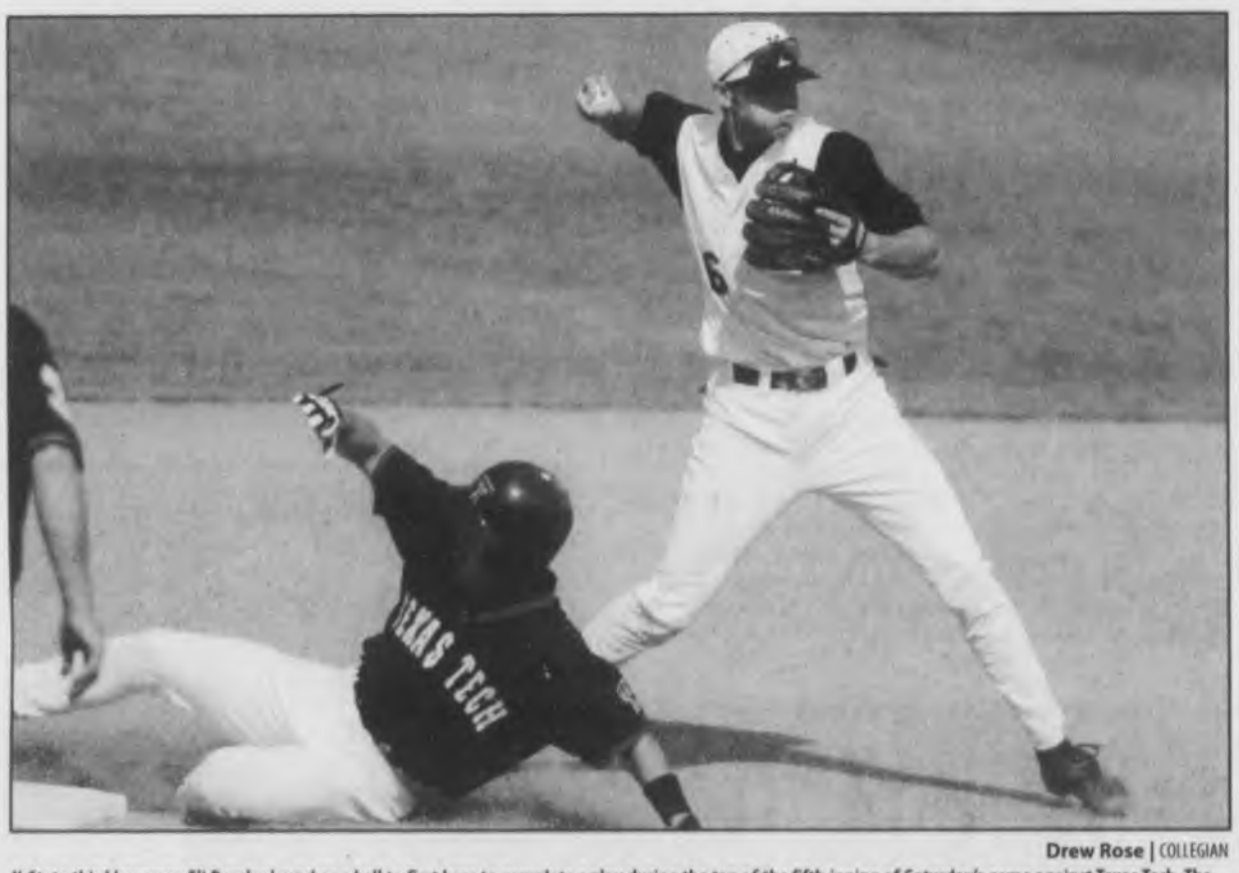
After Goedert blasted a two-run home run in the bottom half of the eighth inning to give the Wildcats a 12-11 lead, Texas Tech responded by tying the game in the ninth.

But Tapia's game-winning hit to bring Josh Dent home made sure the Wildcats would not lose. It's hard to figure out this Wildcat team.

This season, they've beaten the best in the country in No. 1 Texas, as well as another ranked team (Wichita State), but the Wildcats have also lost to teams that shouldn't have been a challenge, like William Jewell.

Sitting at 17-17 overall and 4-11 in Big 12 play, the Wildcats have series with Texas A&M, Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska remaining on their conference slate. K-State could win all of these, except maybe Nebraska, as the Aggies, Jayhawks and Sooners all sit in the bottom half of the conference standings.

Although many fans have Tuesday's rivalry game at Wichita State circled on their calendars because of the possibility of a season sweep, it's the conference tilts that mean the most for season success.



If the Wildcats can find consistency in all phases of the game, a top-six conference finish is far from a pipe dream.

It goes without saying that would be huge for Hill and the program.

Wildcats come back from 8 runs down

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may not have been the way K-State coach Brad Hill had planned it, but he'll take it.

On Sunday, the Wildcats (17-17, 4-11) took advantage of 14 walks and came back from an eight-run deficit to beat Texas Tech 13-12, picking up their first Big 12 Conference series win of the season.

"It's fun when they happen," Hill said of taking the series. "I kind of like them better when they are easier, but we will definitely take it."

The Red Raiders (24-13, 6-8) jumped out to an early 10-2 lead heading into the sixth inning behind the bat of junior Patrick Smart, who went 3-for-5 in the game and hit a two-run home run in the fourth inning.

"We were down a lot today, but we weren't nervous," junior Joe Roundy said. "We knew we had it in us."

In the bottom of the sixth inning, K-State batted around the lineup with the help of six walks and exploded for seven runs on four hits to cut the lead to 10-9.

After walking two Wildcats, Red Raider freshman reliever Brady Conine gave up a two-run triple to sophomore Jared Goedert to start off the inning.

Two batters later, Roundy blasted a three-run home run to pull the Wildcats within three. K-State would take advantage of the third Red Raider pitcher of the inning and score two more runs to make it 10-9.

"They gave us a lot of free base runners," Hill said. "They gave us a lot of help, and we had to have a lot of key hits and we got those, too."

In the eighth inning, with K-State down 11-10, Goedert, who was a

K-State coach sets decathlon world record

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's decathlon world record fell to Olympic silver medalist and K-State assistant track coach Austra Skujyte at the Audrey Walton Combined Events Thursday and Friday in Columbia, Mo.

Skujyte, from Birzai, Lithuania, won eight of 10 events, including all five events on Friday, to total 8,366 points, surpassing the previous record of 8,150.

"I was hoping I would break the record, but I did not know exactly how many points the record was," Skujyte said. "As they started announcing after each event how I was doing compared to how (the previous record-holder) did, I started to get more excited."

The former Wildcat All-American was a two-time NCAA Champion in the heptathlon and won the silver medal in the heptathlon at the 2004 Olympic Games in Athens, Greece.

The decathlon was the first International Athletic Association Federation-ratified women's decathlon in the United States, and Skujyte said the event may become more popular in years to come.

"It is not like I broke the 100-meter dash record or something," Skujyte said. "I am excited that it happened, but I assume someone might break it again, and then I will have to chase for it again."

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said he thought Skujyte could break the record with a little good fortune.

"I expected her to score pretty well, and I thought she could set the record if she did what she was capable of," Rovelto said. "Everything has to fall just right in order to set a world record, and fortunately for her, it did."

Junior Breanna Eveland and sophomore Lindsay Grigoriev were the only two Wildcats to compete against their coach at the combined events, as the rest of K-State's team was divided between the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz., the Mt. SAC Relays in Walnut, Calif., and the Pomona-Pitzer Invitational in Claremont, Calif.

Junior Kyle Lancaster was K-State's only event winner on the weekend, winning the high jump at the Sun Angel Classic with a leap of 7-04 1/2 in his first meet, after setting K-State's high jump record of 7-07 at the UTEP Springtime Classic April 2.

"I am not going to jump 7-07 every week, but if I can consistently jump 7-04 or 7-05, I will be pleased," Lancaster said. "I wanted to compete well to prove that (the record) was not a fluke, but I tried to stay relaxed and concentrate on moving to the next level."

Also at the Sun Angel Classic, sophomore Candice Mills tied her personal best in the long jump to finish second with a distance of 20-06 1/2.

At the Pomona-Pitzer Invitational, junior TJ Staab finished second in the shotput with a new personal-best distance of 59-05, and sophomore Lisi Maurer ran 13.87 seconds in the 100-meter hurdles and was one of five Wildcats to qualify for the Midwest Regional Championships over the weekend, as K-State's regional-qualifier list increased to 24.

Junior Shunte Thomas was among the Wildcat leaders at the Mt. SAC Relays. Thomas finished second in the 400-meter run with a time of 54.12 seconds.

The team's next competition will be at the Kansas Relays April 22-23 in Lawrence.

Authentic dining

El Cazador, Hillside Cafe top restaurant list

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mexican food is always a popular choice when satisfying cravings for international food, and Manhattan certainly has many options from which to choose.

El Cazador is the best restaurant in Manhattan to get authentic Mexican food.

The wait staff is courteous and efficient, and they keep customers' chip and salsa bowls full.

The average price for a combination plate is $6-$8, which is pretty good, considering the short wait. Most customers are seated within five minutes.

El Cazador is not a great, gourmet restaurant, but for fast, authentic Mexican food, it's the best option in Manhattan.

The Hillside Cafe is a family-owned restaurant that serves up authentic Mexican food in a relaxed and distinctly small-town restaurant atmosphere.

The food has a southern Mexican flair that makes Hillside stand out among Mexican restaurants in Manhattan.

The wait staff at Hillside is prompt and takes good care of customers. There is generally no waiting at Hillside, and the menu offers a wide variety of Mexican dishes in addition to American favorites.

Prices at Hillside are very reasonable and portions are large. If you're craving genuine Mexican food in a casual atmosphere, Hillside can deliver.

Carlos O'Kelly's is a chain eatery with restaurants all over the country. Though the name might suggest otherwise, a shot of Jameson or a pint of Guinness doesn't come with any of the meals.

The food, though good, is not authentic Mexican food. The dishes are a mix between Mexican and Tex-Mex.

Unless it's a Sunday, the wait line typically moves rather fast, and the kitchen is usually pretty efficient. The wait staff is generally nice and helpful.

A typical meal combination plate ranges from $7-$9, which is standard, but a little overpriced.

Taco Hut is an interesting and little-known fast food Mexican restaurant. It has stayed in business for years because the food served is comparatively great.

The sancho supreme is a good amount of food, and the tacos are oversized and cheap. The food also tastes great.

The staff is polite and helpful, which is unusual at fast food restaurants. The best part of Taco Hut is that a meal can be purchased for $6.

Taco Hut is a great budget restaurant.

Taco Bell is constantly finding new ways to combine the same basic ingredients. The food isn't too bad, nor is it overpriced. The problem with Taco Bell is that there are always too many people there.

Waiting 20 minutes to get food is not uncommon. The demeanor of the staff is dull and uninterested. Taco Bell is not a bad to eat, but don't expect perfection.

Last on the list is Taco Casa. Its location in the Dara's Fast Lane on the corner of 17th Street and Fort Riley Boulevard isn't bad. The problem here is the food. The meat is dry and the portions are small, but the prices aren't adjusted accordingly.

British punk band's debut blindsides reviewer

"Bloc Party"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Bloc Party is going to be the next band that rules the world. At least that is what one would believe when reading NME, Q Magazine or any other widely distributed music publication. According to these sources, Bloc Party is this year's Franz Ferdinand (whatever the hell that means).

On the other hand, periodicals such as Blender and Alternative Press would have one believe that Bloc Party retreads too much of a past sound by creating music that relies on synthesizers to flesh out its arrangements. In the May 2005 issue of Blender, reviewer Dennis Lim claims, "British punkers attempt a revival – of 2004" (whatever the hell that means).

The truth, as always, is found by going down the middle road. Bloc Party will never rule the globe, because pop sensibilities (especially in America) are so fickle and misguided that the band will unfairly not receive the following they deserve. The band, while not creating a truly original sound, set out and achieves an album that is full of great songs and thrilling moments.

Bloc Party's debut, "Silent Alarm," is an excellent guitar album played by musicians who have great chops and are a tight enough unit to create a refreshing sound. The album opens with the track "Like Eating Glass." Lead singer Kele Okereke sings in a charmingly British accent of a relationship far beyond its prime.

"It's so cold in this house/ Come and show me how it was," Okereke sings. The chorus is extremely heartfelt and emotionally wrenching. Okereke desperately yelps that the whole situation is "Like drinking poison/ Like eating glass."

The song is followed by "Helicopter," a start-and-stop rant that is so catchy yet so tightly wound that it sounds like it could fall apart at any moment. Lines such as "Empty/ Running on/ Bravado" and "Just like his dad (same mistakes)/ Some things will never be different" drip with spite. No points for guessing who Okereke is talking about.

Okereke's straightforward yet brilliant lyrics are truly a force to respect. His voice and emotional subject matter reminds one of Morrissey during his heyday with The Smiths.

Another aspect of this band – one that probably garners it comparisons to Franz Ferdinand – is its extremely tight rhythm section. Bassist Gordon Moakes and drummer Matt Tong are unbelievably in tune with each other. Their performances interweave so gracefully and create rhythms that can start and stop on a dime. The music created is not as tightly linked to disco and dancing as Franz Ferdinand's, but it is definitely not impossible to break out in a sweat, shaking your ass.

Bloc Party's album has truly surprised me. I started out listening to this album with a detached admiration, but upon repeated listens, I have come to absolutely adore "Silent Alarm." This album certainly requires repeated listens in order to hear just how perfectly all of the elements lock together.

The stinging, emotive lyrics, hammering rhythm section, synth flourishes and guitar solos that come out of nowhere – but make perfect sense within their context – all send shivers up the spine.

"Silent Alarm" is a not only a great guitar album, it's a great album overall. Bloc Party manages to create a full record that creates and maintains an amount of tension rarely seen in contemporary music.

Mother of Jackson accuser elevates drama

In a riveting episode of courtroom drama, the mother of Michael Jackson's accuser sobbed, snapped her fingers, affected a German accent, implored jurors not to judge her and exclaimed: "I've waited two years for this!"

If Jackson's child molestation trial were being televised, some might have scoffed that she was playing to the cameras. But there are no cameras inside this trial, which is shaping up as one of the wildest in California's colorful judicial history.

The boy's mother is not the first witness in the trial's six weeks to treat the courtroom as a personal stage. Comedians kept the mood light with wisecracks, a lawyer sparred verbally with an attorney questioning him and even the judge has been known to offer a few quips.

Ted Nugent to fellow NRAers: get hardcore

With an assault weapon in each hand, rocker and gun rights advocate Ted Nugent urged National Rifle Association members to be "hardcore, radical extremists demanding the right to self defense."

Speaking at the NRA's annual convention Saturday, Nugent said each NRA member should try to enroll 10 new members over the next year and associate only with other members.

"Let's next year sit here and say, 'Holy smokes, the NRA has 40 million members now,'" he said. "No one is allowed at our barbecues unless they are an NRA member. Do that in your life."

Nugent sang and played a guitar painted with red and white stripes for the crowd at Houston's downtown convention center.

Sorority raises money for kids

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The members of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority played through the rain last Sunday and enjoyed the warm weather this Sunday to help children.

The sorority had its annual "Alpha Delta Pi Softball Classic" to raise money for the Ronald McDonald House out of Topeka and Wichita in which thirty teams competed.

"The Ronald McDonald House is a home for families who have children in the hospital," Jena Parker, philanthropy chair of ADPi and sophomore in pre-occupational therapy, said.

"I hope the players were not out there just to play softball, but to do it for somebody else. Their contribution is helping to make another person's life easier."

With the tournament, ADPi raised $4,000 through T-shirts, contributions from the community and the $100 entry fee for the tournament.

"I hope people realized that the $100 they donated went toward the Ronald McDonald House," Lauren Cox, president of ADPi and junior in public relations, said.

This year four more teams signed up for the tournament than last year. With more teams, more people came to watch the tournament.

"I think the highlight of the tournament was just seeing all of the hard work and time that I had put into preparing for the tournament come together," Parker said. "People were having fun. They were in good moods. They had their families out there, so there were little kids running around having fun."

The people who went had an unscheduled two days to watch the tournament.

The sorority set the tournament for Sunday, April 10, but halfway through the tournament, it was rained out. They enjoyed the warm weather yesterday to finish out the games.

"We thought it was a success," Parker said.

"The weather was absolutely perfect and gorgeous. I was sad that last weekend wasn't this beautiful. Even so, it was nice to break the tournament up. We thought it was a success."

Lewis and Clark lecture at 7 tonight at public library

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lewis and Clark gave gifts to Native Americans in the West.

Fred Fausz, history professor at the University of Missouri-St. Louis, is giving a lecture about the gifts tonight.

It is the second lecture in the Lewis and Clark lecture series, which is part of Celebrate 150!

Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Society, said she hasn't heard Fausz speak before, but others have said it was a positive experience.

"I've talked to some people who have, and they said they thought he was a very good speaker and knew his material well," Collins said.

Fausz is bringing examples of the gifts given, she said.

He has researched and interpreted European-Indian relations during the 1600s to 1800s for 30 years.

He has also consulted on several films, most notably Kevin Costner's "500 Nations."

Collins encouraged K-State students to attend.

"I think it would be a very interesting way to get some background on Lewis and Clark," she said.

K-State offers community members diverse opportunities, Collins said.

"There's so many possibilities and opportunities, and this is just another one of those," she said.

Social services trains education advocates

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are more than 800 children in Kansas with disabilities whose parents are unknown or whose parental rights have been terminated.

These children are represented in special education matters by education advocate volunteers.

Social and Rehabilitation Services is having a workshop for those interested in becoming an education advocate.

According to a press release, the training is designed to outline and explain the special education process and the roles of education advocates and parents.

Darla Nelson-Metzger, education advocate coordinator, said education volunteers are trained to serve as the educational decision makers for children who are in the custody of the state.

Nelson-Metzger said the process to become an education advocate is simple.

It requires going to training classes, submitting an application and checking three references.

Nelson-Metzger said any students in education who want to learn about special education should attend the workshop, but it is open to all students.

"Anyone who wants to serve in a voluntarily role to serve and help out children would benefit from going," she said.

RAMP | Student project benefits disabled woman

Lynsey Wedd and Staci Wayne, juniors in architecture, look over a section plan that they drew up for the project. The group of students designed a new ramp and sidewalk for the house.

Drew Rose

It raised its own money by writing letters and asking for donations and supplies.

The group ripped out tile, widened a doorway, poured a concrete slab, heightened the porch and built a ramp to give Hanks greater freedom, Wayne said.

"I think it's been really beneficial, not only for this woman, but for everyone involved in design," Wayne said. "We're impacting someone's life and safety, and that's always amazing."

This is the second project the team has completed in Manhattan, making handicap accessibility an issue in older businesses and homes. If residents were aware of the trouble handicapped individuals face everyday, they'd be more willing to improve this situation, Wayne said.

Despite Hanks' disability and frequent hospital visits, she remains positive and hopes to walk again some day.

"I believe I could at least try," Hanks said. "You never miss it until it's gone. I'm going to do my best to get out of this wheelchair. I'm not going to give up."

double shy of the cycle, came calling again with a two-run home run to give the Wildcats their first lead of the game, 12-11.

"The pitcher left a fastball over the plate, and I got a good swing on it," Goedert said. "I was just hoping it was going to get into the gap."

Texas Tech would tie the game at 12 in the top of the ninth inning, but K-State would not be denied.

After a single by senior Josh Dent and a sacrifice bunt by sophomore Eli Rumler to move Dent to second, Hill brought freshman Cris Tapia in to pinch hit. With an 0-2 count, the Tucson, Ariz., native smashed a line drive past the diving Red Raider shortstop to score Dent and pick up the win.

"It was a great team win," Goedert said. "A lot of teams could have thrown in the towel, but we didn't."

Despite blowing the save opportunity in the ninth, junior Bryan Peterson picked up the win to improve to 2-0 on the season.

After dropping the Friday opener 11-7, the Wildcats picked up their first win of the series and snapped a five-game losing streak with a 7-5 victory on Saturday behind the bat of Roundy, who hit a three-run home run in the eighth inning.

K-State coach Brad Hill argues a balk call with an umpire during K-State's game against Texas Tech Sunday afternoon. The Wildcats won the second and third games of the series to pick up their first series win this season.

Although the series win moves K-State out of last place in the conference, Hill said he is taking it one game at a time.

"We are not concerned about making the Big 12 tournament right now," Hill said. "This is a step in the right direction, and this is something we can build on, and hopefully we can utilize it."

The Wildcats will be in action again on Tuesday, when they take on Wichita State at 7 p.m. in Wichita.

arguments on logical, testable hypotheses."

Dick Nelson, science department chair at Manhattan High School, also doesn't see the debate being settled.

"With strong opinions on both sides of the issue, the debate tends to keep going," he said.

Martin said the State Board of Education is not trying to settle the debate.

"We're trying to adopt the standards that constituents want to allow for critical analysis of evolution," she said. "We are not trying to introduce creationism into the science standard."

Dodds said teaching evolution should influence other curriculum.

"Science is a different way of knowing about the world than religion," he said. "Evolution is the most fundamental basis of biology."

Nelson said evolution touches on everything in society.

"Its influence on our thinking and how our society operates is impacted by one way or another with the question of origin," he said.

Though they still had not talked a few hours after the draft, Wecker and Mahoney said they were excited for one another.

"I know it's a relief for her just because of the fact that she's injured and there were some huge question marks about if she's going to get drafted this year or if she has to wait until next year and go overseas and play," Wecker said of Mahoney.

"It was so exciting seeing her go at No. 4," Mahoney said. "She deserves all of it. She's such a great player."

One surprise was that guard Laurie Koehn was not drafted, despite being the NCAA's all-time record holder for 3-pointers made with 392.

However, Patterson said Koehn would be given a shot in the league through free agency.

"Laurie Koehn is also going to have an opportunity to attend training camps as a free agent and try out with several teams," she said.

Wecker returned to Kansas Saturday night, and both she and Mahoney will leave for rookie orientation on April 22-23. Team training will begin April 24, and while Mahoney will have to sit out the 2005 season, Wecker will begin preparation for the start of the season on May 21.

Remembering tragedy

Paul Buck | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A man kneels at one of the children's chairs in the "Field of Empty Chairs" at the Oklahoma City National Memorial in Oklahoma City on Sunday. The chairs represent each of the 168 people killed in the April 19, 1995 bombing of the Murrah Federal Building.

Timeline of the Oklahoma City Bombing

April 19, 1995
9:01 a.m.: A 4,800-pound fuel and fertilizer bomb explodes outside the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. Hours later, the official death toll reports 168 deaths and more than 500 injuries.

April 20, 1995
Authorities track the truck that carried the bomb to a Ryder Truck rental company in Junction City.

April 21, 1995
New York native Timothy McVeigh and his Army friend, Terry Nichols, of Herrington, Kan., are named the primary suspects in the bombing.

May 1995
A federal grand jury investigation begins.

May 10, 1995
Terry Nichols is formally charged in the bombing.

Aug. 10, 1995
The grand jury indicts McVeigh and Nichols on 11 charges while McVeigh's friend, Michael Fortier, is also indicted and pleads guilty.

June 2, 1997
The jury finds McVeigh guilty on 11 counts.

June 13, 1997
McVeigh receives the death sentence.

Dec. 23, 1997
Nichols is found guilty of conspiracy to use a weapon of mass destruction but not guilty of destruction by explosives.

May 27, 1998
Fortier is sentenced to 12 years in prison and fined $200,000 for failing to warn authorities about bombing plans.

March 8, 1999
The U.S. Supreme Court rejects McVeigh's appeal, standing behind his conviction and death sentence.

March 29, 1999
Oklahoma County District Attorney Bob Macy charges Nichols with 160 state counts of murder, with the possibility of receiving the death penalty.

June 11, 2004
U.S. federal government puts McVeigh to death via lethal injection at the Terra Haute federal prison in Indiana at 7:14 a.m. local time.

May 26, 2004
Nichols is found guilty of 161 state murder charges.

Aug. 9, 2004
A judge orders Nichols to serve a life term in prison without the possibility of parole on each of the 161 state counts of first degree murder.

Shared memories from the Oklahoma City bombing

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Steve Smethers has two distinct memories from April 19, 1995.

It was 10 years ago, but he still recounts the vivid details from a domestic terrorist event that shocked Americans.

Today marks the 10th anniversary of the Oklahoma City bombing that killed 168 people, including 16 children, and wounded more than 500.

And Smethers still remembers.

"A colleague came into my office at about minutes past 9 a.m. and was listening to the radio station and heard a bomb went off in the federal building," said Smethers, a professor at Oklahoma State University's school of journalism and broadcasting at the time.

"I didn't think much about it until the colleague called across the hall and I saw the aftermath of that bombing. It had just gone off and what it had done to the building – I was just mortified."

So mortified that Smethers said he decided to cancel his media history

Briefcase returned after car pursuit

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A burglary suspect stole a briefcase from Stagg Hill Transmission at 5:30 a.m. on April 17.

Mike Hawkins, owner of Stagg Hill Transmission, said the damage of the break-in is about $400. He said there was a rock on the floor and broken glass everywhere.

The briefcase contained Hawkins' personal documents and was recovered and returned.

"I am just glad that the police officer was in the area when he was," he said. "They really had it handled from the get go."

Hawkins said the alarm went off and probably did not give the suspect, George P. West Jr., very much time. He said that is why it is likely that only his office was disturbed.

"We have already started the investigation," Lt. John Eichkorn, Kansas Highway Patrol, said.

The suspect was being pursued by the Riley County Police Department on Manhattan Avenue in a 1988 Cadillac when he ran a red light and collided with another vehicle, according to the Kansas Highway Patrol crash log.

The other driver, Miriam Rohloff of St. George, Kan., was westbound in a 1997 Plymouth on K18 highway, and the two vehicles collided in the intersection.

Police target underage drinking

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Minors beware. The police force has increased and underage drinkers are its targets.

Recently, the Kansas Department of Transportation issued Riley County a mini-grant, allowing the Riley County Police Department to employ more officers, RCPD Sgt. Steve Boyda said. These officers will focus on minimizing underage drinking.

"When our officers responded to loud parties, they noticed the majority of people were underage," Boyda said. "We didn't use to possess enough personnel, but we applied for a grant from the KDT and got it."

The first weekend the plan was in effect, the RCPD issued 69 notices to appear in court, Boyda said.

"We wouldn't have issued these if we didn't have the grant," he said.

That particular weekend, the police force completed 21 bar checks and 33 party checks. One MIP was issued at a bar, while 33 were issued at parties. Ten MIPs were distributed to minors walking on the street and four citations were issued for furnishing to minors. Twenty-seven other violations were handed out as well, Boyda said.

The grant allows for two officers to be added to the patrol for six

BTK suspect to appear in court, face 10 murder counts

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BTK suspect Dennis Rader will appear in Sedgwick County District Court this morning.

Rader is charged with 10 counts of first-degree murder in Wichita – serial killings that terrorized the city for more than 20 years.

Rader, a law enforcement officer from Park City, Kan., is being held on a $10 million bond.

BTK is the killer's nickname, which stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill."

The preliminary hearing is expected to last three to 10 days. It is intended to determine if there is enough evidence to connect the suspect to the crimes.

Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has said DNA from a crime scene linked Rader to the murders.

Both sides will present evidence unless Rader's defense attorney waives his right to the hearing. If that is the case, he will be arraigned immediately and no evidence will be presented.

Rader will have an opportunity to enter a plea.

Prosecutors cannot seek the death penalty because the murders Rader is charged with all occurred before 1994 when Kansas passed its death penalty law.

The hearing will be broadcast on Kansas Now 22 incorporation with Cox Communications. Channel 22 is partnering with KAKE TV in Wichita to broadcast the hearing in its entirety, according to a Cox Communications news release.

News media seating is limited and has attracted media from outlets including The Los Angeles Times, Fox News, ABC and the Associated Press.

Iraqi college dean to visit campus

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dean of Iraq's College of Science for Women at the University of Baghdad will discuss issues relating to Iraqi women, science and religion and electromagnetic radiation in Iraq this week in three presentations.

Anis Al-Rawi is stopping at K-State after visiting Harvard University and the University of Cambridge. He said he would like to create links between the University of Baghdad and universities in the United States.

"Most of the people, they don't know anything about the situation of Iraqi women, especially students," Al-Rawi said. "I want to show them what is going to happen in the future and to explain what is happening now during the war. I want to show the faces of our women, whether they are happy or sad."

The Muslim Student Association is sponsoring Al-Rawi's lecture on Wednesday that will discuss science and its relationship to religion.

Mohammad Al-Shaya, president of the Muslim Student Association, said Al-Rawi will talk a lot about the Islam religion.

"Students who attend can learn things about Muslims and the Islam religion," Al-Shaya said. "They can also ask any other question relating to Islam."

Al-Rawi said it is important to examine the Islam religion and science together.

"Religion is going parallel with science, not opposing it," he said.

Trade in early Kansas days

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lewis and Clark transported and dispensed an expensive array of "Indian presents" to ensure the success of their exploration of the West at the start of the 19th century.

Fred Fausz, history professor at the University of Missouri-St. Louis, displayed samples of these objects at a presentation of the Missouri Humanities Council.

Fausz described dozens of artifacts, from thimbles to pocket mirrors, that Lewis and Clark used to trade.

"The Indians called (the pocket mirrors) 'solid water,'" Fausz said.

"That's because the only time before that, they only saw their reflection in a pool of water."

Fausz also explained how Lewis and Clark were under cargo and had nothing to trade when they arrived at their destination in Oregon. He said this caused a problem because "reciprocation was a huge part in gift giving," and Clark was forced to give away his most valued possessions.

More lectures about Lewis and Clark can be found at www.celebrate150.org.

Supply, demand control gas prices

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those stressed over rising gas prices, there is relief in sight.

Chris Darrah, owner of Dara's Fast Lane, said Dara's has had decreases in gas prices over the last couple of weeks. He said prices are currently stable.

Tracy Turner, assistant professor of economics, said the increase in gas prices is a supply and demand factor.

Turner said oil production is limited in Iraq because of the war, as well as in Venezuela because of political instability.

Turner said that any time the market senses there could be reduction in production in the future because of political situations or war, the price of oil rises.

On the demand side, Turner said Americans are continuing to prefer vehicles that are not fuel efficient and demand pressures are coming from countries transitioning into higher economies, such as China.

Lance Bachmeier, assistant professor of economics, said for the price of gas to go down, the price of crude oil would have to decrease, which requires an increase in the production.

Turner said economic alternatives to driving include riding a bike and carpooling. If someone is in the market to buy a new vehicle, Turner suggested a vehicle with higher fuel efficiency and full hybrid.

The first seven-passenger vehicle in the hybrid sports utility vehicle market is the Toyota Highlander Hybrid.

According to a press release, the vehicle goes on sale in June and will only be available in limited quantities.

Full hybrid vehicles can operate under electric power only, gas power only or a combination of the two. It shares similar hybrid technology found in the Toyota Prius, which is already on the market.

Darrah said while ethanol is an alternative, it has been following the gas market in terms of prices going up.

According to www.ethanol.gov, in 2004, U.S. ethanol facilities set new production records and consumers used more than 3 billion gallons of ethanol in their automobiles.

While gas prices are decreasing, Turner said they tend to rise again once summer gets closer.

"They increase because there's an increase in the demand for gasoline as households undertake vacation travel," she said.

TO THE POINT

Oklahoma City bombing teaches lessons

When the federal building in Oklahoma City exploded 10 years ago, our eyes were opened.

The terrorist act wasn't committed by someone that fit the stereotype. Instead, it was a young, white male who had connections so close to home in Kansas.

Ten years later, it seems we have forgotten the lessons of Oklahoma City and Timothy McVeigh. Our recent memories are haunted by images of Arabic men training in our flight schools and using our own planes to destroy our sense of security.

We have changed our national security policies to incorporate racial profiling with fingerprinting and retinal scans. It's not uncommon to give a second look to anyone who looks different that boards our plane.

But perhaps the biggest danger is forgetting the lessons of our past. It's easy to place the blame on someone else's culture and religious beliefs.

We can't live in fear and second-guess our safety at every turn. But focusing only on the most recent memory of terrorism would be short-sighted.

Remember the images of a decade ago – the office memos littering the streets, the children rushed from the daycare and the building, eerily quiet with half of its walls missing.

We can't bring the victims back, but we can prevent it from happening again.

Evolution of a Wildcat

Sleepless nights of studying give way to endless nights of partying

JESSE MANNING

The Kansas State Board of Education may not be able to decide whether mankind came from amino acid soup or the hand of the Almighty, but there is undeniable evidence that proves how college seniors got here.

Through sleepless nights and a diet consisting mostly of Ramen, seniors have evolved from curious freshman to bipedal equivalents of Pavlov's dog, salivating at the call of the "real world."

Note: the following is just a theory and there are occasional mutants who don't fit the mold, but generally students can track their evolutionary progress with startling accuracy.

Freshmen: Upon arrival at college, these eager young minds are ready to tackle just about anything. They bustle around campus with backpacks filled to bursting, rarely missing a class. They take courses like "Natural Disasters" only to be sorely disappointed by their initial college experience.

Is this really what they are in for – hours upon hours crammed into Umberger 105 between a sweaty middle-aged guy and some chick who answers questions she's never asked? This shock treatment normally sets them on an irreversible course toward senioritis.

Sophomores: Busier now and getting into the core classes of their majors, sophomores begin to venture to class in their pajamas for the first time. Most concern for their appearance goes out the window along with their GPAs.

A switch to open-option and a period of trying to "find their calling" are hallmarks of this stage of academic evolution. Also, hunched backs from overfilled backpacks and carpal tunnel syndrome may develop. The student has an increased need for alcohol in order to "relax."

Juniors: Many college students turn 21 during their junior year. Inefficient beer cans and shot glasses are replaced with an IV drip that pumps alcohol directly into the bloodstream (patent pending). Students are quite adept at immediately telling which classes they need to attend and which they don't. "D" truly begins to stand for "diploma."

The second semester of this year is marked by enormous pressure coming from all sides – class, work and whatever semblance of a social life is maintained. Those still in the dorms during their third year can often be found in a fetal position, crying themselves to sleep.

Seniors: Students are diagnosed with senioritis and given nine months to leave college or suffer irreversible brain damage. Most classes are considered crap by this point and if planned properly schedules can be up to 75 percent pointless.

Take my own, for instance: "Advanced History Seminar," "Fundamentals of Music," "Physical Anthropology" and "Great Books." All of these courses could easily be described as "Satan's fingernails on a chalkboard in hell," "Crap I'll seriously never use again," "The biology of monkeys" and "I'd rather eat a bowl of glass."

Beyond Seniors: Unless you stand to make a boatload of money from your undergraduate degree or are pursuing something more than a bachelor's, there is no logical reason to stay at a university longer than four years. The sheer insanity of wanting to "stick around and get my leadership minor" is a case of severe senioritis.

Even though senioritis makes students sick of classes, it occasionally gives them separation anxiety. Those unlucky few who become trapped at college will live out their remaining days grazing quietly on the quad.

When they reach advanced age, they'll be taken to a glue factory. The cycle is complete when a freshman uses the glue to put together some candy-ass art project.

Bosco clock tower highlights need for other monuments

SCOTT SEEL

When K-State alumni brought their future freshmen back to the place they once called home during Open House, they saw a little something different in the free speech zone.

That little aluminum marvel is the Bosco Clock Tower: a 21-foot tall homage to the great Pat Bosco, K-State's dean of student life.

The buzz around campus has been less than kind regarding this structure, erected after Student Senate voted to allocate $15,000 of the $30,000 of the expected cost.

I think it's a little silly and looks something like a phallus, I don't have a problem with the clock tower itself or Senate's decision to allocate $15,000 to fund the construction.

That being said, here are some other ideas for construction around campus to liven things up and honor some unsung heroes on our campus.

PERVIS PASCO

Any true K-State basketball fan remembers one of the worst days in history, right behind the day Tom Asbury was hired.

On the same day the women lost to Texas in the Big 12 conference tournament, Pervis Pasco, also known as "The Big Perv," committed one of the biggest gaffes in collegiate sports history.

Needless to say, that night I got reacquainted with an old friend of mine from Kentucky. You might have heard of him – James Beam.

Sure, Pasco played a large role in returning the program back to some degree of respectability, but he will be known for that blunder.

Because of that day, I submit that a statue of Pasco running with a basketball under one hand and a "We're No.1" gesture held high be erected on the quad, which will now be renamed "The Traveling Zone."

JOHN O'HARA

Though the SafeRide program owes its existence to numerous people over the years, it was during the presidency of John O'Hara that it finally came to be.

The program has become so popular so that drunk K-State students have had to wait for what must seem like minutes to get a free ride.

That is why four parallel parking spots in front of Rusty's in Aggieville should be named the "John O'Hara SafeRide Waiting Zone." Sure, it's not an edifice, but it should be sufficient to honor O'Hara's contribution to K-State.

THE BREAKFAST LADIES IN THE UNION

Like the two grandmas I never had – OK, I have two grandmas, but that's not the point – these wonderful ladies have provided me and everyone else at K-State with killer biscuits and gravy every day for who knows how long.

These women have slaved tirelessly over a hot griddle day after day and deserve to be honored for their labor. Therefore, I hereby submit that a golden spatula should be erected in the food court and the dining area renamed "The Union Breakfast Ladies Dining Area."

THE PARKING NAZIS

Hated by many for their power, these individuals are the only people keeping the entire campus from devolving into a Hobbesian anarchy of rampant, unchecked lawlessness.

These unsung heroes march around campus through any and all weather conditions, ensuring all parking laws are obeyed to the tee.

To pay homage to these bastions of law and order, Student Senate should allocate funds for the construction of a platinum parking meter, standing 25 feet high, in the metered parking lot.

It'll be cheaper than a parking garage.

ELL ROBERSON

OK, never mind. This is a family publication.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

I'm listening to the Manhattan radio stations — 96.3, 97.5 and 101.5 — and all three are playing "Boulevard of Broken Dreams" at the same time. Enough of that damn song.

If my grandma were to go to K-State, I think she'd walk faster than almost all the football players who go here.

I think it's funny that the only people who say, "Kansas: as bigoted as you think," are big fat lesbians.

The guys who are broadcasting the baseball game really suck.

I wanted to know if I could get the phone number of that sorority girl that got caught having sex in the bathroom Saturday night at Porter's.

Does it mean I'm a stalker if I watched every second of the WNBA draft and then I got on the computer to see what else happened? Congratulations, Kendra and Megan.

The dorms are really freakin' hot. When are they gonna turn the air conditioners back on?

I just want to thank the Classy Cats for hitting my car with a softball on Sunday. That's real classy.

Not only are Delts ugly and desperate, they're also immature.

If 20 kids attack you at once, could you beat 'em up? I'd kick their asses.

I was just doing laundry in the basement of my dorm and I found a $10 bill in the lint trap.

I came to K-State to chew some gum and kick some ass, and it looks like I'm out of gum.

The one thing you guys left off that hate wall before you tore it down, you should have put on tuition increases.

Review required for tenure

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Professors at K-State go through a rigorous review process before being given tenure or promotions.

Scott Deloach, assistant professor of computing and information sciences, said announcements are made in prominent trade journals when the need for a new faculty in the department arises.

A committee reviews the applicants for each position, who then meet with the other faculty members of the department individually or in groups. At the end of the review process, the faculty comes to a consensus and makes its recommendations to the department head, he said.

Deloach said appointments are initially made for a period of six years and at the end of each year, an evaluation is done by the department head. The evaluation includes recommendations for improvement or appreciation of the faculty member's activities.

There is a mid-probationary review at the end of the third year in which the quality of work done by the faculty member is reviewed based on different criteria such as classroom teaching, research work-related publications and participation in other creative endeavors, he said.

Bhadriraju Subramanyam, professor in the Department of Grain Science and Industry, said the tenured faculty members of the department holding a rank equal to or higher than the position to be filled advise the department head on the suitability of the candidates.

He said appointments at the rank of assistant professor, associate professor and professor are made, after recommendations by eligible department faculty members to the department head, through a vote on the appointment of the candidate. The department head then forwards a written recommendation and accompanying explanation to the dean, along with the candidate's complete file, the results of the vote and the recommendations of eligible department faculty members.

"The entire process is very fair and is a good rewarding system. It evaluates various aspects of the faculty and not just academic accomplishments. It is not easy becoming a professor and all the expectations of your appointment need to be met," Subramanyam said.

He also said people outside the university who are recognized for excellence in the candidate's discipline or profession may be asked to participate as reviewers in evaluations for tenure and promotion.

Virgil Wallentine, department head of computing and information sciences, said that repeated failure of a tenured faculty member to perform his or her professional duties would be considered evidence of "professional incompetence" and would warrant consideration for "dismissal for cause" under existing university policies.

He said although the university has general guidelines, each department has its own set of procedures for tenure and appointments and also subsequent evaluation of faculty.

"The entire process of appointments and tenure for faculty is based on objective decisions that are made on the merits of their achievements and not just their rank or the amount of time they have spent at K-State," Wallentine said.

Financial planning team takes top honor during national competition in Minneapolis

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For three days, the K-State Personal Financial Planning Team was treated like a Fortune 500 executive.

After arriving in Minneapolis, Minn., for the 2005 American Express Financial Planning Invitational finals, the team was taken by limo to its five-star hotel, where the members would be spending the next several days, all expenses paid.

"It was sort of like 'The Apprentice,'" said John Grable, team adviser and associate professor in family studies and human services. "It was such a high-pressure situation."

The trip was worth it, and not just for the first-class treatment: the team ranked first, earning the Financial Planning Program a $10,000 scholarship.

This was the sixth straight year that K-State sent a team to the national competition. Of those six teams, three have earned a first-place ranking.

This year's K-State team of Ramona Arnold, Chris Gasken and Marc Shaffer, all seniors in financial planning, was selected from a list of applicants and volunteers from the senior financial planning class, Grable said.

"The students have to volunteer, then we rank the students based on GPA and how active they are in the program," Grable said.

The competition was divided into two parts, the preliminary contest and finals. For the preliminary competition, the three-member K-State team created a personal financial plan for a family with a small child. As part of the project, the team covered everything from paying for the child's education and the parents' retirement to taxes and loan intrust.

"It was definitely the most stressful part of the competition," Shaffer said.

The team received the scenario in early February and had to submit its plan by the end of the month. The final project was a 120-page report that included spreadsheets and written states. To create the submission, the team was limited to using Microsoft Word and Microsoft Excel.

"We had to come up with our own spreadsheets and formulas to use," Shaffer said. "A lot of these financial firms have software that do it for you, so we really started from scratch."

After submitting its entry, the team waited until the first week of March to find out that it was one of eight teams to make it to the final competition. About 45 universities had submitted projects.

"Then it was just a question of going to Minneapolis and seeing how well the students performed under a lot of pressure," Grable said.

After arriving, the K-State team began the first part of the final competition. The members were given a "twist" to their previous scenario: the theoretical couple was now buying a retirement home. The group then had to revise both its plan and the presentation it had already prepared.

The next day, the team gave a 20-minute presentation to judges. The presentation was given in the corporate board room of the American Express building and was televised throughout the building.

After the presentation, Shaffer said the competition took on a more relaxed feel. The final competition, a Jeopardy-like game show, was more or less just for fun, he said.

After the competition, the team rode in a limousine back to the airport. The entire trip, including travel expenses, hotel rooms, most meals and a trip to Old Chicago, was paid for by American Express, Grable said.

"Every day there was something new they did for us," Gasken said.

The K-State Financial Planning program will be awarded a $10,000 scholarship, Grable said, and he feels it is well deserved.

"Nationally, K-State has such a good reputation," he said. "We have really good students here, not only in our program but throughout the university."

2,000 new jobs created in Manhattan

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students need only to know where to look to land a job for now and for the summer.

Lyle Butler, of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the Manhattan economy is growing – and that 2,000 net new jobs have been created in the last two years alone.

Butler said all types of jobs are being created, and that students need to just know where to look.

"Good sources for jobs include looking at the local media – by reading newspapers like the Collegian as well as others, and listening to the local radio stations," he said.

Butler said students looking to aim in specific areas with degrees would be best served to create a resume and get in touch with individual companies.

"Many of the larger companies have easily accessible Web sites, while others could be located by going to the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce webpage and locating the businesses in that manner," he said.

Butler said the Manhattan Workforce Center has started posting the available jobs within the state of Kansas.

Jo Ann Brunner, of the Manhattan Workforce Center, said students seeking work need only to spend the time to find the desired position.

"For many part-time jobs and internships, college students first should head to the Career and Employment Services on campus," she said.

Brunner said the centers and the available links that they possess are great tools for the students to use.

"Using links like www.kansasjoblink.com are very easy to access, and most people feel that once they get on, they have control over their own destiny in the job market," she said.

"Jobs from employers become available and posted and then people can access them based on the region they'd like to work, whether it is in Manhattan or back home."

Brunner said that the Manhattan Workforce Center can help to create résumés and set up free e-mail accounts.

EARTH DAY
K-State Recycling invites all students, faculty, staff, and visitors to join in celebrating this year.
EARTH WEEK
K-STATE RECYCLES

K-State Facilities Recycling is celebrating Earth Week 2005 by kicking off the desk-side recycling program in the Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler engineering complex. We have begun placing three compartment recycling containers in their department offices, and will proceed to other buildings as procedures and potential problems are resolved. The following information was provided to Patty Berens, volunteer building recycling coordinator, to email to Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler office occupants.

K-State Facilities Desk-Side Recycling Program

WHAT WE PLAN TO DO:
Facilities Recycling wants to provide a convenient, cost effective way to recycle office solid waste materials. We will initially collect three products: office mix paper, newsprint, and magazines.

HOW WE WILL DO IT:
We will place a three compartment recycling container in each office. This is where we will need the help of office personnel to sort the three types of paper into the three compartment containers. The existing trash can is still for trash, and the three compartment recycling container will be filled with office mix; bond paper, envelopes, copy paper, computer paper, etc., in the large center container, newspapers in one saddle container, and magazines in the other (or in any configuration you wish). Then we will be need the help of the custodial personnel to empty the containers for transport to an appropriate recycling facility. The custodial specialists in your area will coordinate with the recycling personnel to pick up one type of recyclable paper one day, another the next, trash the next, in whatever order and frequency is needed to maintain an orderly flow of material out of the building. Trash will still be emptied daily from class rooms and rest rooms.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?
Any time you need to discard a piece of paper, look and see if it can be recycled. If so, then place it in the appropriate compartment in the recycling container. Please continue to take your home recycling directly to a recycling facility such as Howie's Recycling Center. This program is designed to reduce the solid waste that we currently haul to the Riley County Transfer Station.

WHO WILL BE INVOLVED?
We will need the help of office occupants and custodial specialists, cooperating for success.

WHAT IF SOMETHING GOES WRONG?
If you have questions about recycling or the service we provide, please call 532-6446 or your building recycling coordinator.

Student for Environmental Action are hosting a program on Wind Energy at 7 p.m., Thursday, April 21 in the Union Flint Hills room. Please check their website at http://www.k-state.edu/environment/ for additional information.

You are also encouraged to recycle white bond paper, office mix paper, computer paper, shredded paper, cardboard, newspaper, magazines, telephone books, plastic bottles, aluminum cans, wooden pallets, computers and other electronic equipment (with appropriate signed DA-110s) at campus collection sites or by calling 238-6446 for special pickups. You may also visit our website at: http://www.ksu.edu/facilities/recycling/.

Please encourage your friends, family, and coworkers to celebrate Earth Day by recycling.

Cats find success in Ohio, look ahead to Big 12

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf squad fared well in Ohio this weekend, taking fourth in the 15-team field at the FirstEnergy Intercollegiate in Akron, Ohio.

Still, Coach Tim Norris said the Wildcats have room for improvement.

"It was a great golf course and we had great weather," Norris said. "We did good, but I think we are capable of doing better."

With a combined team score of 887, K-State notched its sixth top-five finish this season – the second most in school history.

Once again, senior Matt Van Cleave paced the Wildcats, placing fifth with a score of 217. It was Van Cleave's eighth consecutive top-15 finish and his fourth top-five of the spring.

"Matt played excellent golf, again," Norris said. "He's had the best season of any golfer I've ever had at K-State."

Van Cleave said his game was not necessarily all there in Ohio, but he managed to perform well in one aspect each day.

"In the first round, I was hitting the ball well but not putting well," Van Cleave said. "In the second round, I was putting well but not hitting the ball well.

"I just need to put it all together for the Big 12."

Trailing Van Cleave was senior Nick Schumacher, who tied for 12th with a score of 223, his fourth top-20 finish of the spring.

Schumacher, echoing Norris' sentiments, said he was satisfied with his showing at the FirstEnergy, but he is capable of performing better.

"Overall it was a pretty good tournament for me," Schumacher said. "I would've liked to be a couple spots higher. There is

K-State looks to stay perfect against WSU on the season, extend winning streak

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Brad Hill and his K-State Wildcats will look to keep a winning streak alive against the Wichita State Shockers today.

K-State (17-17, 4-11) will travel to Wichita, to face the Shockers (31-11, 6-3) in the final meeting between the two teams this season.

"It's going to be tough because we are pitching some guys who haven't pitched very much," Hill said. "It's an intimidating place to play, and their fans are pretty enthusiastic about baseball."

The Wildcats sent the Shockers home with a loss on March 30 in Manhattan, as K-State upended the No. 21 Shockers 6-5.

"They are going to come after us pretty hard down there, but we will go after them too," Hill said.

K-State is coming off its first Big 12 series win of the season this weekend, which dug the Wildcats out of the Big 12 cellar.

The Wildcats won the last two games of the series against Texas Tech in dramatic fashion, including Sunday's 13-12 comeback win in which they were down by eight runs.

"(Sunday's win) shows that this team has tremendous heart," junior Joe Roundy said.

Sophomore Jared Goedert, who led the Wildcats by going 4-6 with 5 RBI, agreed with Roundy, crediting their comeback to their ability to keep a positive attitude.

Wichita State is coming off a weekend series against the University of Northern Iowa. The Shockers took two of three games from UNI.

The Shockers are led by the bat of Derek Schermerhorn, who is currently riding a 34-game hitting streak and batting .373.

For the Wildcats, Goedert and junior Brandon Farr are both in the top 10 in the Big 12 in hitting, batting .365 and .368, respectively.

After injuries forced Goedert to miss some playing time, Hill said the team is

NBA scouts interested in Massey after Portsmouth

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

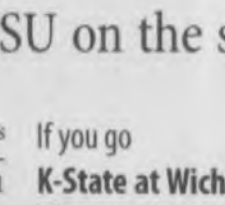
There is little doubt the player K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge will miss most next season will be second-team All-Big 12 Conference selection forward Jeremiah Massey.

After he led the team with an average of 17.9 points and 6.9 rebounds per game this season, Massey continued to play well at the Portsmouth (Va.) Invitational this past weekend.

One of 64 players, Massey led his Norfolk Sports Club team in scoring, averaging 18 points and 7.7 rebounds during the invitational.

The performance turned the heads of some NBA scouts, and Wooldridge said he was contacted soon after Portsmouth.

"We've heard from one NBA team that they think they would have an interest in him coming in and playing on their summer league team," Wooldridge said.



An assistant coach for the Chicago Bulls from 1998-2000, Wooldridge said Massey could eventually play in the NBA.

"He will, if he so chooses to be, a professional basketball player at some level," Wooldridge said. "Whether that's the NBA initially or the NBA somewhere down the line, that'll be up to him and the people who actually make those decisions."

Drafting Mahoney will pay off

Congratulations to the Connecticut Sun and coach Mike Thibault, you picked up one heck of a basketball player.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

With the 34th pick in Saturday's Women's National Basketball Association draft, Thibault used his third-round on K-State's own No. 34, forward Megan Mahoney.

While the big news of the day was forward Kendra Wecker's selection as the No. 4 pick to the San Antonio Silver Stars, the fact that the Sun chose Mahoney at a time when her basketball future is still a little cloudy is an equally huge story.

Often described as the glue that held the Wildcats together over the past four years – the most successful four-year run in school history – Mahoney, K-State's all-time assists leader with 589, did it all for K-State before she ruptured her Achilles tendon on March 12 against Baylor in the Big 12 Tournament championship game.

The injury ended her K-State basketball career, and after having surgery to repair the damage to her tendon, Mahoney now faces months of rehabilitation to get back into playing shape, making it impossible for her to play this season.

But Thibault said Mahoney was drafted with the future in mind.

"Megan Mahoney is a future's pick," he said on the Sun's team Web site. "We looked at it as that third round pick getting her and knowing she wouldn't play is better than we'd get earlier in the draft next year."

Thibault is right, you aren't going to get a much better steal than drafting Mahoney this year, because Mahoney is a warrior, and when she does return to the basketball court, the other 12 teams in the WNBA will wish they had done what Thibault did.

Mahoney was a warrior on the floor for the Wildcats, and quite often was called upon to make the critical shot or grab the necessary rebound, and she always did it, no questions asked.

When Wecker, the Big 12 Player of the Year, went down with a sprained ankle early in the season, it was Mahoney who carried K-State, leading the team in scoring in Wecker's place.

And in the remarkable 72-69 victory over Texas in the Big 12 Tournament, it was

Over the weekend, K-State's English Equestrian team finished second at the IHSA Zone Championships, and the Western team took first at the Zone 9 Championships, sending both teams to Nationals, which will be in Columbus, Ohio on May 5-8.

The English team finished with 45 points, six points behind the University of Wisconsin at Madison. Individually, senior Natalie Bennett and juniors Jenae Grossart and Summer Hamil qualified for Nationals.

Along with placing first with 36 points, the Western team qualified senior Melissa Becking, junior Lindsey Hicks and sophomore Valerie Meyer for Nationals.

TENNIS | Rosenberg earns weekly Big 12 honor

On Monday, K-State senior Maria Rosenberg was named the Big 12 Conference women's tennis Athlete of the Week for April 11-17.

Rosenberg

Rosenberg earned the honor after she became K-State's all-time leader in singles wins after her win over Colorado's Lynzee Kever. Rosenberg now has 78 career singles wins.

This season she has posted a career-high in wins with a 22-13 record. This is the first Big 12 honor for the Wildcats this season.

NFL | Chiefs agree to 1-year deal with Harts

The Kansas City Chiefs on Monday reached a one-year agreement with backup safety Shaunard Harts.

No additional details of the deal with the 6-foot, 210 pound restricted free agent were released.

Harts

Harts played in all 16 games last season, starting in six.

He made 58 tackles, 34 of them solo.

Kansas City acquired the Boise State standout in the seventh round of the 2001 draft. In 51 games with the Chiefs, he has accumulated 163 tackles, two sacks, two interceptions with one touchdown, two fumble recoveries and five forced fumbles.

CYC | Armstrong says he will retire after Tour de France

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Lance Armstrong will retire from professional cycling after this summer's Tour de France, ending one of the great careers in all sports.

Armstrong

The 33-year-old Texan will attempt to win his record seventh straight Tour de France in July. Before Armstrong, Miguel Indurain's five straight Tour de France wins were the record.

Armstrong's possible retirement plans had become the focus of growing speculation as he spoke in recent months that he wants to spend more time with his three children and in his campaign against cancer.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Sam Mills, an undersized linebacker who became a Pro Bowl player with New Orleans and Carolina and was later an assistant coach for the Panthers, died Monday after fighting cancer for nearly two years, the Panthers said. He was 45.

Mills

Mills, who was diagnosed with cancer of the small intestine in August 2003 but continued to coach Carolina's linebackers between chemotherapy treatments, died at his home.

A five-time Pro Bowl selection, the 5-foot-9, 225-pound Mills spent the final three seasons of his 12-year NFL career with the Panthers, beginning with their inaugural season in 1995.

Emotional music history

Ian Curtis, Kurt Cobain provided world passionate lyrics; gave in to suicide

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"The game of life is hard to play/I'm going to lose it anyway/The losing card I'll someday lay/So this is all I have to say: Suicide is Painless."
*– Johnny Mandel (Theme from M*A*S*H)*

Life is hard. Sometimes it can just become too much for one person to handle. The personal turmoil that accompanies depression can make wonderful art, but more often than not, depressive artists cut their lives short, taking with them the wonderful gifts they shared with the music world. This music history will examine two artists lost to suicide.

IAN CURTIS

He was born on July 15, 1956. Curtis is known for his haunting lyrics and unusual stage antics as the frontman of the post-punk group Joy Division.

Curtis was the main singer/songwriter of his band, Warsaw, in 1977. The band changed its name to Joy Division within the next year. In 1979, it released its first LP, "Unknown Pleasures," which was met with tremendous critical acclaim.

The most noteworthy aspect of Joy Division was the new sound the group touted. It had the same anger and emotion as punk music but instead of expressing those feelings outwardly, singers such as Curtis often would have lyrics wrought with isolation, melancholy and raw emotional introspection. This new style of moody expression was touted as post-punk.

As a touring band, Joy Division was most noted for Curtis' on-stage performances. Often Curtis would jerk his body violently and bring an intensity to the stage that was rarely seen in bands. These odd movements could have been attributed to Curtis' susceptibility to epileptic seizures.

In 1980, Joy Division released its second album, "Closer." The record is an amazing feat of lyrical desolation mixed with haunting music. Curtis' lyrics were as dark as ever as he examined his epilepsy, his depression and his failing marriage. In the song "Passover," Curtis proclaims: "This is a crisis I knew had to come/Destroying the balance I've kept."

"Closer" is a masterpiece that influenced many bands, including The Cure, The Smiths and Depeche Mode. On May 18, 1980, life seemed to be too much and Curtis hung himself and his cat in his wife's kitchen. Following Curtis' suicide, the remaining members of Joy Division reformed into the synth-rock outfit New Order. Curtis has influenced countless musicians with his brutal honesty and the pain he expressed through his music.

KURT COBAIN

He was an artist who was influenced by Curtis and Joy Division.

He was the spokesman of a generation that found that fame was too much to handle.

Cobain was born on Feb. 20, 1967, in Washington state. Cobain was hyperactive as a child and was given Ritalin to focus and sedatives to help him sleep. He became so much of a problem for his parents that he was sent to live with relatives.

On his 14th birthday, Cobain received a guitar and began experimenting with different sounds and styles. Cobain eventually dropped out of high school to work, but this proved difficult because he had trouble holding a job for long.

In 1986, Cobain formed Nirvana as the guitarist and singer along with Chris Novaselic on bass. Various drummers were in the band throughout their career. The band released its first album, "Bleach" in 1989. It flopped, so Cobain switched to Geffen records.

In 1991, the band recruited drummer Dave Grohl and produced its second album, "Nevermind." It was met with rave reviews and intense fan hysteria. Cobain was uncomfortable with his newfound fame, as he preferred intimate nightclubs to arenas and large stadiums. Cobain began taking harder drugs such as morphine and heroin.

In 1992, Cobain married Courtney Love and had a child, Frances Bean. Unfortunately, things took a turn for the worse when Cobain overdosed on heroin in 1993. He entered rehab but left the program unfinished.

In 1993, Nirvana released its final studio album, "In Utero." The band played an MTV Unplugged concert and a concert in Munich in early 1994. After that concert, Cobain was hospitalized in a coma. After recovering, he left the hospital and went missing for three days. He was found in his house with a fatal gunshot wound.

Curtis and Cobain show that the pressures of being a musician can often be difficult to handle. Their gifts to us will not be forgotten; they have touched countless fans and musicians throughout their short, but prosperous, careers. These musicians may be gone, but their music will live on in the hearts of fans forever.

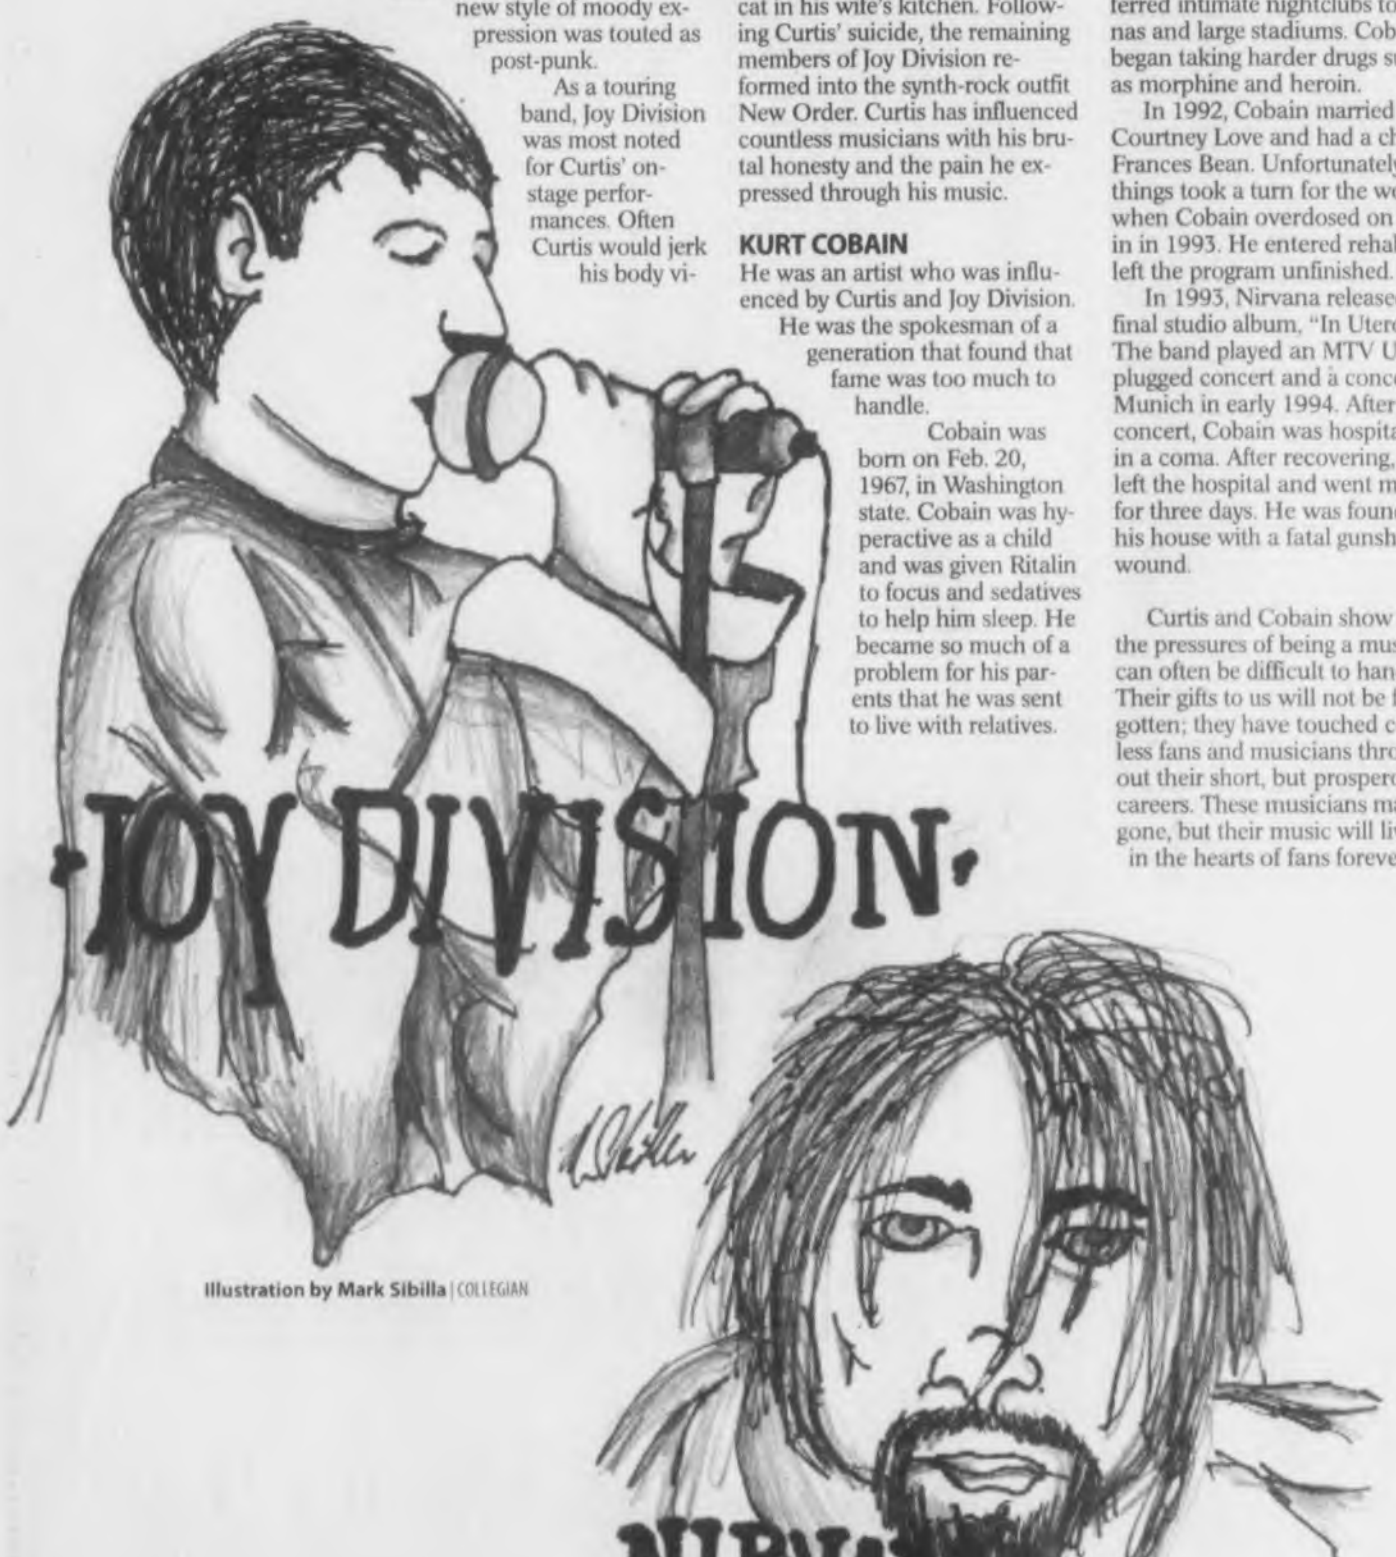

Illustration by Mark Sibilla | COLLEGIAN

"Closer" Joy Division's final album with Curtis. It is a masterpiece of gloomy rock. Much of what is on the album hints at Curtis' eventual suicide.

"Unknown Pleasures" Bringing a sound that was described as "post-punk," it had the emotional energy and weight of punk, but Ian Curtis turns his anguish inward.

"In Utero" The final Nirvana studio album. A more stripped-down affair, it contains some of Cobain's darkest lyrics and some of the band's best material.

"MTV Unplugged in New York" A live album that is sad for two reasons. One is its posthumous release after Cobain's death; the other reason is it shows how great MTV used to be.

"Nevermind" This wasn't Nirvana's first album, but it was the first one that truly introduced them to the world. The album ushered in the grunge age and has been inspirational to countless musicians.

CELEB NEWS

ESPN to take over Monday Night Football from ABC

Walt Disney Co. cable sports network ESPN will take over Monday Night Football from its corporate cousin ABC in an eight-year deal beginning in 2006, ESPN said on Monday.

The National Football League said it had signed a six-season deal for broadcaster NBC to show Sunday night football games starting in 2006.

NBC, owned by General Electric Co., each year will carry 16 Sunday-night games and the Thursday season opener. It will also broadcast the Super Bowl, the most widely watched U.S. television show, in 2009 and 2012.

A person familiar with the deal said it was worth about $600 million per year.

Martha Stewart gets own channel on Sirius

Six weeks after being released from federal prison, Martha Stewart has reached a deal with Sirius Satellite Radio Inc. to create a 24-hour channel featuring cooking, gardening and entertaining programming for women.

Coming on the heels of separate deals to create a version of "The Apprentice" and a daily cooking show, the four-year agreement announced Monday with Sirius marks Stewart's latest move to rebuild her business after serving time for lying to the government about a stock sale.

Stewart, who has parlayed her success at homemaking advice into a magazine, TV show and merchandising empire, has dabbled in radio work before, making 90-second "Ask Martha" radio segments.

'Morvern Callar' captures isolation of music

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A tableau of experiences from a suicide to traveling the Spanish desert, Morvern Callar is an overlooked triumph, reminiscent of an understated "Drugstore Cowboy."

This relatively new film, released in 2002, from Scottish director Lynne Ramsay and the music-oriented PALM Pictures is based on a 1995 novel by Alan Warner of the same title.

There is no film that captures the isolation and reliance of the modern musical experience as well as this, making us question strongly whether we are cyborgs yet.

Ramsay's visual and auditory coming-of-age story for the contemplative young woman has all of the emotional subtlety of the New York writer, director, composer and visual artist Vincent Gallo.

Both Gallo and Ramsay use swift jump cuts, a technique adopted from the modern short story, and personal focus to allow an element of tainted exhibitionism to pervade their films and give their characters a sense of humility.

The moving image of Morvern (Samantha Morton) curled beside her boyfriend's corpse as she drags her fingers along her boyfriend's slit wrists is equally startling and more deprived than Gallo's gorgeous domestic framing, giving personality to an alienating and impersonal hotel room.

Ramsay's introductory shot is intriguing for its sense of continuity and for its deeply lit emphasis and filtering of light, as Callar is sighted by the spotlight of a boat and briefly lifts her skirt in an act of exhibitionism.

Ramsay's cinematographic framing, though less innovative due to the characters' lack of experience in the Scottish environ, in which all countries take on similar frames, brings life to death, just as Gallo brings life to a homophobic inmate through Morvern's and Lanna's (Kathleen McDermott) bathtub scenes and intimacy.

The way Morton is filmed on the beach is similar to the way Jan-Michael Vincent is filmed in the scenes when Gallo calls him for help at his mother's home. These frames are almost Rubenesque in lighting as Morton's legs glimmer under the boat's spotlight without judgment of her broader bodily frame.

Both Morton's and McDermott's characters spend a good part of the film outside of Scotland, while the atmosphere of Scotland is largely contained in a local bar.

Both are able to turn to Morvern's grandmother, while Gallo's character's parents remain largely unsympathetic.

One of Ramsay's weakest points is in Morvern's reliance upon a random man to complete her journey in a Spanish hotel toward the end of the film.

Although many critics have lambasted Morton's accent as unconvincing, it lends itself to the international feel of Ramsay's euphonic and spatially reverent achievement in Scottish film noire.

Nationality disappears for Morvern as she discovers her newfound upward mobility after publishing a novel written by her boyfriend, who inexplicably committed suicide in the opening tableau.

In response to critics who have said the soundtrack seemed "tacked on" with an overbearing application of underground greats: perhaps, being overly literal, the tape is not her own, but her recently deceased boyfriend's which he leaves to her for Christmas, explaining the Christmas undertones of Aphex Twin's compositions for Ramsay's film.

The cassette tape, a seeming objet trouve, is an ironic statement of the ability of culture as a function of the individual and the old cliche that the best art comes from unpromising circles – as well as novels.

As Callar marches through the grocery store in a poignant montage of tags and glossy packaging, she is listening, through her signature headphones, to Lee Hazelwood and Nancy Sinatra singing about drug addiction in "Some Velvet Morning."

A theme of sexual betrayal and unexpected encounters pervades the film. Callar's recently stranded character is buffered by platonic showers between her and Lanna, an example of homosocial bonding, relieving her immediate need for companionship.

"Morvern Callar" is a story of a woman coming out of a hedonistic environment into a newly awakened state where she finds joy in travel like a drug and has to return home to Lanna.

Before returning home she has an encounter with a young man in a hotel room who she meets through stardom and demonstrates the natural ease of sex, something exploited in the United States as a negative counterpoint to a Christian existence.

To catch a glimpse into the extremely human side of the American cyborg, watch "Morvern Callar" and find yourself between your ear buds.

to our mom, pam,
thanks for all you do!

MOM,

You truly are an AMAZING woman and we could not ask for a more KIND & GENEROUS Housemother. We are so lucky to have you in our lives.

What would we do without you?!

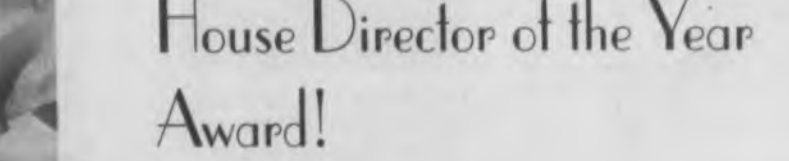
DELTA LOVE,

The ladies of Delta Delta Delta ΔΔΔ

Dear Mom Mitchell,

Thank you so much for all you do for us. We truly appreciate your hard work and dedication. You are truly deserving of the House Director of the Year Award!

Love,
Your girls of Kappa Alpha Theta



Dianna,

We would like to say thanks for all the hard work and time you give to us.

Happy Housemom's Day!

The men of Delta Upsilon

Dear Mom,

Everything you do for us is greatly appreciated, be it your kind words to brighten our day, or remembering the little things that make us laugh. No one can replace you in our hearts. You are there through the trying times, and our proudest moments, and even when we have graduated we will remember the times spent with the guys, and especially the times spent with you.

Sincerely, The Men of Lambda Chi Alpha

Mama Barb,

You have done amazing things for the house during this past year. We can't thank you enough for all of your hard work; we really appreciate it. We all enjoy stopping by your room to knit, grab candy or just chat.

Thank you so much for being there for all of us.

Your Kappa Delta Daughters

UV rays increase cancer risk

By Lara Hastings
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The phone rings continually and the line of people grows longer as Rachel Long, tanning professional at Sun Connection tanning salon, hurries to help customers, clean tanning beds and schedule appointments.

Long said the busiest time for the salon begins about a month before spring break and continues steadily thorough June or July.

"We are usually completely booked for the night by one in the afternoon everyday," she said.

Year-round bronzed skin has become a fashion trend, especially among young people.

Kristina Iverson, professional tanning consultant at Xtreme Tanning salon, said one of the reasons tanning is so popular is because tan skin makes a person appear thinner and healthier.

"Tan skin is what is in right now," she said. "It gives off a healthy look."

However, that little bit of color gained from a few sessions in the tanning bed may increase a person's risk for skin cancer.

According to the American Academy of Dermatology, out of the 1 million new cases of skin cancer that will be diagnosed this year, about 105,750 cases will be the deadliest form of skin cancer, melanoma. This is a 10 percent increase from 2004.

Rose Kreller, nurse practitioner at Advanced Dermatology, said although there may not be an apparent increase in skin cancer among people ages 18 to 24, the effects of ultraviolet ray exposure can be seen at all ages.

"We have seen melanomas in 20-year-olds and teenagers all the way up to 90-year-olds," she said.

Although many indoor tanning salons such as Sun Connection and Xtreme Tanning post warnings that suggest the amount of time a person should stay in the tanning bed based on skin tone to prevent burning, Kreller said there is no such thing as a healthy tan.

Exposure to UV rays from natural sunlight or from a tanning bed, even if a person does not burn, can increase a person's risk for skin cancer in the future.

"The UV rays emitted from tanning lamps are many times more intense than natural sunlight," she said. "We do not recommend them at all."

Not only is there an increased risk of skin cancer from UV ray exposure, but Kreller said it can also cause premature aging, dryness, wrinkles and brown spots on the skin.

The only way to avoid skin cancer and other effects of the sun is to protect the skin from UV rays. She recommends avoiding the sun during the hours of direct sunlight – which are about 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. – using sunscreen of at least SPF 15 everyday and reapplying the sunscreen every two hours during prolonged exposure.

Black smoke from Sistine Chapel signals another day of waiting

By William J. Kole
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY – Black smoke poured from the Sistine Chapel's chimney Monday evening, signaling that the cardinals sequestered inside for the first papal conclave of the new millennium failed to elect a new pope.

The black smoke emanating shortly after 8 p.m. (1 p.m. CDT) meant the 115 voting cardinal "princes" of the church would retire for the night and return to the chapel Tuesday morning for more balloting in their search for a successor to Pope John Paul II.

If two morning ballots fail to produce a pope, the cardinals could hold two more votes Tuesday afternoon.

Some 40,000 people who packed St. Peter's Square to stare at the stovepipe jutting from the chapel roof shouted, "It's black! It's black!" and snapped photos with their cell phones.

White smoke will tell the world that the church's 265th pontiff has been chosen to succeed John Paul, who died April 2 at age 84.

The cardinals, from six continents and representing 52 countries, began their secret deliberations late in the afternoon after the ceremonial closing of the massive doors of the chapel, which is decorated with frescoes by Michelangelo and wired with electronic jamming devices to thwart eavesdropping.

The excitement built as darkness set in and pilgrims watched close-ups of the chimney on giant video screens.

As the smoke began pouring from the chimney, shouts of "e bianco! e bianco!" – "It's white! It's white!" – rippled through the crowd.

But the cries quickly gave way to sighs of disappointment as the smoke blackened.

"At first it seemed that we had a new pope, so I had a lot of emotions. But of course we didn't really expect to have a pope on the first day," said Alessia Di Caro, a 23-year-old university student.

There was initial confusion when a Vatican Radio commentator said, "It seems white," as the first puffs emerged from the chimney. But as thick, darker smoke followed, the station proclaimed it black.

"It looks like the stove wasn't working well at first," an announcer joked a few minutes later.

Thanks, mom . . .you're the best! House Mom Appreciation 2005

Painkillers' safety questioned

By Marilynn Marchione
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. – With prescription drugs Vioxx and Bextra already pulled from the market, a study has raised disturbing questions about the heart safety of long-term use of over-the-counter pain relievers such as Advil, Motrin and Aleve.

Smokers in Norway who took such drugs for at least six months had twice the risk of dying of a heart attack, stroke or other heart-related problem.

The findings came from a study of whether these pain relievers could prevent oral cancer. The drugs did, in fact, cut the risk of developing oral cancer in half, but the deaths that were prevented were offset by the increased risk of dying from cardiovascular disease, according to the study, reported Monday at an American Association for Cancer Research conference in Anaheim.

The study was relatively small – 908 people – and involved people prone to heart problems and cancer because they smoked. But specialists said it supports the Food and Drug Administration's recent decision to warn about long-term use of all such painkillers except aspirin.

The findings add to the suspicion that the heart risk extends beyond the so-called cox-2 drugs – Bextra, Vioxx and Celebrex – to the larger family of medications known as non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, or NSAIDs, which include naproxen, ibuprofen and virtually all other over-the-counter pain relievers except acetaminophen or Tylenol.

In recent months, many doctors have switched patients to these over-the-counter medications, believing them to be safer alternatives.

Vioxx was pulled from the market last fall when a different study, testing whether it could prevent colon cancer, showed a higher heart disease risk. The FDA recently persuaded Pfizer to stop selling Bextra for safety reasons, but Pfizer's Celebrex was allowed to remain.

Bush pitches Social Security to Republicans, still faces resistance

By Nedra Pickler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. – President Bush on Monday made a fresh pitch for his Social Security overhaul in Republican-friendly South Carolina, yet a Republican congressman made it clear that Bush still faces resistance within his own party.

While Bush still hasn't offered a specific plan to strengthen the nation's retirement benefit system, he encouraged more lawmakers to offer their ideas as South Carolina's two Republican senators have.

"These men have been leaders in the debate," Bush said. "They've stepped up and said, 'Here are some ideas I want you to consider.'"

Bush wants to allow younger workers to divert some of their Social Security tax contributions into private accounts invested in stocks and bonds, but some Republicans have been slow to embrace the idea. Democrats say they are united in opposing a plan they contend would break a social contract by shifting Social Security from a government-guaranteed benefit to a personal investment subject to the risks of the market.

Rep. Gil Gutknecht, R-Minn., said during an editorial board meeting with the (Rochester) Post-Bulletin that Bush must overcome a "credibility problem" to revamp Social Security.

The congressman said many people think the president underestimated the cost of the Iraqi war, then overestimated the benefits of Medicare's prescription drug plan.

OKLAHOMA CITY | Somber mood for anniversary course two hours after the bomb went off. His announcement, he later learned, was the first time one of his students heard the news.

"A young woman in the front row held up her hand and asked what I was talking about," Smethers said. "I explained to her what happened and her face turned ashen."

Smethers found out the student's aunt worked at the federal building and was killed, he said. Her body one of the last ones taken.

Chad Weiberg, director of corporate relations at the KSU Foundation, has similar memories from 10 years ago.

A recent graduate from OSU, Weiberg was working for the university's athletic department and said he remembers an odd call into one of the local radio stations.

"I had the radio on and the DJ in between songs had gotten a call from someone in Stillwater asking if he had heard any reports on an earthquake because his windows had rattled," Weiberg said.

The rattling windows, Weiberg and the community later realized, were the aftershock of the bombing at the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which was about 65 miles away. It wasn't until hours later, though, that Weiberg said he realized the horror of the event.

"For a long time all they knew was an explosion in downtown Oklahoma City," he said. "It wasn't until I was home for lunch when I saw the television. It was so much worse than anything you could imagine."

A man holds a candle during prayer services at Oklahoma City National Memorial on Sunday. Victims' families, survivors and rescue workers are gathering in Oklahoma City to remember the 10th anniversary of the bombing that killed 168 people on April 19, 1995.

Even worse, Smethers said, was when people found out it was an act of domestic terrorism.

In the initial stages, people began speculating Arab-Americans may have done it, Smethers said, which worried the professor, who also worked with many Arab graduate students.

Weiberg said he recalls similar memories.

Immediately after news reports of the bombing, Weiberg said he remembers police officers stationed at the local mosque.

"There was fear of a backlash at the Muslim students," he said.

And when Timothy McVeigh and accomplice Terry Nichols were caught for the terrorist act, Smethers said emotions ran wild.

"My thought at the time was, 'My goodness, how could you hate this country so much you would do something like that? Who in the world would kill innocent children?'

"That was a very unforgivable moment."

It was moment that brought numerous changes, including the restructuring of federal buildings and offices, media coverage and, most of all, the naivete of many Americans. These lessons came into play, they said, six years later during the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

"I think that after the Oklahoma City bombing, when coverage was provided of Sept. 11, 2001, we maybe were a bit smarter," Smethers said.

"Oklahoma City taught us that there could be acts of terrorism on American soil."

MIP | Number of citations up for underage drinking hours on four separate evenings during March, April and May, Boyda said. While the officers will focus on Aggieville during busy weeks, house parties are the primary target, Boyda said.

"I was a college student and I understand there's underage drinking," Boyda said. "But if you have underage drinking and you're drawing attention to yourself, there's going to be consequences."

Lauren Garten, sophomore in mass communications, fell victim to the new circumstances. At a house party about two weeks ago, she was surprised when an officer approached her and issued her a minor in possession citation, she said.

"I was standing outside by myself talking on the phone, and he kind of came out of nowhere," Garten said. "He was actually really nice – I was just kind of shocked because I was alone and it didn't seem like the party was that loud."

Garten will face legal consequences.

Abby Hamilton, of Manhattan City Court, said those issued MIPs have two options of punishment.

The first option is a $200 fine, a $116 court fee, a 30-day driver's license suspension and a conviction on one's record.

The second option, while more expensive, is seemingly less strict.

"If you go this route, you get placed on our diversion program, which is $416, for three months," Hamilton said. "Pretty much all you have to do is stay out of trouble during those three months.

"Your license is not suspended and you don't get a conviction on your record."

According to the RCPD statute statistics, crimes involving alcohol and minors, which include furnishing alcohol to minors, minor in possession and purchase of alcohol by a minor, have decreased from 386 offenses in 2002 to 95 offenses as of Jan. 1, 2005.

Boyda said he hopes the plan is successful and the trend continues.

At the end of May, the RCPD will re-evaluate underage drinking statistics and decide if the implemented plan was effective and if it needs to be continued.

"We prefer that if you're underage, you wait, but we do understand it's a college town," Boyda said.

happy to have Goedert healthy and consistently in the lineup.

"He is a consistent performer," Hill said. "You know what you are going to get out of him every day."

Goedert said the Texas Tech series did a lot for the team as it heads into mid-week action.

"It's the first (series win) for us and we can build on this," he said. "We can build some confidence going into Tuesday."

Junior Brett Muegge will get the start for the Wildcats – his first action since his rough outing against NAIA opponent William Jewell last Wednesday. Muegge is 1-2 this season with a 7.02 ERA in 16.2 innings pitched.

"Against William Jewell, hitters got ahead of him early and just smoked balls," Hill said. "He started trying to guide the ball and lost 4-5 miles per hour off his velocity.

"If he can throw some ground-ball pitches and give us some good innings, we will be pleased."

The Wildcats will take the field against the Shockers at 7 p.m. in Wichita.

definitely room for improvement."

Junior Jonathan James followed closely behind Schumacher to tie for 18th with a score of 225. Freshman Kyle Yonke captured a tie at 46th with a score of 232, while junior Ben Kern tied for 49th with a score of 233.

Norris said although he was pleased with his players' solid effort this weekend, he has greater expectations of his team.

"Our biggest strength is that everyone knows they can play a little better," Norris said. "We've got to overachieve a little bit."

With the Big 12 Championships quickly approaching, Norris said the Wildcats will take full advantage of the days in between.

"Now it's time to prepare for the Big 12," Norris said. "We're in a competitive conference, so we've got to step it up."

Van Cleave said he agreed.

"At the Big 12, we need to play well for all three rounds – something we haven't been able to do yet this season," Van Cleave said.

Since the regular season is complete, postseason play will begin April 29-May 1 in Trinity, Texas, at the Big 12 Championships.

Mahoney who hit the shot to tie the game at 67-67 after the Wildcats were down 17-0 to start the game.

Those are the kinds of efforts that will make Mahoney a great pro.

Mahoney said she is grateful to the Connecticut Sun for having faith in her and giving her a chance.

"It's a great honor that they have given me the opportunity to play despite the injury," she said.

It will be interesting to watch Mahoney's journey to return to the court, this time as a professional, but when she does, rest assured it will be done with the same passion and desire she played with while wearing the purple and white.

265th Pope named

Cardinals elect conservative German

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The bells at St. Peter's Square rang and white smoke poured from the chimney of the Sistine Chapel shortly after 11 a.m. Central Standard Time, 6 p.m. in Rome.

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger of Germany emerged and gave his traditional blessing and, after taking the name of Benedict XVI, the cardinals delivered their pledge of loyalty, and the Catholic Church named its 265th pope.

Ratzinger, 78, performed the homily at Pope John Paul II's funeral and proudly followed his late predecessor after a 17-day during which the church mourned the death of a great man and awaited anxiously for another leader.

It was one of the fastest elections in history, but for many, Ratzinger's election did not come as a surprise. He was already a powerful leader in the Church, having spent much of his priesthood at the Vatican and the International Church as well.

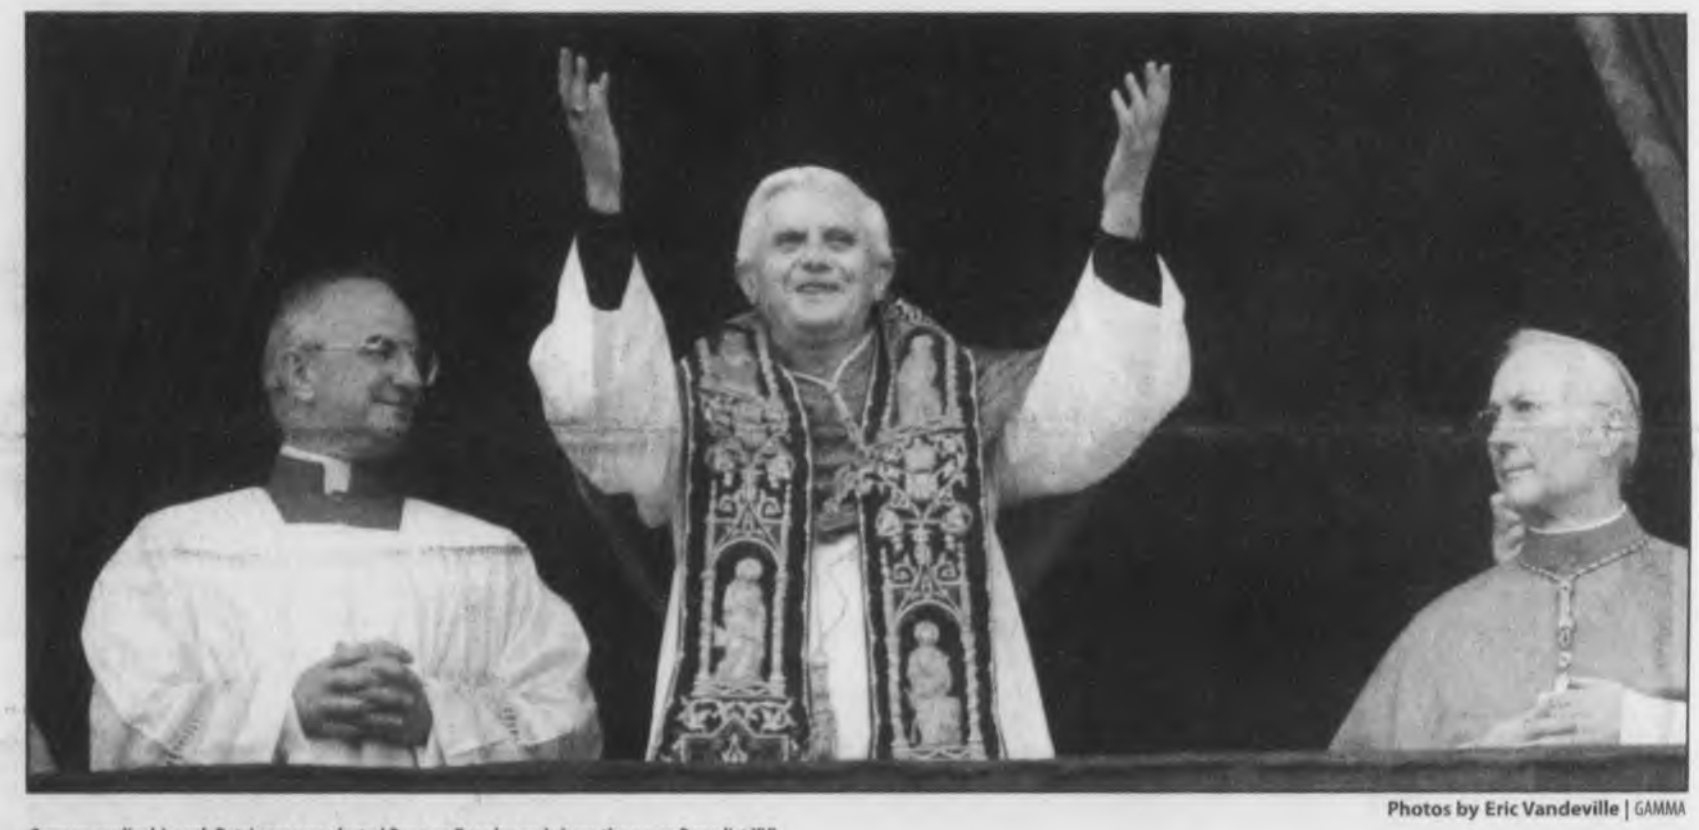
Father Keith Weber of St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, said the decision was made quickly, yet wisely.

"The cardinals already have a pretty good idea of who they're going to vote for because they've been together for the past couple of weeks and there has been a lot of discussion going on," Weber said.

Pope Benedict XVI was also a prime candidate for the papacy, having many of the same theologies and aspirations as Pope John Paul II. Conservative and resilient, he was one of three out of 115 cardinals that was not appointed by John Paul II.

"I think that one of the things he'll offer our church is stability and direction. Pope John Paul and Cardinal Ratzinger were truly in one mindset. Having him as our next pope will continue that momentum that Pope John Paul gave our church," Weber said.

Also, the fact that Pope Benedict XVI is already 78 years old factored into the election results. Pope Benedict is the oldest elected pope since Clement XII, who ruled in the 1700s.



Weber said that although the new pope is older, his rule will influence the Catholic Church for the better.

"He's in great health, very vibrant, with a lot of energy, and I think he'll serve our church well. He'll be able to travel and talk to thousands of people wherever he goes," Weber said.

New papacy begins immediately; ceremony to take place Sunday

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger accepted the election as Pope and chose the name that he will be called, his papacy immediately began.

The formal installation, or "solemn liturgical rite of inauguration," according to Vatican, will be on Sunday.

It will be lead by Jorge Arturo Medina Estevez, the senior cardinal deacon.

The ceremony will commence with the cardinals reciting the Lord's Prayer.

All of the cardinals will then convey their reverence to Ratzinger, the new pope.

They will embrace and reciprocate the "Kiss of Peace."

During the installation, the new pope will receive his pallium, a white wool wrap embellished with six black silk crosses that represents his authority.

It will be placed around his shoulders and held in place with three gold pins.

As the service comes to an end, the new pope will give an apostolic blessing to Vatican City and the rest of the world.

Rader waives right to hearing

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – For decades since the strangulation deaths of his parents and two younger siblings, Charlie Otero has sought answers to why his family was murdered.

Rader

Now, 31 years after their deaths, Otero and other family members of the BTK killer's 10 victims will have to wait even longer for answers.

The man charged in the BTK serial killings waived his right to a preliminary hearing Tuesday, an acknowledgment that the state has enough evidence to go to trial. That means prosecutors will not have to publicly reveal any of their case against Dennis Rader until trial.

Rader, formerly a city ordinance enforcement officer for Park City, Kan., was arrested Feb. 25 and is charged with 10 counts of first-degree murder. Rader, 60, will enter a plea at his arraignment, set for May 3.

Otero said in a phone interview from his home in Albuquerque, N.M., that he was "extremely disappointed" that he would have to wait to hear the evidence in the case.

On Jan. 15, 1974, the three surviving children of Joseph and Julie Otero came home from school to find their parents and two other siblings, Josephine, 11, and Joseph II, 9, dead at the family's Wichita home.

Otero said he was anticipating one day testifying against Rader.

"I am looking forward to seeing him face-to-face," said Otero, who was 15 when he found his parents' bound bodies in their bedroom in 1974. Police told him later that his brother and sister were also killed.

The strangulation of Otero's four family members were the earliest deaths claimed by the killer who nicknamed himself BTK, for "Bind, Torture, Kill."

The BTK strangler had been suspected of eight torture deaths beginning in 1974, but since Rader's arrest, authorities have linked two more victims to the serial killer. Prosecutors can't seek the death penalty because the crimes were committed before 1994, when Kansas passed its capital punishment law.

Students to vote on fee reallocation referendum for Activity Center

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It will be a place for all student organizations to meet, if the vote passes.

Funding for a Center for Student Activities is being put to a student-wide vote April 26.

Students have the option to vote yes or no to reallocate for CSA $10.27 they pay each semester in student fees.

Those fees were approved by the student body in 1993 to fund the expansion of Hale Library and are set to continue until 2015, but the costs are nearly paid in full.

Student Activities Center

Students will vote on April 26 on the possible rellocation of privilege fees to fund the Center for Student Activities.

By reallocating the fees, it will continue for 20 years, until 2025. There would not be an increase in fees.

"We're in a unique position to make this student legacy without charging more," Vicki Conner, co-chair of the CSA Committee, said.

Committee members have visited student organizations to explain the project, Conner said.

A table will be set up in the K-State Student Union from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today, Thursday and Monday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday. There will also be a table from 5 to 9 p.m. Monday at Peters Recreation Complex.

The addition is projected to be 21,000 square feet, four stories high and will be added onto the east side of the Union. The total cost will be about $6.5 million, with $4.5 million being raised through reallocated student fees and $2 million privately raised by the administration.

Conner said CSA will provide flexible workspace by having movable furniture and walls. It will have 24-hour access.

Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, Student Governing Association and Union Program Council are the four main organizations that would be housed in CSA.

Dan Sobek, CSA Committee member and president of Union Governing Board, said this will free up space in the Union. Greek Affairs, MSO and UPC have offices in the Union that they would no longer use.

The three groups' spaces could be used to bring in more revenue, Sobek said.

Although those are the four main groups that would use CSA, space would be provided for all.

Student lists 'pope chicken' for sale on eBay

Illustrations by Brandon Brewster
COLLEGIAN

CHARLESTON, Ill. – Four days after Pope John Paul II died, his likeness was seen in Thomas Dining Center, put up for auction on eBay and removed from the Web site – all within 24 hours.

E.J. Rouzin-Moy, a freshman undecided major at Eastern Illinois University, was eating his lunch with a friend Wednesday when he noticed one of his baked chicken breasts looked strangely like a man and decided to inspect it more closely.

"You could tell there was a nose," Rouzin-Moy said. "That's the first thing that makes it look like a man."

The seasoning on the breast is situated in such a way that it looks like the pope's pileolus, his small hat, Rouzin-Moy said.

Immediately, Rouzin-Moy mentioned to his friend Mike Margolis, freshman in biology, that he had seen items that looked like people sell for big money on eBay, and he was going to put the breast up for auction.

He told his parents about his venture into the world of online auctioning.

"They thought it was hilarious," Rouzin-Moy said.

Once the "pope chicken" was posted on eBay, the bidding was set at 99 cents. Rouzin-Moy said the only comments he received concerning the item were from one supporter and another person who said the auction of the "pope chicken" was "tasteless."

After 20 hours, 8,000 page hits and a total of three bids, the "pope chicken" was removed from the Web site, but the reason was unclear at first to Rouzin-Moy, he said.

Rouzin-Moy received an e-mail from eBay notifying him about the item's removal, claiming the "pope chicken" was not consistent with the site's material.

CELL PHONE CARRIER GUARDS AGAINST DRUNK DIALING

STANFORD, Calif. – You wake up Saturday morning after a long night of partying. You're sitting in bed, trying to piece together what you remember from the previous night, when a sudden fear grips you.

You grab your cell phone and check the last numbers you called, praying your parents' or ex-girlfriend's or current crush's number doesn't appear on the list of outgoing calls.

If this has ever happened to you, you are well aware of the dangers of calling people while intoxicated.

Due to a new cell phone service, however, drunk dialing may soon be a thing of the past.

Virgin Mobile Australia is offering a new service that allows cell phone users to block certain numbers from being called when drunk.

For the service to work, users need to dial "333" plus the phone number they want to protect. That number is then off limits until 6 the next morning.

The hope is that users will protect themselves from embarrassment and block important phone numbers – those of their boss, their parents or other relatives – before they go out and party.

Virgin Mobile Australia decided to offer the service after noticing an epidemic rise in drunk dialing across the country.

A recent survey done by the company of more than 400 people concluded that 95 percent of cell phone users drunk dial and that 30 percent of those calls were to former significant others.

April is Poetry Month

Blind Huber by Nick Flynn

The poems in this collection explore the world of bees and beekeepers, finding voices for both sides of the beekeeping industry. Flynn has obviously invested a large amount of time in this subject, even inhabiting the hive mentality of a drone, both an individual and inextricably linked to a larger group, to create some wonderful poems from new perspectives.

Student helps others as Ford Hall resident assistant

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cassie Luke focuses on the needs of others.

Luke is a resident assistant for the Lower Terrace of Ford Hall and tends daily to the requests of other people, Becca Larson, junior in management and fellow RA, said.

"She's always more than willing to help with anything, and you can always go to her and (she) is really encouraging to everyone," Larson said.

Luke has been an RA for three years and said she is passionate about her job. Rather than spending her time alone in her room, a typical day for this RA includes catering to others and trying to keep the peace in her area.

"I interact with my residents, and I make sure I know what their needs are personally, educationally and socially," Luke said.

Luke said she strives to fulfill her students' individual needs and makes sure that she knows who they are and their personalities. She also provides programs that allow them to interact with other residents and students.

However, with more than 50 girls per floor, this can sometimes be a difficult task.

Ford RAs are trained twice a year on not only how to handle difficulties with students, but also on how to refer students to different resources on campus that could be of more help.

Most of the problems Luke has encountered tend to deal with roommate issues.

"There are lots of roommate conflicts like who's buying toilet paper, who's cleaning the room, and a lot of it is dealing with people who prefer to be passive-aggressive in their arguments. We encourage them to speak with their roommates in a more constructive way," Luke said.

In addition to providing support for her floor, Luke has a scheduled shift every other week on a weekday from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. during which she carries a pager in order to keep in contact with the person at the front desk. During this time, she is required to be in the building to handle any issues that come up.

There are also weekend shifts to be picked up, and Luke is a full-time graduate student as well. Juggling her job, school and a social life has been something that Luke said she has had to learn to master.

She said that the hardest part of being a RA is time management and realizing how and when to not overcommit.

"The first year it was a struggle, and I had a desire to be everything for everybody. But it's been a balance, and I manage it more now. Being strong enough to say no has been something I've had to learn," Luke said.

Regardless of difficulties in managing her time, Luke participates in several other on- and off-campus activities. Involvement in Christian Challenge, National Collegiate Honors Society, Golden Key, Phi Kappa Phi honor fraternity and participation in intramural softball keeps Luke active.

"I always keep busy and find things that I really like to do. It's hard to keep a balanced schedule, but it's much easier now that I know what I can handle and what I can't," she said.

Despite her demanding schedule, like many other RAs, Luke said she values the relationships she has made and the environment in which she works, so she dedicates time to maintaining contact with former and current residents.

"I've had the blessing to continue to communicate with some great women, and I look forward to continuing to do that even after I leave K-State," she said.

After this semester, Luke plans to attend Colorado State University to finish graduate school through their student affairs and college education program. She will be running her own hall there and is contemplating making a career out of it.

"I really like it right now and I want to continue to have these experiences for the next couple of years," Luke said.

Chatting with other resident assistants, Cassie Luke, lower terrace R.A., listens to the programming idea of Natasha Curry (left), senior in kinesiology, with Ana Pyzhov (right), junior in pre-nursing. As a senior R.A., Luke helps her residents, puts on various programs, creates door decorations and many other day-to-day tasks.

Luke said she is confident that the skills she has acquired will be transferrable to the corporate world. Other benefits of the job include free room and board and a stipend for her work.

"I've been able to utilize skills that I really enjoy like advising and supervising, arts, creativity and other things that don't always fall into a job description. Being able to use a variety of different skills has allowed me to become a better rounded person," she said.

35th Earth Day focuses on awareness, activism

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Issues like smog, deforestation and conservation may not be at the front of many students' minds.

The Earth Day movement, however, aims to change it all.

Founded 35 years ago by Sen. Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin, Earth Day, which is Friday, quickly spread across the nation and gained many supporters. As word spread about Nelson's proposal, telegrams, letters and phone calls poured into his office. Citizens inquired about the event and shared concerns about rivers, lakes, land and air in their hometowns.

What began as a grassroots demonstration to protest the state of the environment has grown into an annual event. Today, environmentalists and citizens continue to use the day to raise awareness about environmental issues.

Charles Martin, director of the Natural Resources and Environmental Sciences secondary major program, said global warming is one of several pressing issues facing the nation.

"Global warming crosses all political and national boundaries. It's a problem for everyone," he said. "Humans are playing a major role in global warming by burning greenhouse gases."

Martin also listed the exhaustion of cheap fuel sources, water quality and water shortages as problems across the globe.

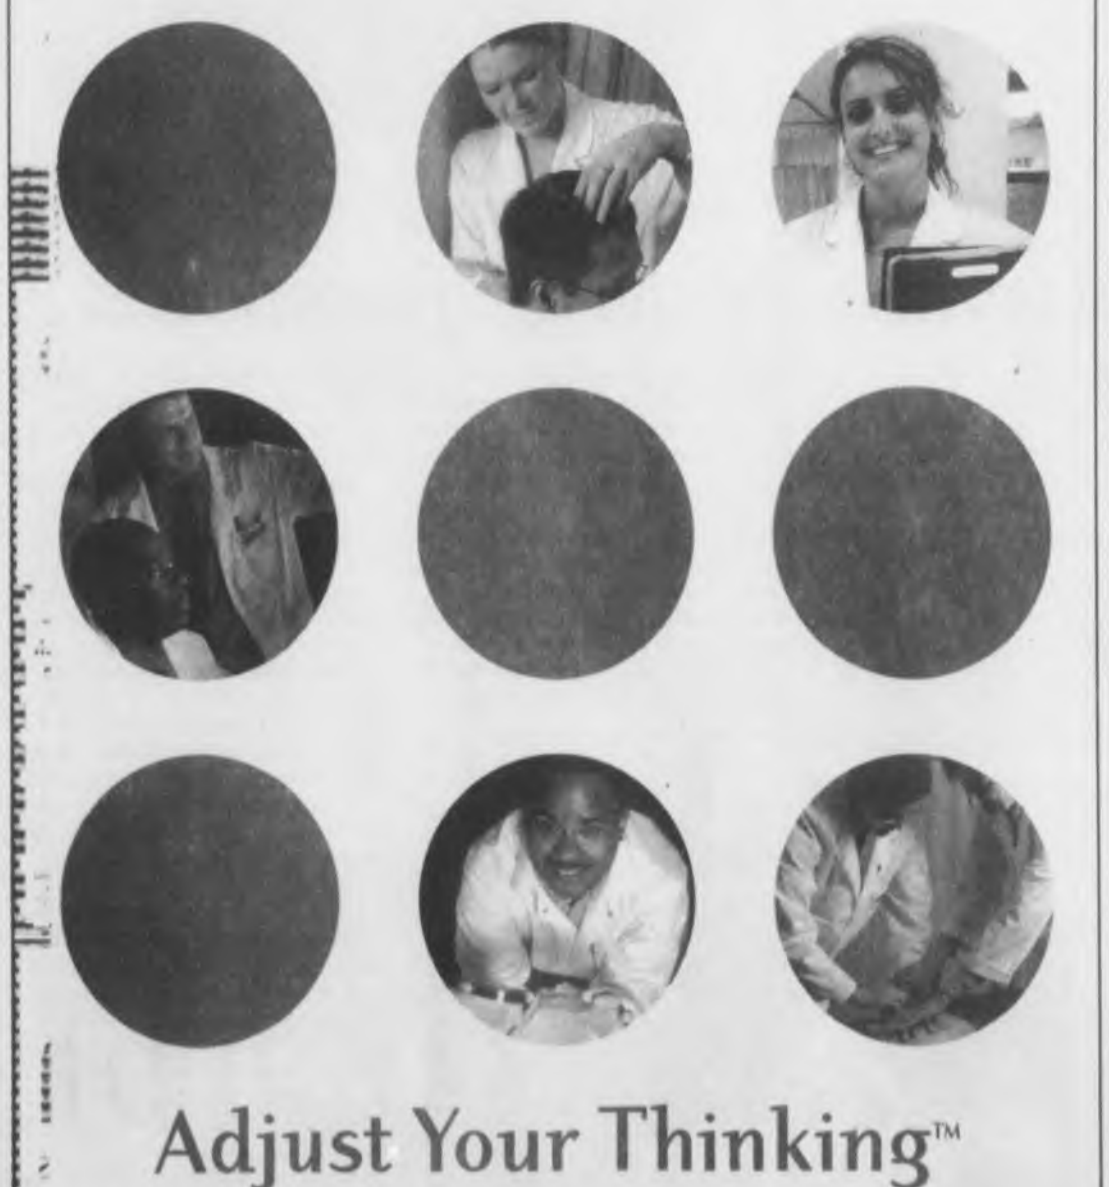
Mary Hubbard, head of the Department of Geology, said that air and water quality around the world also require attention.

"Air quality, globally, is certainly a big issue. We're finding out more and more about the health hazards related to emissions," she said. "And water quality is an issue in terms of run-off from agricultural fields, including pesticides and herbicides."

While these issues face the entire world, Martin and Hubbard said there are also problems in Manhattan that the community can help solve.

Trash produced in Manhattan is hauled to a landfill 70 to 80 miles away because the local site was filled to capacity decades ago.

"We feel like we have plenty of space here, so we can generate trash and bury it in landfills," Hubbard said.



The lack of recycling contributes to the overflow of waste, Martin said.

"Recycling in Manhattan is voluntary, and has not been widely accepted by the community," Martin said. "While students have already done a lot to encourage recycling on campus, they could be even more proactive about promoting it to the rest of the city."

TO THE POINT

Environmental issues should still be a priority

Although the conservation of electricity and water may not be a priority for many people, these should be concerns for people everywhere.

While most of the government's policy discussions concern defense and social programs, the environment has increasing problems that cannot be ignored for much longer.

Rising fuel prices are only the beginning of what could become a worldwide energy crisis.

Smog, deforestation and global warming are also contributing daily to the increasing level of pollution in the environment.

Friday will mark the 35th anniversary of Earth Day. Students should take the opportunity to observe their habits and see how they can change their lifestyles in order to be more Earth-friendly.

Instead of driving or getting a ride to class, walk or ride a bike. Take a shorter shower in the morning to conserve water.

Turn off the lights, computer and stereo when leaving a room. Recycle that empty soda can instead of throwing it in the trash.

Although it may not seem like much, if students become aware of their habits and do these simple things, great strides would be made in the efforts toward preserving our environment for future generations.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Rediscovering space

America needs to continue pursuing ideals held by early explorers

When the space shuttle Discovery launches from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida this May, it will be America's first manned flight into outer space in more than two years.

AMY BOLTON

NASA's shuttle program has been on hold since the Columbia broke up during its descent to earth Feb. 1, 2003, killing the seven astronauts on board.

The Columbia disaster occurred because a piece of foam hit the left wing during its launch on Jan. 16, 2003, causing a crack. This allowed hot gas into the ship when it reentered and caused it to explode.

The recent discovery of a crack in Discovery's fuel tank led to fears of another space disaster. But NASA has guaranteed that the crack, which measures only an inch and a half wide, is not a threat to the launch or to the safety of those on board. NASA has also fixed all other problems that could lead to trouble for the space shuttle in the future.

Still, there are Americans who think the space program needs to come to an end. They think the loss of so many Americans for an unnecessary adventure is a waste of our tax dollars.

But the exploration of our world, and now of the space that surrounds it, has been an important aspect of human nature since man has been on this planet.

Marco Polo was one of the first "Westerners" to explore China in the 13th century. Ferdinand Magellan became the first person to sail around the world in the 1500s.

And in 1492, Christopher Columbus was convinced that the earth was round, not flat. He knew he could sail to the east instead of traveling by land and discovered the Western Hemisphere, eventually leading to the colonization of America.

Had Columbus not been convinced that what he knew was true, man may not have discovered America until long after he did, and our history would have been greatly altered.

Tom Hanks, playing astronaut Jim Lovell in the blockbuster hit "Apollo 13," said, "Imagine if Christopher Columbus had come back from the new world and no one had followed in his footsteps."

It is mankind's nature to explore, and the progression of our world depends on it.

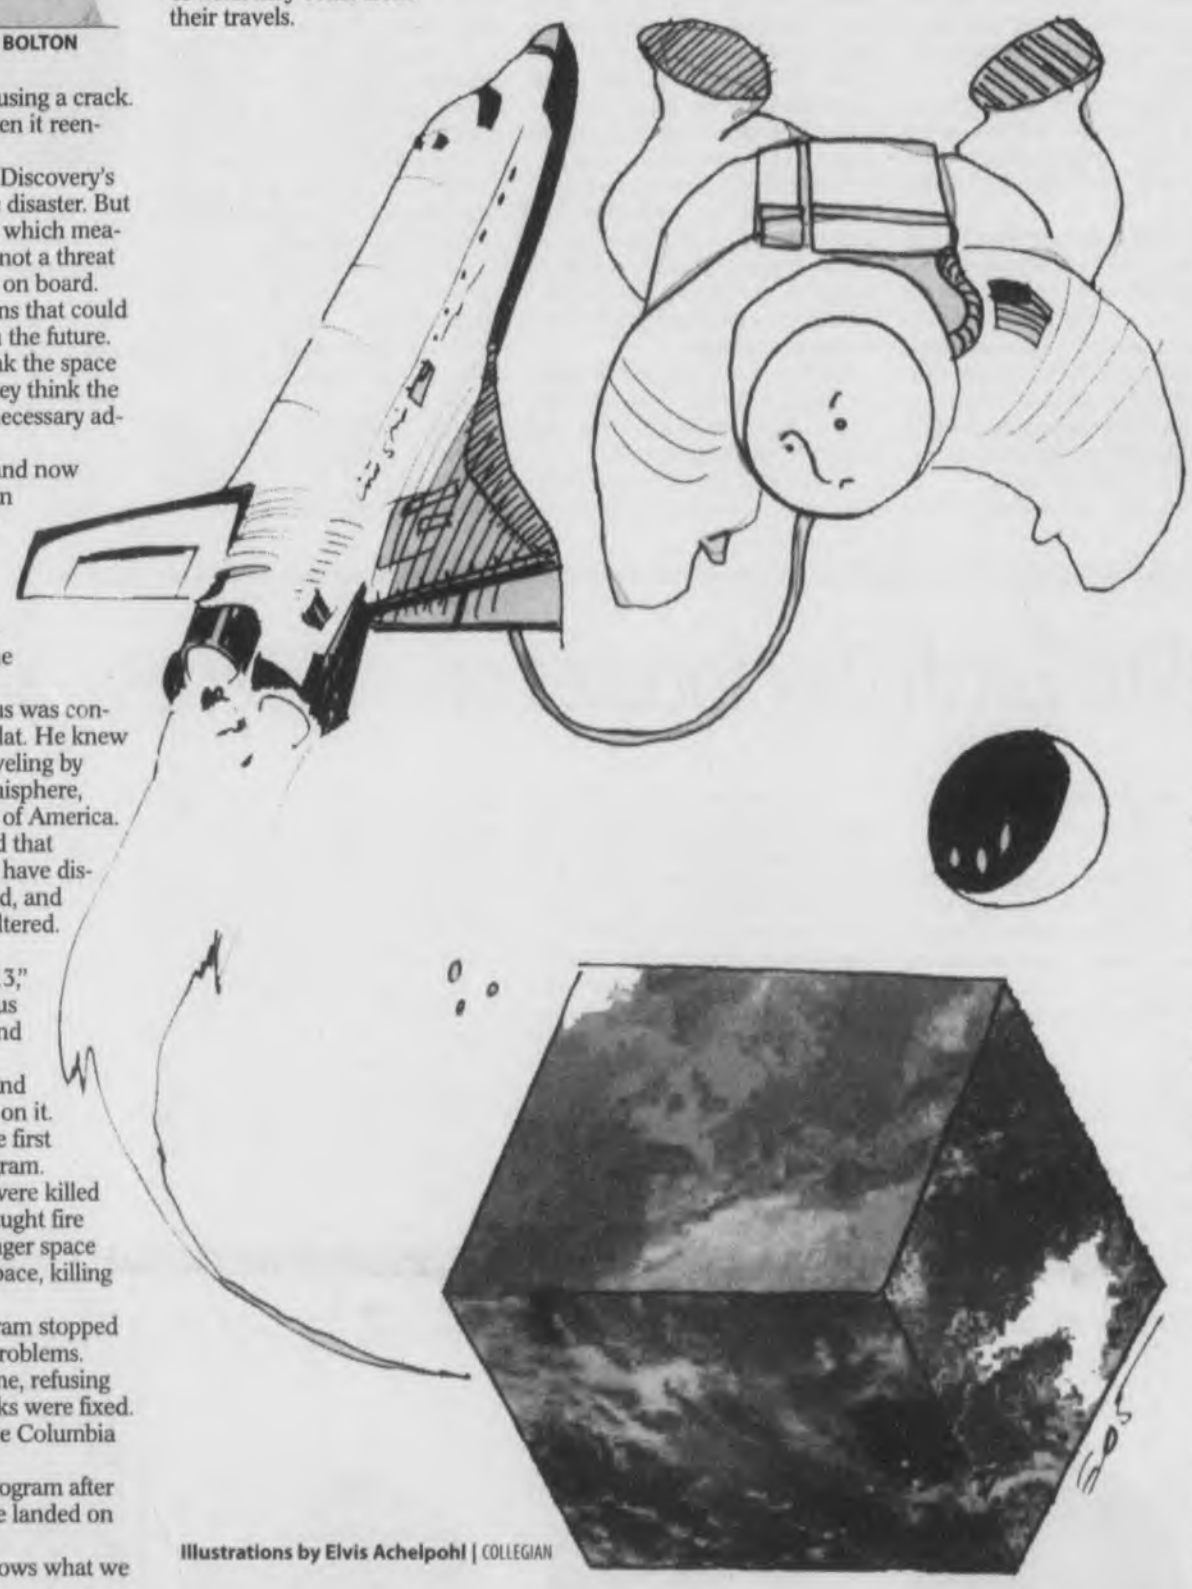
The Columbia accident was not the first fatal accident in America's space program.

On Jan. 27, 1967, three astronauts were killed in Apollo I when the space capsule caught fire during a test run. In 1986, the Challenger space shuttle exploded as it launched into space, killing all seven on board.

After each disaster, the space program stopped and waited for NASA to correct the problems. NASA fixed all the problems every time, refusing to return to space until all possible risks were fixed. It has done the same this time with the Columbia disaster.

If we had given up on the space program after the Apollo I fire, we never would have landed on the moon.

If we give up on it now, no one knows what we will never accomplish.



It is important that we continue exploring outside of our world, so we can better understand our world.

Every astronaut knows the risk he or she is taking.

These people know that if they travel into outer space, their lives could end at any moment. They're more than willing to take that risk because of what may come from their travels.

If we give up on the space program because of this setback, the 17 men and women who gave their lives to outer space exploration have died in vain.

Studying abroad provides life-changing experiences

Monique spent her 20th birthday walking around town with a hook and an eye patch telling everyone she met, "Arggh, matey. Walk the plank."

JULIA STOSKOPF

Just another drunken birthday bash? Not quite.

The plot may be the same as any regular birthday, but the setting is much different– Monique is studying in Spain.

Even simple birthday stories can be twice as funny when they're in a different country. While students who study abroad have the opportunity for exciting drinking stories, their experiences are not limited to drunken adventures.

Whatever the reasons, all students should take the opportunity to study abroad. No matter how long the study lasts, it is one opportunity at K-State that must be taken advantage of.

Studying abroad has benefits that expand far beyond the bars.

One benefit of studying in a different country is experiencing another culture.

The culture of another country helps to explain the belief systems and actions of both individuals and nations. If we as students never truly learn about another culture hands-on, how can we justify criticism of those nations?

Besides, who honestly who doesn't want to know anything about any other culture or nation? Walking among the stones of Stonehenge or climbing the Eiffel Tower are among the truly enriching experiences available.

Studying abroad also gives life to much of the culture experienced on TV or in books.

For example, when in Rome, Seville or Paris, try to find locations mentioned in Dan Brown's book, "The DaVinci Code." See how much adventure a K-State student can have and look beyond the façade of a city and seek out the quirks and characteristics that its citizens do not reveal to tourists on a regular basis.

Learning about culture goes both ways. While American students are introduced to different cultures around the world, the people with whom they come into contact are also introduced a different culture.

American students have the opportunity to change worldwide perceptions of Americans simply by traveling to another country.

Finally, studying abroad gives students an edge in job searches. Employers look for future employees that can be successful in a global economy. Having even basic knowledge about another country or language gives students an edge.

Some students do not have the time or resources to study abroad, but K-State is incredible in the resources it has to help students afford and accommodate their adventures.

Take advantage of what this university has to offer and study in a different country. Learning what the world has to offer outside of this country's borders can only assist students in gaining knowledge and an edge that is not disputed by anyone.

Go visit the Office of International Programs and at least research if study abroad is at all possible. If it is, take the opportunity of a lifetime.

In addition to a wild and crazy 20th birthday, Monique has also ridden a camel, met a Moroccan mob boss and wandered the ruins of Pompeii. What adventures will you have and what stories will you bring home?

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Holy wars are essentially like fighting over who has the best imaginary friend.

For Mark Sibilla, the guy that wrote the article on the British punk band Bloc Party: Franz Ferdinand was a Prussian emperor who revolutionized military training and tactics, and you're trying to say that Bloc Party revolutionized punk, so read up on your history punk.

To the girl in the biology review: wait 'till the question is done before you answer it.

To the ATO that drives the silver Camaro: you have a small package.

To all the Collegian writers: when 100 percent of successful terrorist acts on commercial airlines for the past 20 years have been committed by Arabs, it is not racial profiling. It's called a description of the suspect.

I carry designer purses, but I take generic Prozac.

Screw the greeks. Just vote no.

Hey, I'm from California. Quit dissing on my smog.

My friend just gave me the Fourum.

Me and my friend are on our fifth-and-a-half hour of "The West Wing" marathon, and we're gonna make it all seven hours tonight. We're pretty excited, and we thank everybody for their support.

If I were going to insult the Delts, it would be just one, and immature would be putting it nicely.

Oh, so your brother ate a T-shirt? That's nothing. I knew a guy who drank a candle.

It's 10:37 and the clock tower still blows.

So the new clock tower's pretty ugly. Makes sense that it's in front of the architecture building.

Suspect gets 14 additional charges

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The suspect who was arrested for the burglary of Stagg Hill Transmission has now been charged with 14 additional counts of burglary in Riley County.

George Paul West Jr. faces 14 counts with a nine more possible in Pottawatomie County.

The burglaries committed in the city of Manhattan located in that county have been given to the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Department for review.

The businesses burglarized include Farmers Insurance, Manhattan Aquarium and Cox Bros. BBQ, as well as others dating back to Feb. 1.

Money, computers, cameras, watches and tools were stolen and damage was done to safes and windows.

Capt. Gary Grubbs, with the criminal investigations department of the Riley County Police Department, said that the suspect usually entered by putting a brick or rock through a window.

"He was lucky to get away with these crimes," he said. "The patrol officer that actually took the time to shut off his unit and listen led to him hearing the broken glass and helped lead to the arrest."

Grubbs said the RCPD is satisfied that it has reached a conclusion.

"The only reason I can say for these burglaries is monetary gain," he said.

West will first appear in court at 10 a.m. today.

Rape suspect arrested; held on $50,000 bond

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Topeka man was arrested Monday in connection with a rape, aggravated kidnapping and criminal threat.

Tysen D. Hampton, 22, was arrested by Riley County Police in connection to a December 2003 rape of an 18-year-old.

All three crimes are "person" felonies under Kansas law and, if Hampton is convicted, he could receive a more serious sentencing in the future.

Aggravated kidnapping is most often connected to rape charges, RCPD Lt. Michael Quintanar said. The charge is defined by forceful restraint and bodily harm inflicted on the victim.

The victim was older than 14 years – the age that defines rape in Kansas – at the time the crime was committed.

During the victim's testimony, bodily evidence recorded at the time of the crime and the victim's relationship to the defendant will also be considered, as in any rape case.

Quintanar was unable to comment on whether the suspect knew the victim.

Hampton is being held at the Riley County jail on $50,000 bond.

2 charged in connection with drug charges

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two men were charged Monday with five felony drug charges related to an ongoing investigation, the Riley County Police Department said.

Christopher A. Brown, 24, Leavenworth, Kan., and Jaison P. Myres-Rodgers, 23, Topeka, are being held on identical charges.

Primary charges included possession of cocaine and marijuana within 1,000 feet of a school zone.

Other charges included conspiracy to distribute a controlled substance and possession of drug paraphernalia – both one felony and one misdemeanor charge – among other related charges.

Both men were arrested while allegedly attempting to sell crack cocaine in the parking lot at 222 N. sixth St.

Suspects were charged in connection with nearly two ounces of marijuana and more than one ounce of cocaine, RCPD Cpt. Gary Grubbs said.

Both men are being held at the Riley County jail on $50,000 bond.

New city commissioners sworn in; Klimek selected as mayor

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Both tears and laughter filled Tuesday night's City Commission meeting as former Mayor Brad Everett and Commissioner Mark Taussig were replaced.

Holding back tears, Everett recalled his past four years as the Mayor of Manhattan in baseball terms.

"We may have let some of you down, but we got runners around the bases and maybe hit a few home runs," he said.

He said his proudest accomplishment was holding the growth of taxes to only 3 percent.

Taussig said that while they kept the taxes down, they were also able to keep salaries up with the current living costs.

Commissioner Mark Hatesohl took his oath of office for the second time with newly elected commissioners Tom Phillips and Jayme Morris-Hardeman.

Commissioner Ed Klimek was then selected for a second term as mayor and Commissioner Bruce Snead was selected as the new Mayor Pro-Tem.

"I really consider this an honor and a privilege to serve as the mayor for the first city in Kansas," Klimek said

First readings for the rezoning of land, including Prairie Lakes and St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, were both passed with a 5-0 vote.

The purpose of rezoning Prairie Lakes, the 70-acre tract of land south of Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School, is to provide affordable housing, said Eric Cattell, assistant director for Planning.

Of these 70 acres, 51 acres will be rezoned for a two-family residential district and the remaining 21 acres will be rezoned for a multiple-family residential district.

Affordable housing in this area has a lot of potential to accommodate the incoming military families, Klimek said.

With the growth of K-State, St. Isidore feels that it needs to expand in order to keep up with its growing congregation. They plan for part of their land to be rezoned to a Planned Unit Development District in order to accompllsh this expansion.

"I'd like to congratulate the church on their growing population," Klimek said.

The commission also heard from Jeff Hancock, P.E., director of Public Works, about servicing the west side of Manhattan with electricity.

The plan, from Westar Energy, included plans for both overhead and underground power lines.

Although the overhead lines would cost less, they would also require the removal of a substantial amount of trees and vegetation along the front of Frank Anneberg Park, Hancock said.

Snead said that the underground option would be best because of the longevity of the lines, ability to resist to harsh weather and amount of vegetation in the park.

The motion for underground lines and a 20-foot easement was passed 5-0.

Shocking upset

K-State sweeps WSU with 4-2 win

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

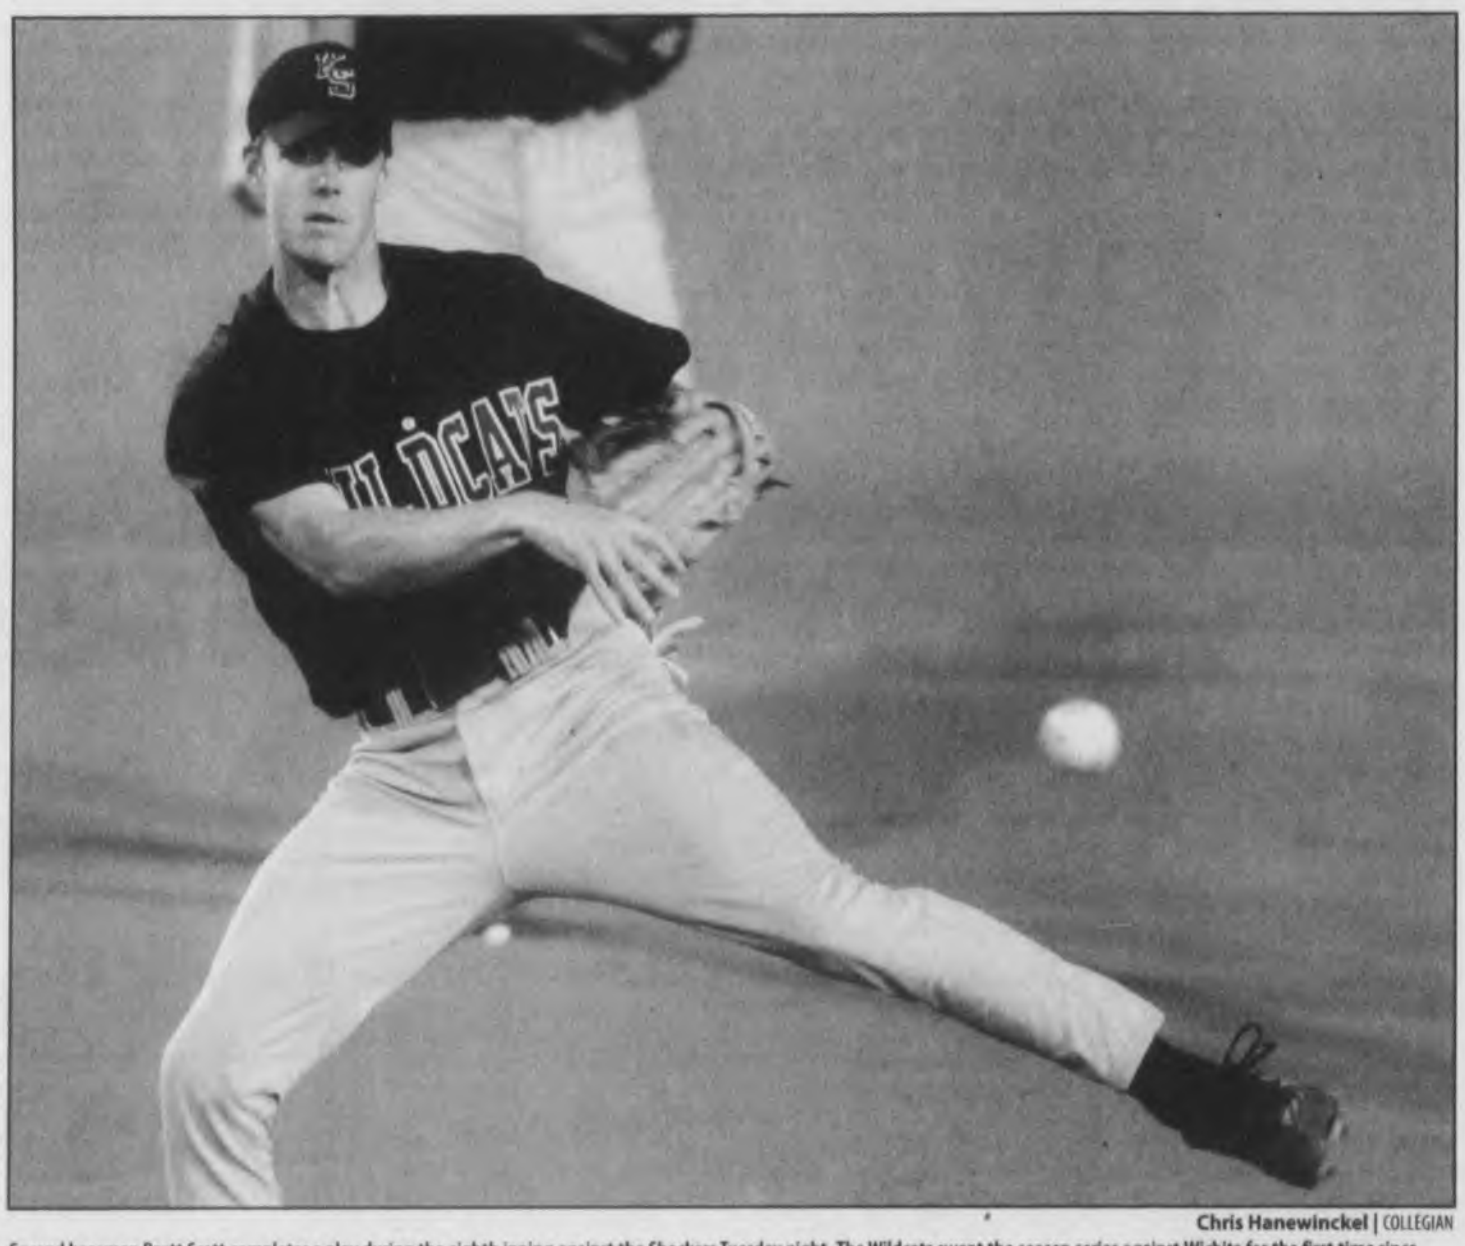
WICHITA – K-State fans in attendance had never seen anything like this before.

For the first time since 1955, the Wildcats (18-17) swept a season series with a 4-2 victory against the Wichita State Shockers on Tuesday.

"Being an in-state rival, it's a huge deal," senior Josh Dent said of the win. "Not only does it help for recruiting, but it's just a huge moral victory. These guys have been so good for so long that it feels unbelievable to go ahead and get a sweep."

K-State starter Brett Muegge (2-2) went 4.0 innings, giving up two runs on five hits while recording one strikeout to earn the win. Shocker starter Jereme Foster took the loss to fall to 4-2. Senior Eric Rollins picked up the save for the Wildcats, the 11th of his career, moving him into second place on K-State's all-time saves chart.

Coming off a poor performance against William Jewell last Wednesday in which he gave up four runs on eight hits in a 6-1 loss, Muegge said the difference between the games was all a matter of repetition.



"It's just getting out there every week instead of getting out there one week and then having to sit two weeks," he said. "Getting out there and getting in a groove, once I feel like I'm in a groove, it all comes.

"I'm starting to get into a rhythm with things."

K-State got all the scoring it needed in the first three innings, as the Wildcats scored one run in the first, two runs in the second and one more in the third.

In the second, with junior David Baker and senior Terry Blunt on third and second, respectively, Dent stepped to the plate and dropped a two-strike pitch from Foster into right field, scoring Baker and Blunt.

FOOTBALL

Team leadership improving despite injuries

The K-State football team is making progress in the areas of leadership and competition this spring, but the Wildcats have had to fight through several injuries, Coach Bill Snyder said Tuesday.

K-State is 10 days away from the annual Purple and White Spring Game, as the Wildcats continue to work to improve after a 4-7 season in 2004.

Somewhat hindering competition for positions, however, has been injuries to some players, Snyder said.

"I don't think we have been as successful with (competition) as I would have liked, and the primary reason is we've had some knicks, bruises and some injuries," he said. "We've got a number of guys who haven't practiced with us on a regular basis and a number of those are guys that would be 1's and 2's (on the depth chart)."

Snyder said about 10 Wildcats were unable to practice at the end of last week after the team took a week off from the practice field.

As has been his policy, Snyder would not name injured players, although it is known that junior quarterback Dylan Meier is limited in spring drills due to injury.

CATCHING SNYDER'S EYE

Snyder once again singled out sophomore wide receiver Jordy Nelson and redshirt freshman tight end Brett Alstatt for praise due to their performances three weeks into spring practice.

Junior Sean Lowe earned compliments as well, as he makes the transition from linebacker to tight end.

On the defensive side, redshirt freshman Ian Campbell and junior Blake Seiler have stood out at the defensive end, Snyder said.

TIGHT END COMPETITION

With the rise of Alstatt and Lowe at the tight end position, many might wonder whatever happened to sophomore Rashaad Norwood, who is No. 1 on the depth chart at that spot.

Offensive coordinator Del Miller said he could not get into specifics and that the position, like so many others, had no front-runner.

"That's a little bit up in the air right now," Miller said.

SNODGRASS STEPPING UP

Although most roster spots are still up in the air, Snyder said sophomore place kicker Jeff Snodgrass has separated himself from the pack for the No. 1 kicker position.

Put to the test in Los Angeles

ANTHONY MENDOZA

It's only a few weeks into the baseball schedule, which signals the culmination of the NBA regular season, and there are plenty of reasons to be skeptical about every team in both leagues.

The city making the most noise is Los Angeles.

Not with the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim, but with the Dodgers' torrid start and the Lakers' out-of-control nose dive.

Words like "leader" are being mentioned in the same breath as the name Milton Bradley.

The same Bradley who last year finished the regular season on the suspended list after he went crazy on Dodger fans when they booed him for missing a ball in right field.

This is the face of the Dodgers, the best team in baseball as of now in this young season.

Yes, they have an enormous number of question marks on the field.

Can J.D. Drew get going? Will Hee Sop Choi ever be consistent enough with the bat to get consistent playing time at first base? Will the carousel of third basemen come close to what Adrian Beltre did last year for the Dodgers in a year when he was snubbed of the most valuable player award by Barry Bonds?

And while they have questions to answer, the Lakers already failed their test.

This year, the Lakers are playing for a spot in the lottery, somewhere they have not been since the 1993-94 season.

As soon as they were swept out of Detroit in the NBA Finals last year, the aftershock led to where the Lakers are now.

The first wave hit when owner Jerry Buss refused give coach Phil Jackson an extension, followed by Shaquille O'Neal saying he would not play for anybody but Jackson.

That led to General Manager Mitch Kupchak sticking his foot in his mouth by announcing that Kobe Bryant was the only player on the team that was secure with the Lakers.

From there on it's a blur.

O'Neal was traded to the Miami Heat, Bryant was acquitted of rape charges, new head coach Rudy Tomjanovich retired due to stress, Bryant got hurt and interim coach Frank Hamblen re-instituted the triangle offense mid-season, which no one picked up.

The hopes of a city rest on Bradley and the Dodgers. Here's to hoping neither of them implodes for the sake of Los Angeles after the devastation the Lakers left behind.

Cats prepare for tough Nebraska matchups

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State women's tennis continues a tough home stretch today when No. 35 Nebraska comes to town.

The match is the second of four straight matches against ranked opponents for K-State before the end of the regular season, in which the Wildcats are 0-7 against ranked opponents.

Nebraska comes to Manhattan 16-2 on the season, with five straight wins and a third place ranking in the highly competitive Big 12 Conference.

K-State head coach Steve Bietau said he expects a tough match from the Huskers, but expects his singles players to give Nebraska a challenging match.

"It's going to be a tough match," Bietau said. "Maria (Rosenberg) lost there last year, but that match could have gone either way, with (Gitte) Ostermann. (Ostermann) is clearly one of the best players in the conference and also the country. So that's going to be a difficult test, but Maria has shown that she can compete with her.

"Tako (Kvaratskhelia) has the best record of anybody in the conference right now at number two. So based on the record, you have to look at her as the favorite in that match, even though, again, Nebraska is very strong."

Rosenberg has received several accolades for her record-breaking performance this season.

MLB | Red Sox fan loses season tickets for 2005

BOSTON — Gary Sheffield is waiting to see if he'll be punished for his involvement in a scuffle with a fan during a game last week.

Meanwhile, the Boston man who interfered with the New York Yankees right fielder had his season tickets for 2005 revoked Monday by the Red Sox.

The team said it would reimburse Chris House when he returns the tickets and would consider reinstating them for 2006. The team also banned a fan who spilled beer on Sheffield from buying tickets this season. The Red Sox did not release his name.

MLB | Red Sox, Wakefield agree to contract extension

BOSTON — Tim Wakefield, the longest-tenured player on the Boston Red Sox, will remain with the team at least through 2006 and perhaps until the end of his career.

Wakefield

The World Series champions on Tuesday signed Wakefield to a contract extension for next season. Details of the deal were not immediately available.

The 38-year-old knuckleballer signed with the team in 1995 and has moved back and forth from the bullpen to the rotation. He is a six-time finalist for the Roberto Clemente Award, a community service award presented by Major League Baseball.

CFB | Husker quarterback given permission to transfer

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska quarterback Joe Dailey has been given permission to transfer after falling from starter last season to fourth-stringer this spring.

Dailey

Cornhuskers coach Bill Callahan said he was disappointed in Dailey's decision to leave but wished him luck. Callahan and other coaches met with the rising junior from Jersey City, N.J., on Monday, telling Dailey that it was not yet decided who would be the starting quarterback next season.

Dailey, who was also a team captain last season, went into Saturday's Red-White game behind Zac Taylor, Beau Davis and Joe Ganz on the depth chart. He was 7-of-20 for 121 yards, with one interception returned for a touchdown in the scrimmage.

NBA | Shaq expected to be back for playoffs

MIAMI — Shaquille O'Neal's bruised right thigh will keep him out of the Miami Heat's final two regular-season games, but the team expects him to be ready when the playoffs open this weekend.

O'Neal

The decision to rest the All-Star center wasn't unexpected since Miami, which wrapped up the top seed in the Eastern Conference playoffs two weeks ago, has nothing to tangibly gain from Tuesday's home game against Charlotte or Wednesday's finale in Orlando.

The Heat will open the best-of-seven East quarterfinals at home either Saturday or Sunday, against Cleveland, Philadelphia or New Jersey.

NHL | Bertuzzi reinstatement hearing scheduled

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — The NHL plans a hearing April 26 to decide on reinstating Todd Bertuzzi, who was suspended indefinitely after decking Colorado forward Steve Moore with a punch that broke his neck, the Canadian Broadcasting Co. reported.

Bertuzzi

Bertuzzi, of the Vancouver Canucks, pleaded guilty to criminal assault after the March 8, 2004, attack in Vancouver and was given a conditional discharge in December 2003.

Preppy look updated, modern

Traditional style transitions from uniform-like to laid-back with bright color

By Courtney Lair
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The traditional preppy look – think crisp khakis, boxy polos, pullover sweaters and bright colors – has had a makeover. Old classics have been updated, most notably in the snugger, sexier fit and the even more extensive color palette.

Quirky accessories like kelly green and orange Sperry top-siders for men and straw and wicker handbags with bright or metallic trim for the ladies add a hip twist on their conventional counterparts.

Overall, the preppy look has gone from stiff, stuffy and almost uniform-like to a more laid-back reflection of our generation.

We will begin with the epitome of all things preppy – the ever-popular polo. With this inevitably comes the controversial "to pop or not to pop." Turning up the collar exudes an air of confidence in which the wearer is often perceived as being slightly ostentatious. This can be taken to the extreme with the "double-pop" (layering two shirts) as shown on the model. Either way, choosing whether or not to pop the collar is a personal preference.

Another choice polo-wearers have is the immense brand selection. It is always safe to go with the American classic, Polo by Ralph Lauren, whose Website offers custom-fit polos and allows you to create your own. Other options include the trendy 80s comebacks Lacoste and LeTigre, or any of those from chain retailers such as Abercrombie & Fitch and American Eagle.

In addition to the polo, the list below contains some other preppy must-have items. Keep in mind that since preppy fashion is known for blurring the lines between sexes, everything listed pertains to both men and women, unless stated or blatantly obvious (i.e. bikinis and pearls).

■ White is huge – especially pants. Guys, you may be skeptical, but trust me, they're all over the pages of men's style magazines like GQ. Plus, it enhances your tan so much, people will think you went to Palm Beach for the weekend.

■ A lightweight cotton blazer in a punchy bright or pretty pastel color is perfect for cool evenings.

■ Seersucker – it comes in everything from pants to blazers to the cutest bikinis ever.

■ The bright pink and green combination – very Lilly Pulitzer, and therefore, very preppy.

■ Striped grosgrain belts in fun colors.

■ Short shorts for the ladies – I know we haven't seen them in years, but they were fresh and flirty on the runways this spring.

■ Suede and leather loafers for men instantly dress up a pair of shorts and a polo.

■ Embroidered motifs scattered all over pants, belts, skirts, etc. They can either be done in classics like whales and lobsters, or more contemporary icons like martinis, all of which add a whimsical touch.

■ The country club cable knit sweater will make you look like you just got back from a game of tennis.

■ Pearls. It is definitely worth investing in a nice, real set because they never go out of style and you'll wear them forever.

■ Bermuda shorts (the ones that hit right above the knee).

■ Anything argyle.

■ Monogramming your initials can be done on almost anything and looks especially cute on totes. Just remember, your last initial always goes in the middle.

The nouveau preppy style hitting mainstream fashion has made clothing and accessories largely available at all price points.

You no longer need to attend a prestigious Ivy League school or have a summer home in the Hamptons to pull off the look. Plus, it's fun to be able to mix some of the revamped versions of classics with some traditional pieces to create a style that is casual, yet luxurious.

CELEB NEWS

Jackson defense challenges photos

Jackson

Michael Jackson's attorney on Tuesday challenged the authenticity of photographs that appeared to show the mother of the pop star's accuser with severe bruises from an alleged beating by store security guards.

The woman's family received a settlement of more than $150,000 over the 1998 store incident. The episode is unrelated to the child-molestation case against Jackson, but the singer's lawyers have used it to argue that the family has a history of false claims.

Top executive at NBC's Today show fired

NBC on Tuesday ousted the chief executive behind the "Today" show, with the network's biggest money-maker in a ratings slump and feeling the heat from ABC's "Good Morning America."

The network said it would name a replacement for Tom Touchet, the show's executive producer, on Wednesday. Touchet has had the job since November 2002.

"Today" hasn't spent a week out of first place in the ratings, but NBC's position of unchallenged dominance in the morning has eroded. Its margin over second-place "Good Morning America" is 662,000 viewers this season, roughly half what it was last year.

Kutcher makes bet to model if film is hit

Ashton Kutcher said he'll be back in boxers if his new movie is a box-office hit. Kutcher made a bet to return to modeling if "A Lot Like Love," out this Friday, is the weekend's top-grossing film, he told the television show "Access Hollywood."

Kutcher

"If we are the No. 1 movie in America, I will do a Calvin Klein underwear campaign," said Kutcher, who appeared on the catwalk before for the designer. "It's actually a bet that I made with my producing partner."

Kutcher has a nude scene in the romantic comedy, which also stars Amanda Peet, and told "Access Hollywood" it was a breeze.

"I like being nude. So for me, it wasn't incredibly tough," he said.

Chris Tucker arrested

Break out the Rush Hour puns — Chris Tucker has been arrested for speeding.

Tucker

The comic actor was busted in Georgia over the weekend after being clocked at a cool 109 miles per hour on a stretch of Georgia's Interstate 20 — nearly 40 mph over the speed limit — and then leading police on a high-speed chase.

Tucker ended up in McDuffie County Jail briefly Sunday for the speedometer-burying incident, in which, according to the Georgia State Patrol, the 33-year-old at one point gunned his 2005 Bentley up to 120.

Georgia State Patrol spokesperson Larry Schnall said a trooper tried in vain to get Tucker to pull over.

"The trooper crossed the grass median with blue lights flashing and sirens and attempted to get the vehicle to stop," Schnall said.

Rob and Amber of 'Survivor' tie the knot

They survived "Survivor" and are doing amazingly well on "The Amazing Race." So what's next for Rob Mariano and Amber Brkich — "Newlyweds"?

The reality twosome fondly known as "Romber" tied the knot Saturday at the Atlantis resort at Paradise Island in the Bahamas.

As would only be fitting for a couple whose courtship and subsequent engagement played out on television, CBS was along for the wedding ceremony as well, filming for a two-hour special that will air on May 24.

In addition to a behind-the-scenes look at the preparations for the nuptials, the show, titled "Rob and Amber Get Married," will also feature clips from Brkich's bridal shower and the couple's bachelor and bachelorette parties.

Quick guide to the best alcoholic drinks

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: What's your favorite kind of alcohol?

A: Actually, I've never had a drink of alcohol in my life. I believe alcohol is a terrible drug that is tearing apart the fabric of our society.

Pause.

Wait for it. Wait for it...

PSYCH!

Wooo. That was a good one. Actually, just this morning a group of scientists in Germany reported that at the conclusion of a six-year study they have discovered that it is in fact impossible to have fun without drinking. You can't argue with science.

OK. Let me go through some of my favorite drinks. Actually I should say that these are not my all-time favorite drinks, but are the best drinks that cater to a person on a limited budget, such as me.

If you do have a little extra cash on hand, maybe from last week's amateur night at Mustangs Gentleman's Club or you just sold that beer pong table that you spend all semester making, you should try a Red Bull and Jager. This is my all-time favorite drink. I can't say enough good things about this drink.

The smallest amount of Red Bull will cover up the taste of an entire glass of Jager. It doesn't really cover it up, it just blends together perfectly to leave a semisweet taste in your mouth. This drink is a great one start off with because it can really light a fire under you and get your evening going in a hurry, especially if you don't regularly drink a lot of caffeine.

But don't get me wrong, I'm always in the mood for one of these. Plus, this drink has the supernatural power to knock you on your ass. If you see me at the bars, buy me one of these.

Another one of my favorites is the infamous tequila. I love tequila either in margarita form or, even better, in a shot glass.

Tequila shots have the same punch-you-in-the-throat potency as Jager and then some. Most people don't have the same affinity for tequila as I do. Whenever I order a round at the bars, half of my friends start scattering or pretend to talk to someone else. Not me, though. If I have salt and lime, I can drink tequila shots all night.

Now the staple of my liquor diet is definitely whiskey. I don't really know why or how this started, but whiskey is the main mixed drink liquor that I drink. No shots here. Whiskey shots suck. Just mix in a little Coke and enjoy. If you see me at the bars, buy me one of these.

If I'm in the malt liquor mood, I definitely reach for a Mickeys. Not a lot to say here, just good stuff. There's nothing better for "Friday Forties at 4." This is where you get together with your friends at 4 p.m. on a Friday evening and drink forties. Not that complicated, but tons of fun.

The smaller bottles are great, too, but watch out because their hand grenade style bottle makes it really tempting to throw one or two after you've thrown back one or two. I don't think you'll be able to buy these at the bars, but if you can, and if you see me at the bars, buy me one of these.

Let's get to the beer already.

Picking a favorite beer is a little harder for me because I have yet to come across many beers that I didn't like, and none that didn't like me. If the funds are available, my favorite would have to be Michelob Amber Bock. If not, it's Natty Light until I die.

Natural Light is definitely the poor man's beer.

This stuff is great. It's cheap and doesn't taste that bad. It's great for tailgating, camping, boating, big parties. What am I saying? This stuff is great for every occasion.

When I win the lottery I'm going to have a Natty Light fountain in my front yard and I will take a bath in it every morning.

If I see you at the bars, I'll buy you one of these.

P.S. Drink responsibly and don't drink and drive, idiots.

$1.2 million spent on campus beauty

Vegetation spruces up campus, helps students learn

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Attractive landscaping might attract more students.

At least that's what K-State thinks

"A large majority of students are attracted to a particular campus by the appearance," John Woods, director of facilities services, said.

To keep up the appearance of the campus, the grounds crew, a part of the Division of Facilities, works on trees, flowers, grass, shrubs and mulch to keep the living parts of campus looking nice.

"A lot of people like the trees, so we try to trim the trees and make them pretty-looking," Woods said.

Dead trees are removed and new ones are planted on a regular basis, he said. Shrubs and beds are trimmed and pruned so they look nice as well.

Woods said they also focus on keeping the estimated 200 acres of grass growing.

"The grass is fertilized and watered on a regular basis, so it remains green during the growing season," he said.

Flowers are planted all over campus, especially in high-traffic areas.

Jackie Toburen, manager of the grounds department, said there are about 27 flower beds on campus, and each year the crew places more than 30 flower pots.

The flowers serve more than decorative purposes. Chuck Marr, professor of horticulture, said horticulture is important because it also helps students learn.

"Not only does it emphasize what we do in horticulture, but we're able to use it as a laboratory for teaching purposes and in some classes for observational research purposes," Marr said.

Woods said many of the trees planted on campus are chosen because they don't grow naturally in the area.

Selecting trees that aren't native to the area allows students in horticulture classes to observe the actual trees that they need to study, he said.

"They've introduced a bunch of trees that don't grow here," Woods said. "We don't plant a lot of trees that are popular in this area."

The K-State grounds budget is less than $1.2 million, Toburen said. That includes all salaries, benefits, supplies, materials, equipment and student labor.

Woods said he visited the University of Nebraska's Lincoln campus and said that K-State's campus looks nicer, mainly due to the lack of trash.

"Our campus looks much nicer than theirs," Woods said. "We have nice trees, the grounds are kept a little bit nicer and there's no litter on the campus."

He said that the grounds crew picks up trash on a daily basis and encourages people to use the trash and recycling bins located on campus.

"The nicer the area looks, the less likely people are to litter," Woods said.

Depending on the budget, the grounds crew spread anywhere from 300 to 1,200 cubic yards of mulch in a year, Toburen said. This year, they have already spread 300 cubic yards of mulch, and she said they probably won't distributed any more for this budget year.

Toburen said the grounds crew tries to focus on making the campus as a whole look attractive.

"Clean and green is the present philosophy, and we just try to make sure everything is that way," she said.

Different scams with changing of seasons

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Scams happen all the time, but some are seasonal.

The Better Business Bureau recently announced there are door-to-door home repair offers that are scams.

Joyce Woodard, president of the Northeast Kansas BBB, said people should check out businesses with the BBB before doing business.

Right now there could be painters, tree trimmers and other outdoor service companies going door-to-door scamming home owners.

Spring does not necessarily bring more scam artists, but different types of scams. Some scams, such as sweepstakes winnings, are prevalent all year.

"It's everyday. It's all the time," Woodard said. "Whatever we're doing for that season then the scam artist attracts to it."

One way to avoid scams is using local businesses.

"We really recommend somebody to use a local business and to check them out," she said.

Riley County Police Department Lt. Mike Quintanar said the door-to-door and phone scams often target older people. Internet scams target younger people usually.

One scam asks people to invest a certain amount of money, sometimes $2,000, and promises more in return, Quintanar said.

"The ones that I think are hitting the younger crowd are things that are on the computer," he said. "They think, 'Hey this is a chance to invest some money.'"

Another scam students should watch out for is fake businesses. Some scam artists set up a Web site with products in order to obtain credit card numbers, he said.

Quintanar said one way to check up on businesses is to ask for references or to ask them to call back in a week.

"That would give you some time to do some research," he said. "The thing is, if it seems too good to be true, it probably is."

10 years later: Memorial service honors OKC victims

By Kelly Kurt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Children who lost their parents in the Oklahoma City bombing recited the names of the dead, and mourners gently laid bouquets on empty chairs symbolizing each victim Tuesday as they observed the 10th anniversary of the nation's worst act of domestic terrorism.

In a church that served as a temporary morgue after the blast, more than 1,600 people remembered those who died with 168 seconds of silence starting at 9:02 a.m., the moment the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building collapsed on April 19, 1995.

Also honored were the survivors, the rescuers and the endurance of a damaged city that former President Clinton said "made us all Americans again."

"Oklahoma City changed us all. It broke our hearts and lifted our spirits and brought us together," said Clinton, who was in office on the morning that Timothy McVeigh brought his bomb and hatred for the government to the city in a Ryder truck.

Across the street at the Oklahoma City National Memorial, in the grassy field where the building once stood, 168 empty chairs were a solemn reminder of the carnage of a decade earlier. Teddy bears were placed on miniature chairs representing the 19 children slain in the building's daycare.

Juanita Espinosa wiped away tears as she stood in front of the pint-sized chair of her cousin, 2-year-old Zackary Chavez.

"They found his head one week and his body another week," she said. "It's still too much to think about."

Regina Bonny, a retired undercover agent with the Drug Enforcement Agency who was pulled from the debris, placed wreaths and flowers on the chairs of four slain co-workers.

"I pray over them. I talk to them," she said. "I'll never let anyone forget them."

McVeigh was convicted of federal conspiracy and murder charges and executed on June 11, 2001. Conspirator Terry Nichols is serving multiple life sentences after being convicted in federal and state court.

"I'm on the road to forgiveness," said Jannie Coverdale, who lost her two young grandsons, Aaron and Elijah, in the blast. "I will feel much better once I can forgive Tim McVeigh and Terry Nichols."

Vice President Dick Cheney also spoke at the ceremony, telling survivors and family members of victims that goodness has overcome the evil of the blast in the 10 years.

"All humanity can see you experienced bottomless cruelty and responded with heroism," Cheney said. "Your strength was challenged and you held firm. Your faith was tested and it has not wavered."

Obesity not to blame for deaths

By Carla K. Johnson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Being overweight is nowhere near as big a killer as the government thought, ranking No. 7 instead of No. 2 among the nation's leading preventable causes of death, according to a new calculation from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The CDC estimated Tuesday that packing on too many pounds accounts for 25,814 deaths a year in the United States. In January, the organization came up with an estimate 14 times higher with 365,000 deaths.

The new analysis found that obesity is indisputably lethal. But, like several recent smaller studies, it found that people who are modestly overweight actually have a lower risk of death than those of normal weight.

Biostatistician Mary Grace Kovar, a consultant for the University of Chicago's National Opinion Research Center in Washington, said "normal" may be set too low for today's population. Also, Americans classified as overweight are eating better, exercising more and managing their blood pressure better than they used to, she said.

The study – an analysis of mortality rates and body-mass index, or BMI – was published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

Based on the new calculation, excess weight would drop from the second-leading cause of preventable death, after smoking, to seventh. It would fall behind car crashes and guns on the list of killers.

Calculating the health effects of obesity has been a major source of controversy at the CDC.

Last year, the CDC issued a study that said being overweight causes 400,000 deaths a year and would soon overtake tobacco as the top U.S. killer. After scientists inside and outside the agency questioned the figure, the CDC admitted making a calculation error and lowered its estimate.

CDC Director Dr. Julie Gerberding said because of the uncertainty in calculating the health effects of being overweight, the CDC is not going to use the new figure of 25,814 in its public awareness campaigns and is not going to scale back its fight against obesity.

"There's absolutely no question that obesity is a major public health concern of this country," she said.

Gerberding said the CDC will work to improve methods for calculating the consequences of obesity.

Dr. JoAnn Manson, chief of preventive medicine at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston, said she is not sure the new estimate is right.

"I think it's likely there has been a weakening of the mortality effect due to improved treatments for obesity," she said. "But I think this magnitude is surprising and requires corroboration."

One major reason for the far lower number in this latest study is that it used more recent data, researchers said.

"This analysis is far more sophisticated," said Kovar, who was not involved in the new study. "They are very careful and are not overstating their case."

Vote on Bolton's U.N. nomination postponed as Democrats protest in committee

By Anne Gearan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

John Bolton's nomination as U.N. ambassador suffered an unexpected setback Tuesday when the Republican-controlled Senate Foreign Relations Committee scrapped plans for a vote in favor of a fresh look at allegations of unbecoming conduct.

No date was set for a vote, but a delay of at least two weeks seems likely while the committee looks into fresh allegations, including those of a Dallas businesswoman who says Bolton berated her at an international conference a decade ago.

Some Democrats also bluntly questioned Bolton's veracity.

The decision to postpone a vote closed a rancorous session in which Republicans first sought to push Bolton through the Foreign Relations Committee and Democrats resisted.

"We'll all have to trust each other," said Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the committee chairman, in sealing the unanimous agreement.

Republicans hold a 10-8 majority on the panel, and Lugar had sounded confident early in the session that he had the votes to prevail.

But Republican Sens. Chuck Hagel of Nebraska and George Voinovich of Ohio both expressed reservations about a quick vote – as did a solid phalanx of Democrats.

Bolton is a harsh critic of the United Nations bureaucracy and thus was a provocative choice to be the administration's representative to the world body.

That was enough to generate some Democratic opposition, and his troubles were compounded by allegations about his temperament and his ways of dealing with subordinates.

Democrats on the committee said they were continuing to receive fresh allegations of Bolton's behavior that was imperious or worse.

Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware, the senior Democrat on the panel, read from what he said was a letter from a U.S. Agency for International Development worker in Kyrgyzstan who alleged Bolton harassed her – not sexually – while he was in private practice representing a company.

"She's prepared to provide an affidavit. The letter she sent in, and I'm going to just take a second here, it says, 'When I was dispatching a letter to AID, my hell began. Mr. Bolton proceeded to chase me through the halls of a Russian hotel, throwing things at me, shoving threatening letters under my door and genuinely behaving like a madman. I eventually retreated to my hotel room and stayed there. Mr. Bolton then routinely visited me to pound on the door and shout threats.'"

The committee's delay was a surprise, coming after the White House expressed fresh support for Bolton and Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid all but conceded the nomination would be cleared for a floor vote.

Handicapping Bolton's chances of confirmation in advance, Reid said it was possible Democrats would try to block it if Republicans pushed ahead with their plans.

Women making progress in Iraq

By Humberto J. Gonzalez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On the last leg of a 23-day university tour that has included Harvard University, the University of Chicago, the University of Michigan and many others in the United States, Anis Al-Rawi gave an informational lecture on the oppression of women in Iraq on Tuesday evening in Fiedler Auditorium.

Al-Rawi has been the dean of the College of Science for Women at the University of Baghdad in Iraq since 2003. He received a PhD in radioactive chemistry and studied nuclear physics in Saclay, France.

He showed artifacts portraying the view of Iraqi women.

"Adam and Eve originated in what is now present-day Iraq, making it very important for us to understand the treatment of women in modern day," he said.

About 40 percent of men today maintain specific titles as directors of medicine or curators, while women control 60 percent of that occupation.

Although Al-Rawi spoke primarily about women's progress, he also discussed the current Iraqi-U.S. situation.

In the past 25 years, Iraq has seen the Iraq-Iran War, Operation Desert Storm and Operation Iraqi-Freedom.

"I am very thankful that the United States and the 13 other countries have helped in the liberation of Iraq from its dictator Saddam Hussein, but I find it unnecessary for the current occupancy of the new Iraq," he said.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Anis Al-Rawi, the dean of Iraq's College of Science for Women at the University of Baghdad, gives his presentation on the academic environment for women in Iraq on Tuesday in Fiedler Auditorium.

Al-Rawi said the devastation done to cities has hindered progress.

"To fight terrorism, we must primarily educate one another in science, art and most importantly, the culture of others," he said.

"I didn't really get a great piece on it or anything," Dent said. "(Foster) was throwing me away, and I just sat away and just happened to barely get enough of it to have it drop out there in right field."

Junior Barrett Rice added a home run in the top of the third to stretch the Wildcat lead.

The Shockers (31-12) made the game tight with runs in each of the third and fourth innings, but never really threatened the Wildcats after that, thanks to the Wildcat pitching staff only allowing eight hits.

"Our pitchers did a great job of keeping the ball down and getting ground balls," Dent said. "I give all the credit to the pitching staff tonight. They did a great job."

The Wildcats have now won three consecutive games after taking the last two games from Texas Tech over the weekend. Currently, the Wildcats sit at ninth in the Big 12 Conference standings heading into a weekend series with Texas A&M.

Should the Wildcats take two of three games in the series against the Aggies, K-State would jump ahead of Texas A&M for the eighth spot – the final spot for the Big 12 Tournament.

Head coach Brad Hill said he hopes the win over Wichita State can give his team a mental boost to finish strong through the remainder of the regular season.

"We hope we just build on it and continue to believe we can have a good program when we play with confidence and we give effort," Hill said. "Our big thing is effort and focus. We have to bring our best game every time we play."

TENNIS | Rosenberg named Big 12 Conference Player of the Week

The senior was just named the Big 12 women's tennis Player of the week for April 11-17. The award comes on the heels of her three-set win over Colorado's Lynzee Kever that gave her the all-time singles win record at K-State with 78.

Rosenberg said she was surprised, but happy to receive the award.

"It came as a surprise," she said. "It's really nice. We haven't had many Big 12 player of the week honors. We have before. I think I had it last year once. So it's really cool that the conference is looking at me."

The supporting cast for Rosenberg hasn't let her down. Kvaratskhelia has won a freshman record 12 matches in a row this season and junior Jessica Simosa has won her last three matches, putting her at 10-3 since Feb. 12.

K-State will need a strong performance on all fronts to knock off Nebraska, and Simosa said she's confident she will play well today.

"I've been playing well, so I expect to play well again," Simosa said. "I don't really check the players that I'm going against, I just go to the court and I'm fine with whatever I get."

The Wildcats will try to knock off Nebraska at 2 p.m. at the Washburn Tennis Facility in Manhattan.

FOOTBALL | Snyder says quarterback battle still in the air

liked about Snodgrass, Snyder drew laughs from reporters.

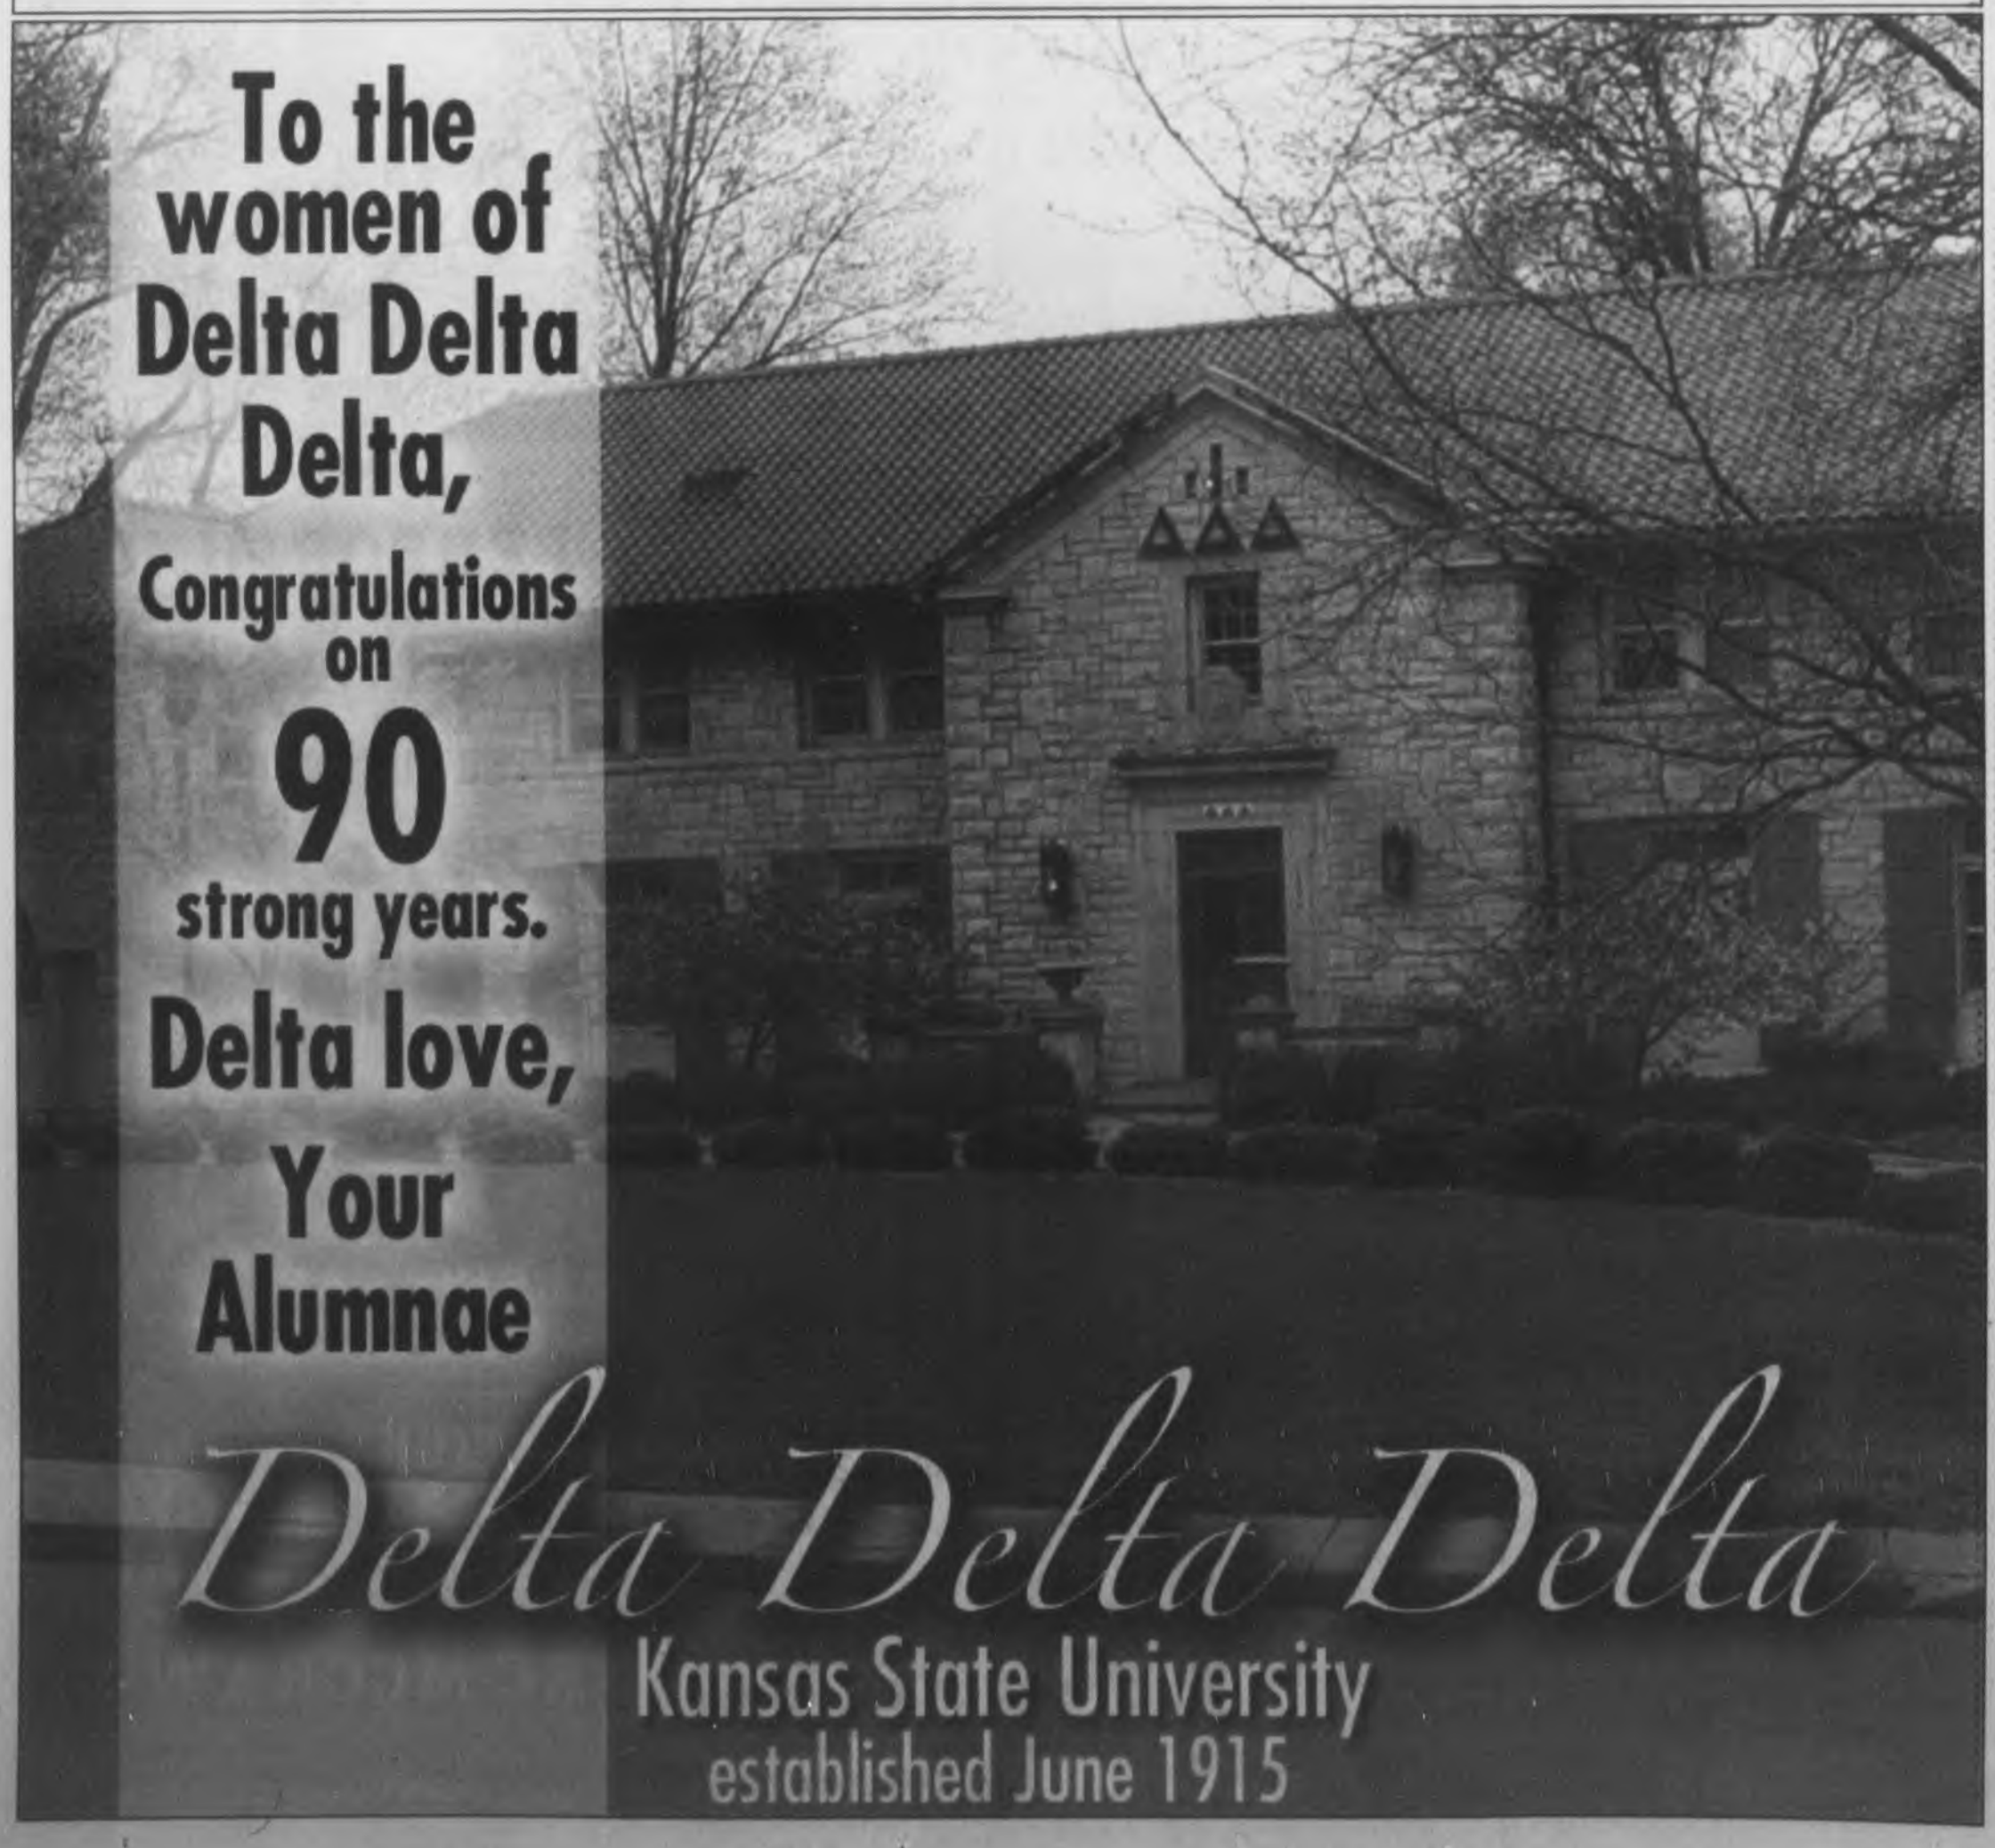
"It's pretty simple, it either goes through or it doesn't," Snyder said. "When it goes through, I really like him. When it doesn't, I still like him, but at a different level."

WEBB, EVRIDGE BATTLE

Snyder said Allen Webb has put a little distance between himself and redshirt freshman Allan Evridge to compete with Meier for the starting quarterback spot in the fall.

Snyder added that Webb still must work on consistency and that Evridge has been "up-and-down" but is constantly working to improve.

PETERSON MOVE



For those wondering why co-offensive coordinator was dropped from assistant coach Greg Peterson's title heading into this spring, Snyder said it had nothing to do with job performance.

"It just works better with what we're doing to position him where we are positioning him," Snyder said.

Peterson was co-offensive coordinator the past two seasons and is still the wide receivers coach.

POPE | Officials confident in new Catholic leader

"He is older, so his papacy might be shorter, but I think he will have a tremendous impact even in that short time."

Larry Sullivan, professor of history at Manhattan Christian College, said that the cardinals probably picked an older pope on purpose.

"They're not figuring that he's going to serve 20-plus years like John Paul did. He can be pope for five or six years and then maybe they could pick someone in their 50s with a longer reign," Sullivan said.

Ratzinger has the advantage of vast experience with, and knowledge of the Catholic Church. He refers to himself as "a simple, humble worker in the vineyard of the Lord."

Ratzinger, will face new challenges, such as the need for interactions with Islam, the divisions between the rich north and the struggling south, as well as issues concerning his own Church.

Sullivan said that because Ratzinger was already one of the most recognizable leaders of the church next to Pope John Paul II, and he said he feels confident that he will keep the Church on the same track.

"We know where he stands on issues so I like the idea of the Roman Catholic Church being conservative and upholding the time-honored principles," Sullivan said.

It looks as though Pope Benedict XVI may also decide to continue the foreign travel that was prevalent during John Paul II's papacy, as the Catholic youth day gathering in Cologne, Germany is in August. The new pope is expected to attend, considering that it is in his home country.

"With the new Holy Father, we can be assured of continuity with his predecessor and of a personality who will lead the church with great responsibility before God," said Heiner Koch, the prelate in charge of Tuesday's events.

Ratzinger 8th German pope elected

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, 78, is now known as Pope Benedict XVI. He was born in 1927 in Marktl am Inn, Germany.

Ratzinger is the eighth German to be elected as Pope. He has published numerous anthologies of essays, lessons and sermons. He speaks 10 languages and is said to be a talented pianist.

He was called serve the military in the last few months of World War II, and he was a student of philosophy and theology from 1946 to 1951 at the University of Munich and Freising. He earned his doctorate in theology in 1953.

After becoming qualified to teach at university level, he taught dogma and fundamental theology from 1959 to 1969 at Freising, Bonn, Münster and Tubingen.

In 1962 he became a consultor to the Archbishop of Cologne Joseph Frings at the II Vatican Council. He worked as a professor and vice president of the University of Regensburg beginning in 1969.

Pope John Paul II appointed him prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of Faith on Nov. 25, 1981. He also held many other positions before becoming Pope. He was the relator of the 5th General Assembly of the Synod of Bishops in 1980, president delegate to the 6th Synodal Assembly in 1983 and vice dean of the College of Cardinals in 1998.

He was also the president of the Commission for the Preparation of the Catechism of the Catholic Church and honorary member of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences.

The release of white smoke and the ringing of bells signaled that a new pope had been elected. Ratzinger later appeared on the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica to greet the faithful.

2 Fort Riley soldiers killed during training

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two soldiers at Fort Riley were killed and five injured Tuesday during a training exercise.

The names of the deceased will not be released until next of kin are notified, said Jeff Coverdale, Fort Riley public affairs officer.

"We will send out a release when families are notified," Coverdale said.

An M113 armored personnel carrier, or tank, rolled over while soldiers were negotiating the squad assault course. The accident occurred on Fort Riley's range 52.

This was the first rollover accident since July 1991, Coverdale said. Four deaths have been caused during training on the post, he said.

The five soldiers who were injured have non-life threatening injuries, according to a news release.

The soldiers in the accident were with Company A, 1st Engineer Battalion, 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division.

K-State Salina interest increases

GlobalFlyer coverage exposed college to more than 350 million viewers

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interest in programs at K-State-Salina has increased since the flight of the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer.

Dixie Schierlman, associate dean of student life for K-State-Salina, said there has been an increase in requests from high schools, grade schools, junior high schools and civic groups to give presentations about the college.

Schierlman said they have done about 18 presentations for about 600 people since GlobalFlyer, more than four times the number given in previous years.

Dean Dennis Kuhlman said it is too early to tell if more students will enroll. However, he said he has also noticed an increased amount of interest.

Kuhlman said there were about 357 million viewers in the United States that saw K-State-Salina during the GlobalFlyer coverage. The economic value of that exposure was estimated at about $20 million, although K-State-Salina spent less than $10,000 on GlobalFlyer events.

"There's literally millions of potential students that have been exposed to Kansas State University," he said.

If there is an increase in enrollment, Kuhlman said K-State-Salina is ready.

"We can grow fairly well in the next couple of years," he said. "We can have about 1,200 students."

The GlobalFlyer attracted between 10,000 and 12,000 fans who watched the landing.

The plane is still in Salina and will be on display 11:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. April 28 for "Dreamers and Achievers, a Panel of Black Aviation Pioneers."

"There's literally millions of potential students that have been exposed to Kansas State University."

The plane will be moved to the Experimental Aircraft Association in Oshkosh, Wisc., at the end of July.

Possible $6.5 million expansion

This is what the inside of the Center for Student Activities could look like. Plans for the Center were drawn up by Ken Ebert, president of the Ken Ebert Design Group, Architects of Manhattan. The plans are very preliminary, Ebert said. Official plans will be made if the referendum is passed Tuesday and a bidding process will take place to choose an architect.

Students can vote whether to fund activities center

Student Activities Center

Students will vote on Tuesday on the possible reallocation of privilege fees to fund the Center for Student Activities.

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Costs are expected to be about $6.5 million for the Center for Student Activities.

Funding for CSA depends on the results of a student referendum Tuesday.

The referendum will ask students if they want to reallocate student fees that are going toward Hale Library's expansion.

Students approved a fee increase of $10.27 per semester in 1993 to fund the expansion, and that will be fully paid in Fall 2006. The bond for the expansion began collecting in 1995 and ends in 2015.

If passed, the referendum will extend that date for a maximum of ten years to 2025, but it will not raise the fees. If the referendum fails, students will continue to pay the $10.27.

Student Governing Association wanted to decide where the money would go so it would have control over it.

Bill Muir, Student Senate faculty representative, said about five years ago, extra money was collected on a bond that was funded by student fees. When that happened, it was President Jon Wefald's decision on what do with the money.

Wefald allowed SGA to decide what to do with it, and the money

TOPEKA – The BTK serial killings in Wichita became an issue Wednesday for legislators, with a House committee endorsing a proposal to spend $405,000 to help the defense of the man accused of the crimes.

The Appropriations Committee decided to allocate $80,573 in the current budget for Dennis Rader's defense and an additional $324,126 in the spending plan for the next fiscal year, which begins July 1. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius recommended spending the money.

Rader faces 10 counts of first-degree murder in Sedgwick County in the strangling and torture killings that began in 1974 and continued for 17 years. BTK is the nickname the killer gave himself, meaning "Bind, Torture, Kill."

Rader, 60, is a former ordinance enforcement officer in Park City, Kan., a Wichita suburb. He is represented by three court-appointed public defenders.

"We realize there are extensive costs," said Rep. Bob Bethell, R-Alden. "We can't shirk the responsibility of paying the attorney who represents him."

The money would go to the state Board of Indigents Defense Services, which supervises legal representation for defendants who cannot afford attorneys.

The board could hire an attorney, a paralegal and an investigator to help Rader's current defense team. Also, some funds would help provide expert witnesses.

Rep. Bonnie Sharp, D-Kansas City, said committee members understood that Rader has a constitutional right to a vigorous defense and that in a high-profile case such as his, "The money will have to be there."

The committee considered the issue as it drafted its version of the year's final spending bill, a measure necessary to complete the $11.3 billion budget for the next fiscal year. The bill is likely to include between $65 million and $70 million in spending not included in budget legislation that legislators approved three weeks ago.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee plans to begin meeting Thursday to draft its own version of the budget bill. The entire Legislature reconvenes April 27.

Students volunteer to help plant at K-State Gardens

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clad in scrubby shorts and T-shirts and armed with shovels and hoes, about nine students volunteered at the K-State Gardens Tuesday and Wednesday.

As part of National Volunteer Week, Community Service Program arranged several service opportunities, including working in the gardens, Kristen Goehausen, AmeriCorps VISTA member volunteering with the CSP, said.

Scott McElwain, director of K-State Gardens, said the volunteers cleaned flower beds, moved shrubs and the daylily collection and planted roses and perennials.

The daylily collection was moved to make room for future walkway construction around the gardens.

"We've done the majority of the clean-up from last season and now we're working on the fine-tuning," McElwain said.

The Gardens, which only has two employees plus student workers, relies heavily on volunteers, from master gardeners to those who just enjoy gardening. For about one week in the spring, five or six volunteers help with planting and maintenance, McElwain said.

"It's really nice to have these groups come in because the more hands we have doing these projects, the more we get done," he said.

Volunteers Renae Wenger, sophomore in pre-nursing, and Whitney Fleming, freshman in pre-nursing, said they received e-mails from CSP telling them about the service opportunity.

"I love being outside," Wenger said. "I like working with plants."

The gardens currently cover 2.5 acres, but plans are underway to expand them to 19 acres. However, the approximately $62 million project is dependent on fundraising, McElwain said.

The projected completion date is between 2010 and 2015.

Meanwhile, planting will continue until the end of May, Gregg Eyestone, associate director of the Gardens, said.

"That's the best time to have things in the ground, before it gets hot and dry," he said.

STUDENT SENATE

Senate to select chairperson

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate is choosing its leader tonight.

Nominations for senate chair were made at last week's meeting. Tonight they will be choosing between Ashley Boldt, Matt King and Tyson Moore.

Ashley Boldt is a junior in food and nutrition-exercise science. She served as the intern coordinator for the 2004-05 term and was re-elected to senate this year for the College of Human Ecology.

Matt King is a junior in political science. He served as chair of the Governmental Relations Committee this year and was re-elected as a senator for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Tyson Moore is a junior in information systems. He served as the vice chair and finished second in the race for student body president. He was re-elected to senate for the College of Engineering.

Bill Muir, faculty representative on senate, said the senate seat of the chair will be considered vacated.

If you go
Senate meeting
When: 7 tonight
Where: Big 12 Room

"If they're elected, their seat is immediately declared vacant," Muir said. "The chair becomes a non-voting head person."

The chair only votes in the event of a tie, which is rare, he said.

"I've seen that happen four times in 13 years," Muir said.

The chair receives $4,459 in scholarship and compensation, he said. Also, the chair has the responsibility of appointing committee chairs and senators to committees, as well as serving on many committees.

Muir said K-State has a strong Student Senate. Senate allocates students' privilege fees and decides how money is to be spent.

"The chair is the most important position in Student Senate," he said. "The student senate has the power of the purse, the student senate chair is the head of that."

SCHOOL BOARD

Virtual learning program gets OK from board

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There was much discussion in USD 383's school board meeting on Wednesday night on what limits, if any, should be placed on virtual learning.

Karen Roberts, Executive Director of Teaching and Learning, said Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 has been using a form of virtual learning for several years already. For the past three years, a program called ORACLE has helped the school teach suspended students, expelled students, homebound students and students with special needs.

Virtual learning would also benefit the military families the district is expecting in the future, she said.

"There are a ton of issues that will happen with the soldiers' family as more and more troops are positioned off-post," said Ronald Walker, Superintendent for Geary County USD 475.

A military family can't be told not to go on vacation during their leave when it's possible that it could be the last time the family is together, he said.

The board also discussed the possibilities of students being able to graduate early with the program and having more people enter the program than they now expect.

"If those students need three years to graduate, then they only need three years," Roberts said.

The board approved the pilot program for $69,625 with a vote of 7-0.

Later in the night, the board also accepted the administration's recommendations on the renewals and non-renewals of contracts for teachers.

TO THE POINT

Activity center vote should include options

Student Senate is putting forth a referendum on Tuesday to fund a Center for Student Activities.

The referendum is to give students a choice, but the only choice is yes or no – yes, we would like our money to go toward CSA, or no, we wouldn't.

That isn't much of a choice.

It is great that the expansion of Hale Library is going to be paid off early in Fall 2006. The bond isn't set to expire until 2015, so extra money will be coming in after the expansion is paid off.

This referendum calls for a possible ten-year extension to 2025.

Funding CSA may be a good way to spend the students' money, but senate should have given us more options.

K-State still has needs, so the referendum could have had more possibilities that were still explicit.

Then students would have a say in the matter.

The fact that students voted overwhelmingly no to fund a Student Activities Center in November 2000 should be a clue that some students may be against this idea. Granted, that referendum called for an increase in student fees and this one doesn't.

The Collegian will be examining this issue further in the days leading up to the referendum. We urge you to educate yourself on the issue.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Babe invasion

Elite unit of American hotties offers solution

Illustrations by Amanda Dinkel | COLLEGIAN

Last year, the Iranian parliament (such as it is) passed a nuclear enrichment bill while shouting "Death to America!" Sure, Iranians use "Death to America" like a teenager uses the word "like," but Iran's determined steps toward nuclear weapons are still alarming.

GRANT REICHERT

As a conservative columnist, let me insert the relevant fear-mongering here. Did you know the nuclear bomb Iran is working toward is a weapon of such unimaginable destructive power that it could destroy virtually all of Aggieville?

Not only that, but it could also incinerate you, which would obviously suck, because it would, like, totally ruin that new Hollister t-shirt you just finished the monthly payments on.

So what is to be done with Iran?

For a variety of reasons, diplomacy and war are unattractive options, but there is a third, extremely attractive one: send an elite all-female unit to Iran. I mean extremely hot females of the variety that spontaneously combust when exposed to pure oxygen.

In contrast to Iran, women in America daily redefine the concept of "public nudity." They wear shorts that 65 percent of the garment's surface area resides somewhere near the colon.

Whereas women in American could very easily use the restroom without even dropping trough, women in Iran are encouraged to wear clothes so formless that it's only possible to make an approximate guess as to what species they belong to.

This unit of American babes would be easy to form: just start a draft of education and apparel design majors.

Plus, if they were drafted, it's not like they would be missing out on an actual education.

This elite unit would be able to deal with Iran, for three reasons.

First, because of the way Iranians are used to women dressing, our elite hotties would have quite the devastating impact. Such a culture shock it would be, that the mere sight of these scantily clad, nubile twenty-somethings would probably impregnate Iranian men.

Second, according to Amir Taheri of the Benador Associates, the Iranian president in 1981 announced that "scientific research had shown that women's hair emitted rays that drove men insane."

I've noticed this as well, but I've always attributed it to a noxious combination of hair products and fake bake re-emissions. Either way, our American hotties would go over there and shoot their hair lasers at the Iranian men, driving them insane. If this plan has a downside, I'm just not seeing it.

Third, there's "the babe theory of democracy." If you followed the news of Lebanon's democracy protests, you will have noticed there were an incredibly large number of incredibly attractive women present. Many bloggers postulated a causal relationship.

Wherever there are a large number of babes, you can be sure that men will follow. Babes at democracy protests? Yeah, voting is like a right, man. Babes at a Feminist Convention? Yeah, down with phallocentric, patriarchal oppressors, man--er, woman.

Of course there are the logistical difficulties, like how to get 350 tons of hand lotion to the unit each day.

But, following in the great tradition of other selfless American patriots, I will thanklessly volunteer myself for the difficult position of company commander/massage therapist.

For God and country, y'know, God and country.

Grant Reichert is a sophomore in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Forensics team performed well at meet

When I left you two weeks ago, the American Forensics Association National Individual Events Tournament (AFA-NIET) was in full swing.

AARON DUNCAN

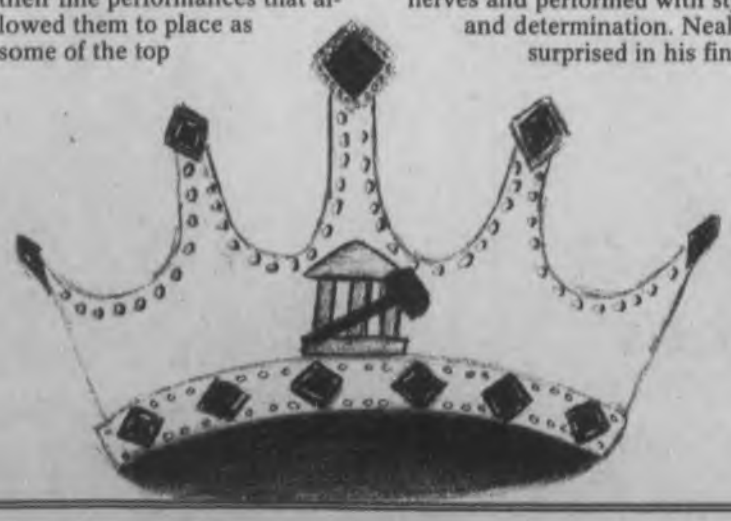
The team had performed admirably and was in position to place as one of the top twenty teams in the nation. After elimination rounds were posted, four students were still in the hunt for an individual national championship: senior Hillary Hoover, junior Neal Stewart, junior Nick Barton and sophomore Julia Stoskopf.

All these students made it to the first elimination round – quarter finals.

After quarterfinal rounds we all had to wait to see who would advance to semi-finals. Anticipation was in the air at Sunday night's annual AFA-NIET banquet. The banquet began with a series of thank yous to all who helped made the tournament possible.

K-State's own Craig Brown spoke eloquently about his experience as tournament host. The night's featured speaker was the head of our speech, communication, theatre and dance department, David Procter. Procter delighted the crowd with stories about his forensics career and his memorable forensics foibles.

As the evening drew to close, tournament director Larry Schnoor approached the stage to announce the students who would be advancing to semi-finals.



The announcements brought a mixture of joy and disappointment as Julia did not advance to semi-finals, but both Neal and Nick did. Hillary competed in the last round of the day on Sunday, and because results from it had not yet been tabulated, she had to wait till the next morning to find out if she would move on.

Unfortunately, Monday morning we learned that Hillary had not advanced to semi-finals. Later we learned that both Hillary and Julia were very close to making it out of their quarterfinal rounds. Both deserved to be proud of their fine performances that allowed them to place as some of the top speakers in the nation and earn valuable points for our team.

K-State now had only two students still alive in the tournament. However, the dynamic duo of Nick and Neal were alive in four different events.

After another round of competition it was time to post the six speakers in each event who would be competing in the final round, with the national title on the line. Of their four combined events, they advanced two. Nick finaled in dramatic interpretation performing Christopher Titus' one man show "Norman Rockwell is Bleeding."

Neal laughed it up, advancing to finals in after-dinner speaking, an event where speakers make a serious point through the use of humor. Both men calmed their nerves and performed with style and determination. Neal was surprised in his final round when he looked out into the audience to see President Wefald cheering him on.

With the last round over, we all waited with anticipation for the results to be tallied and the awards to be handed down.

After six months of tournaments and three days of grueling competition it was time to for the forensics season to draw to a close.

Stewart stepped to the stage and received third place in the nation in after-dinner speaking. Next, Nick Barton was awarded second place in dramatic interpretation.

They also both placed in the top twenty in the nation for individual sweepstakes, and as a team, your Wildcats placed seventh. The team had accomplished its goal improving on last year's twelfth-place finish and returning to the top ten.

Everyone on the team did an outstanding job each contributing in his or her own unique way. Seniors Chaz Steimel, Travis Roberts and Hoover will be dearly missed next year when a strong returning team storms Gainesville, Fla., in pursuit of the AFA-NIET crown.

Procrastination a part of college

By Nick Santos
THE NEWS RECORD (U. CINCINNATI)

As I sit in front of this computer screen with a mostly blank page in front of me and a deadline looming over my head like a sharpened guillotine blade, I am reminded of something that a very wise young man once said to someone else while I was eavesdropping on his conversation: "Procrastination is like masturbation. It feels good at the time. But in the end you only screw yourself." Wiser words have never been spoken.

Reflecting on this poignant knowledge, I've come to realize what a big part of the college experience procrastination really is. It has become almost as big a part of matriculation as endless construction and the tuition raise. It's becoming a part of the very essence of the college student.

Webster's describes procrastination as, "To put off doing something, especially out of habitual carelessness or laziness." We've all done it, some more than others, but procrastination has become more and more what professors expect out of students.

For example my psychology professor assigned us a paper that was due Sunday at a very odd time, 9:13 a.m. In assigning the paper he let the class know that no matter what odd time he made the due date there were always a few students that would post their assignment online minutes before it was due. I remember thinking to myself, "Well I'll show that guy. I'll have it posted days before the due date."

But alas, the whole week passed and I did nothing to try to complete the wretched assignment. I vowed instead to do it Friday afternoon, before the weekend started. Then when Friday came, I wasted the afternoon away playing my new Punisher video game and watching re-runs of Teen Titans on Cartoon Network before realizing that it was time to get dressed and go to the bar. I got the assignment posted at 8:45 Sunday morning.

Hey, no harm, no foul, right?

In the years I've spent perfecting this rather strenuous and pulse-raising craft, I've come to realize the three distinct methods with which procrastination is most successfully carried out.

There are the procrastinators who choose to stay up late or whom I like to call "burners of the proverbial midnight oil." The idea behind this is simple: Sleep deprivation = more work done = successful procrastination. This is the traditional form.

The extreme, lazier form of procrastination is the early-wake method. To pull this off you have to a) be extremely lazy and neglectful, b) exude a dedication to getting up before the sun does, and c) be willing to put your brain in a very stressful and fearful state-of-mind first thing in the morning.

Only experienced procrastinators should use this method. An attempt to complete this daunting task by a novice would surely end with defeat and very sad thoughts of failure and inadequacy.

Which brings me to the very last method, which is not so successful but tells us something of the nature of procrastination. The idea is to push back the task at hand to the very last possible moment, then, after exhausting all other options, giving up and completely abandoning the task all together.

Of course this method tends to wreak havoc in the form of failed grades and termination of employment, but it also conveys the true reason behind procrastination, the fact that we just don't want to do those things at all.

So, fellow students, procrastinate away, because soon we'll be old and we'll have no fun at all, so we might as well enjoy it now.

Besides, you'll get it done ... eventually.

Many individuals, groups involved in Diversity in Action

Editor,

Thank you for writing a wrap-up story about our year in office. However, we feel that our involvement with Diversity in Action was not accurately represented.

Spearheaded by the Multicultural Business Student Association, Diversity in Action (DIA) was a collaborative effort among many groups on campus.

We were very fortunate to have the opportunity to work with MBSA, American Ethnic Studies Student Association, the Entrepreneurship Club and our SGA Cabinet, among others. We feel that credit should be given where credit is due.

It was the effort of many talented individuals and groups that made DIA the success that it was.

We also want to thank everyone we had the chance to get to know and learn from during the planning process for DIA.

State science-education standards report hurts actual science

Editor,

This letter is to correct misunderstandings about the science standards in Monday's editorial. The critical decision of the State BOE is not between drafts 1 and 2 of the standards revision committee but between the excellent standards developed by the committee and a "Minority Report" presented by Creationist and Intelligent Design (ID) supporters.

The primary changes made in the Minority Report are: 1) to imply that science is based on atheism, 2) to change the definition of science to include supernatural action, and 3) to make the historical sciences appear to be untestable. These changes completely misrepresent science and will do great damage to its teaching and accurate understanding.

The quality standards presented by the revision committee were written over an extended period with extensive public comment and thorough external review. By contrast, the Minority Report is the culmination of repeated actions made outside the established process for reviewing science standards and has been rejected by the full standards review committee. This Minority Report was also used as the topic of public forums around the state and received significant opposition.

Finally, the ID supporters on the Board scheduled the upcoming hearings outside of established process and appointed three anti-evolutionists to act as a subcommittee to evaluate the science testimony. The hearings are not to inform the decision-making of the Board since they already have the votes to pass the Minority Report.

The scientific community, led by Kansas Citizens for Science, has overwhelmingly chosen to boycott these hearings since they are essentially a tax-supported effort by the ID supporters to legitimize their religiously and politically motivated actions.

Solid draft necessary for Chiefs to improve

NATHAN RYERSON

Well, Kansas City Chiefs fans, it's déjà vu all over again. The Chiefs are heading into this weekend's draft with the same problems and expectations as last year.

The Chiefs went into last year's draft coming off 13-3 season that ended with frustration and disappointment. The team needed to fix its defense, but failed to deliver.

This year, the Chiefs head into the draft with the same focus on defense, only this time, they are coming off a 7-9 season that finally opened some eyes – hopefully.

This offseason has been better than previous ones for the Chiefs. Some of the holes have been filled through free agency, but the team is nowhere near ready to compete.

The Chiefs need to fill a gaping hole at the corner position. Starter Eric Warfield has become a solid player, but after him, you find Dexter "I just need to retire" McCleon.

McCleon was good five years ago, but after nine years in the league, he has lost a few steps.

If I were in charge of the Chiefs, I would do one of two things to fill the void at corner. The most obvious choice is to sign the best free agent corner on the market, Ty Law.

Law, of the New England Patriots, is still available because of an injury he sustained last season. He would fill the void effectively, despite the hefty price tag he would carry with him.

The other option is to use a draft pick effectively.

I suggest trading up to get Antrell Rolle from the University of Miami or Adam "Pac-Man" Jones from West Virginia University. Both are good corners and could come in and start.

The Chiefs' other issue to be addressed through the draft is at linebacker.

Kansas City signed a solid linebacker in Kendrell Bell from the Pittsburgh Steelers, but the only other solid linebacker for the Chiefs is Scott Fujita. However, Fujita recently had surgery on his ankle, and is not a guarantee to play next season.

There will still be some good linebackers available in the second and third rounds. If Derek Wake from Penn State University is available in those rounds, the Chiefs could pick him and have a solid linebacker on their hands.

Wake had a great NFL combine and is a good outside pass-rusher, something the Chiefs lacked last year outside of defensive end Jared Allen.

Then there is the aging wide receiver corps.

As much as it pains me, the Chiefs have had their eye on University of Oklahoma wide receiver Mark Clayton, or, they could possibly take Reggie Brown from the University of Georgia.

Regardless of when they pick or what position, the Chiefs need to be smart about this year's draft. They need to pick what is best for them, and not necessarily pick the best player on the board.

Currently, 10 picks are available for the Chiefs, the most since 1991 when the draft was 12 rounds instead of seven.

I'm not up for the Chiefs taking all defensive players and a wide receiver. They also need to address the aging offensive line, and Trent Green isn't the youngest of quarterbacks.

I see the Chiefs having a solid draft this year, because for once, the Carl Peterson gang has realized they have a real problem on the defensive side of the ball, and crossing your fingers and praying doesn't work in the NFL.

Wildcats drop close match with Nebraska

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State just can't seem to get over the hump.

For the second time in a row, the Wildcats dropped a home match 4-3, this time to the University of Nebraska. K-State began the match by losing the doubles point, and like the previous Colorado match, it proved to be fatal.

The Wildcats went on to win three singles points, tying the score at three with only one match left. That match was the No. 4 singles – Tereza Prochazkova vs. Nebraska's Pamela Castellejos.

Prochazkova rallied after dropping the first set, which forced a third but fell apart late, dropping the match 6-2, 5-7, 6-0.

Head coach Steve Bietau said while the match didn't go the way

Volleyball team shows improvement

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In just four seasons as the head coach of the K-State volleyball team, Suzie Fritz has already become one of the most successful coaches in the history of the program.

With a record of 91-33, Fritz has the highest winning percentage of any K-State coach, winning 73 percent of the matches she has coached.

She already has one Big 12 Conference Championship under her belt (2003), is third on the all-time wins list at K-State and has taken the Wildcats to four consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances.

The Wildcats are nearing the end of their spring season where they have compiled a 14-2 record, beating the likes of national-powerhouses Florida and Illinois along the way.

On Wednesday, as she prepares to enter her fifth season at the helm, Fritz sat down with the Collegian to talk about the spring season and to look ahead to the fall.

How has the team played during the spring schedule and what do you see that you like out of the team so far?

"I think we've made significant improvement.

"The thing I have enjoyed the most about this team is that they are – as a strength and a weakness – they are young, and therefore very willing to learn and improve and work hard. That has been a tremendous benefit to them. This has been one of the hardest working teams that we've had.

WOMEN'S GOLF

Wildcats looks to keep momentum at Big 12 Championship

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team will try to keep its momentum going heading into this weekend's Big 12 Championships in Austin, Texas. The last outing for the Wildcats was the Susie Maxwell Classic, where the team finished in sixth, the highest finish of the spring.

The Wildcats will compete for the Big 12 Championship at the Hills Country Course, a course the team is already familiar with. On March 11-13, K-State competed at the Betsy Rawls Invitational in Austin, Texas, on the same course, coming in 14th.

In addition to the team's preparation for the Big 12 Championships, on Tuesday, four K-State golfers were named to the Academic All-Big 12 First Team.

Sophomores Katy Heffel and Helene Robert, along with seniors Sarah Heffel and Stephanie Limoges were the honorees from K-State. Only Nebraska placed more golfers on the Academic All-Big 12 First Team, as six Huskers earned selections. To be named to the first team, players must have at least a 3.2 grade point average.

K-State has made improvement over the course of the spring. At the beginning of the spring season, the Wildcats finished 14th, 12th and 14th in their first three tournaments. In the teams' past two invitationals, the team has finished 10th and sixth, respectively.

At the Maxwell Classic, the Wildcats picked up some momentum to finish the season strong. Robert led K-State for the tournament, finishing in a tie for 20th while finishing the three-round event with a total of 231. The Wildcats beat two Big 12 teams at the tournament, Nebraska and Oklahoma, who finished seventh and 11th, respectively.

K-State will start play at the Big 12 Championships on April 22 and continue play through the 24th.

MLB | Umpire investigated in alleged assault on plane

DENVER — Authorities are investigating allegations that a major league umpire assaulted an American Airlines flight attendant on a plane to Denver, a source familiar with the investigation told The Associated Press Wednesday.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, identified the umpire as Paul W. Schrieber, a five-year veteran who officiated games between the Arizona Diamondbacks and Colorado Rockies in Denver on Monday and Tuesday.

Schrieber, 38, of Scottsdale, Ariz., had no listed phone number. Officials with Major League Baseball and the World Umpires Association did not immediately return calls.

The investigation was first reported by the Rocky Mountain News Wednesday.

GOLF | Goosen: women shouldn't get exemptions

BEIJING — U.S. Open champion Retief Goosen fanned the flames of the debate on women entering men's golf events on Wednesday by saying female players should be forced to qualify.

Goosen

"I think in general the players feel it's not the right thing," said the South African, who played a charity skins event with South Korea's Grace Park in Thailand at the weekend.

"If they qualify for the tournament, they go through qualifying school ... then it's fine. But just to keep giving invites away is probably not the right thing."

Goosen, ranked fifth in the world, shared the Tiger Skins title with Denmark's Thomas Bjorn. Park was playing against men for the first time in Phuket.

CBB | Illinois' Williams to enter NBA draft

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Junior guard Deron Williams will skip his senior season at Illinois and enter the NBA draft.

Williams

Williams said Tuesday night that he has signed with an agent, which prevents him from returning to the Illini next season.

The 6-foot-3 Williams, a third-team AP All-American known for his playmaking and defensive abilities, averaged 12.5 points per game this season as the Illini reached the national championship game, but he led the team with 264 assists, an average of almost seven per game. He was selected first-team All-Big Ten for the second consecutive season.

CFB | BCS officials go back to work next week

NEW YORK — Bowl Championship Series officials are set to meet in Phoenix next week, again faced with the task of coming up with a new way to determine which teams will play for a national title.

The BCS reworked its standings formula last year, simplifying the equation and putting more emphasis on The Associated Press Top 25 and the coaches poll. But the increased scrutiny on poll voters and the importance of every vote spawned new controversies and criticism.

The AP asked the BCS to stop using its poll after last season, leaving the BCS in need of another component to insert into its calculations. The AP media poll and coaches' poll each counted for one-third of a team's points in the BCS standings last year. A compilation of computer rankings made up the final third.

BCS officials were generally pleased with the scaled-down formula and would prefer not straying far from it this year.

MLB | Rangers player suspended for steroids use

NEW YORK — Texas Rangers minor league pitcher Agustin Montero was suspended for 10 days Wednesday, becoming the third player to test positive under major league baseball's new steroids policy.

Agustin, who has never appeared in a major league game, failed the drug test while he was on the Rangers' 40-man roster during spring training. He was designated for assignment on April 2, when opening-day rosters were set, then sent outright to Frisco of the Double-A Texas League. He is 0-1 with a 5.63 ERA in eight innings over five relief appearances.

Comedy, adventure important themes in 'Hamlet' spin-off play

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hamlet's college friends have their own wild, funny and intellectual play.

The comedy "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead" opens at 8 tonight in Nichols Theatre.

Playwright and filmmaker Tom Stoppard wrote "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead" about two characters from William Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

"They are dealing with what it means to be a real person in the universe with modest values," said Charlotte MacFarland, director and associate professor of theater.

Hamlet comes home from college for what he thinks is his father's funeral. Instead of a funeral, a wedding between Hamlet's mother and Claudius, his father's brother, is taking place.

The ghost of his father appears to Hamlet saying he was poisoned by Claudius so he could steal his crown and wife. It is now up to Hamlet to seek revenge.

Claudius sends Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to spy on Hamlet, but tells Hamlet they are there to cheer him up.

Stoppard centers the play on the two trying not to get in trouble with this situation.

Rosencratz is played by Michael Wieser, freshman in theater.

Wieser said his character is fun-loving and full of life.

"Rosencrantz doesn't get everything that's thrown his way, but he's trustworthy to Guildenstern," he said.

One of the challenges Wieser faced in playing his character was making him child-like without making him childish.

"Rosencrantz has the innocence of a child, but he's not petty," Weiser said.

George Stavropoulos, senior in theater, plays Guildenstern.

"He's sort of the straight serious guy. As a realist, he wants to make sense of everything in the world around him," Stavropoulos said.

Stavropoulos said his character was difficult to develop.

"I had to put in extra time interpreting the text so it's easier for the audience to understand," he said.

Both agreed the physical aspect of remaining on stage during the entire play was the biggest challenge.

"Michael and I have great chemistry, which is important for these roles," Stavropoulos said.

MacFarland said the play will serve as an educational experience for the audience.

"It's one of the most important plays of the 20th century, but it's also funny, thoughtful and exciting," she said.

Immediate friendship not a good idea after breakup

"We can still be friends."

It's a phrase that has been uttered at the end of many relationships. While the bonds of couplehood are being dissolved, the promise of friendship appears to try to help ease the pain. But does it?

LACEY STORER

Does being friends make a breakup easier? Can someone really ever be just friends with an ex?

In my experience, the answer is a resounding "NO!" I don't think exes can really just be platonic friends, at least not right away.

You may try to transition from couple to friends right away because you don't want to have that person not be a part of your life, even for just a little bit.

You might think being friends right after your breakup will help take the edge off the sting of it, but I think that really all it does it make it drag on longer.

For one, when you hang out with your ex-turned-friend, you are reminded of all the things you loved about him or her, and why you liked being with your ex so much. This is great, until you realize that your time together is over, and at the end of the night you will be going home alone.

And then there's the matter of physical attraction. It's not going to go away just because the two of you broke up. And it's far too easy to go from watching a movie on the couch to snuggling on the couch to making out on the couch.

As nice as it might be, however comfortable and familiar it might be, hooking up confuses things by blurring the line between friends and more than friends.

You're broken up, but you still hang out and fool around. This isn't friendship, but limbo between friends and lovers. Again, this can only drag out the process of getting over someone. If you really want to move on, you won't be able to while still in a pseudo-relationship.

The worst gray area comes when another person comes into the mix. If you've been hanging out and hooking up on a regular basis, what are you going to do when the ex is not available all of a sudden because he or she is with someone else?

You'll get jealous and angry, but won't be able to act on it because, after all, you're just friends.

To become friends with your ex, real friends, I think there need to be a few key factors. First, I think there needs to be a substantial period of separation before you try being friends. Don't talk or hang for a few months, so you'll give yourselves a chance to get over the other person.

The relationship obviously needs to end on good terms, so you actually want to be friends with each other. I also think it helps if the relationship wasn't very serious, but you can't really plan this.

If you really want to try and keep your ex in your life as a friend, just remember to take some time to get over him or her as your girlfriend or boyfriend.

Smoking group finds hot spots

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Adam Rigdon and his friends were tired of always smoking cigarettes outside of the residence halls.

Rigdon and his friends take their lawn chairs out for a smoke break, and since then, the Nomadic Smokers have held strong.

"We just got bored and it seemed like something to do," Rigdon, junior in information sciences, said.

Tyler Martin, freshman in computer science, who started the group with Rigdon, said the group members became bored smoking at the residence halls so often.

"We were tired of sitting on the grates," Martin said. "You kind of get sick of the same old place."

"We also wanted to put our lawn chairs to use," Doug Berz, sophomore in criminology, said.

The group, which consists of four or five consistent members and a few stragglers who join, meet for about a half an hour every day from the beginning of February until the weather gets bad.

"We kind of took a break these last couple weeks," said Rigdon.

They travel across campus for their smoke breaks, lawn chairs in tow. They try to go to parts of campus they don't often walk by on the way to classes.

"You see more people, you get to see more places on campus," Martin said.

The guys said although they get some attention when they sit near busy areas of campus, they started the group just as a way to hang out while smoking.

"It's kind of like a social event," Berz said.

He said one day they were sitting out by the International Student Center and they received a lot of attention.

"Everyone stopped and looked over as they drove by," Berz said.

Even though they're having a good time, the guys said they try not to bother anyone with their cigarette smoke.

"I don't think anybody minds or has been bothered by it," Martin said.

Residence halls compete

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residence halls came together in Forum Hall Wednesday to make their bids for hall of the year.

Ford Hall, Boyd Hall and Goodnow Hall were told April 13 that they were the three halls in the running for the award.

The halls were given a week to make a five-minute skit.

Each skit let judges know what activities the students in the halls have done and how they have gotten their residents involved.

"I liked the themes of the plays and the enthusiasm of the people," Shyra Wallace, freshman in business and pre-law, said.

"I liked Ford and Goodnow's concept for their plays."

Ford Hall performed a grocery store-like skit, where residents who performed went to different aisles and were told different activities the hall did during the year.

Boyd Hall performed a mock diary to show the judges the activities they have done in the hall.

Grant Cochenour, graduate student in electrical engineering, looks on as Rachel Riedel, sophomore in elementary education asks for money during a skit Wednesday evening. Skits were performed by three residence halls, Boyd, Ford and Goodnow, for an opportunity to win Hall of the year.

Catrina Rawson
COLLEGIAN

Goodnow Hall performed a medley of old television shows including Duck Tales, Power Rangers and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

"We did very well," Jonathan Tarman, junior in life science and pre-medicine, said.

"I was impressed the way the members of our hall pulled together to make the presentation."

Tarman is the multicultural assistant for Goodnow Hall.

After each performance, the halls were given a five-minute question and answer period, where members of the audience would ask them questions about the year.

Questions ranged from budget problems some halls were faced with to the diversity programs the halls had.

The judges deliberated after residents from the halls left of which hall should receive hall of the year.

The residents of the halls will not know the results from Wednesday night's competetion until Tuesday.

Café to open in Hale Library after minimal summer construction

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Planning efforts for the Hale Café are on schedule, but construction won't begin until summer and will be minimal.

The café will be built in an existing room inside the sunflower gate entrance of Hale Library.

Lori Goetsch, dean of K-State libraries, began planning the café in the fall and formally put those plans into action in early February.

Goetsch said she saw firsthand the success and convenience this type of café offers at the University of Maryland where she worked before she joined K-State in August 2004.

She said she was also inspired by the café that was originally in Hale, Bookplate Café, which was closed in 1998 due to budget cuts. These budget cuts also led to the reduction in hours the library would be open and available to students.

Goetsch is working in conjunction with Tina Griffin, food services director at the Union, to bring the café concept back to students on the go.

Griffin and Goetsch haven't formally worked out funding issues, but it shouldn't hinder construction or business relations.

"There'll be some sharing of start-up costs," Goetsch said. "We think the start-up costs are as such that we should be able to handle it. We don't have to buy new stuff. They're really doing a great job at dining services to keep the costs down."

Construction will begin in the summer and will most likely be completed by campus facilities, Griffin said.

"We anticipate having a soft opening in August, a few weeks before classes start," Goetsch said. "Then have a grand opening at the beginning of the school year."

Operating hours will be 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Thursday and Friday 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The menu is going to consist of various coffee drinks, pastries, yogurts, packaged sandwiches, salads, chips and candy bars.

This dining format combines the atmosphere and the quality food of a café with the fast service of a convenience store, Goetsch said.

Chartwells is currently taking applications to fill positions. Applicants can turn in all materials to the Chartwells main office on the second floor of the K-State Student Union for Tina Griffin.

Be aware of storm season in Kansas

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students should remember to stay safe during storm season.

Mary Knapp, state climatologist for K-State Research and Extension, said students from Kansas may have forgotten good safety habits.

"Even people from storm central (Kansas and the surrounding area), when you're in a college environment, you may not have thought of your safety plans," she said.

Knapp said although the alert programs are in place, people need to be responsible for knowing what is happening.

"Kansas has a good program for getting information out to people," she said. "But people need to be involved in their own safety."

Knapp said being aware of severe weather is a good way to stay safe.

Did you know?

Storm kit supplies

- Flashlight with fresh batteries
- Battery-powered radio
- Deck of cards
- Medications
- Food and water supplies for 48 hours
- First-aid kit

"You can tune in to the weather and find out what's going on. Watching forecasts so it's easier to plan activities is good too," she said.

There are three different types of warnings that are most severe: the severe thunderstorm warning, the tornado warning and the flood warning.

With the severe thunderstorm warning, there is a chance of lightning and hail, and Knapp said the best idea is to get indoors and stay indoors.

"On campus, there's usually something taller around you (buildings), so lightning isn't much of a threat. But you still aren't risk-free," she said. "Out in an open area it's more of a hazard. If you hear thunder, then lightning is close enough to be dangerous."

Tornado warnings can be dangerous if students haven't had proper training, Knapp said.

"Unless you've gone through the storm spotter training, you should stay indoors with a weather radio," she said.

The storm spotter meetings usually take place in March, before storm season. Pat Collins, director of Riley County emergency management, said the meetings have gained popularity.

"It's severe weather awareness. The last couple years, we've been inundated with people wanting to know about severe weather. We're lucky enough to have the National Weather Service come down and present their storm spotter training," he said.

Another dangerous warning is the flood warning. Flooding can be a major hazard in cities. Although there may not be a lot of rain, it can still come quickly enough to flood the streets, Knapp said.

To stay safe during storm season, having a plan is important.

"Usually the safest place is in a basement.

"If you don't have access to a basement, go to an interior room with several walls between you and the outdoors. Interior closets and bathrooms are good places," she said.

Collins agreed with Knapp.

"Be aware of what's going on and listen to the weather. Get a feeling of what might happen and keep your eyes open," she said.

More than 50 bodies found in river in Iraq

By Sameer N. Yacoub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – The bodies of more than 50 people have been recovered from the Tigris River and have been identified, Iraqi President Jalal Talabani said Wednesday. He said the bodies were believed to have been those of hostages seized in a region south of Baghdad earlier this month.

In a separate discovery, another 19 Iraqis were shot to death and left lined up against a bloodstained wall in a soccer stadium in the town of Haditha, about 140 miles northwest of Baghdad, an Iraqi reporter and residents said.

Talabani did not specify when or where the bodies were recovered from the Tigris. However, he gave the information in response to a question about the search for hostages reportedly seized from the area around Madain, 14 miles south of Baghdad.

Shiite leaders and government officials claimed last week that Sunni militants had abducted as many as 100 Shiite residents from the area and were threatening to kill them unless all Shiites left. But when Iraqi forces moved into the town of about 1,000 families over the weekend, they found no captives, and residents said they had seen no evidence anyone had been seized.

"Terrorists committed crimes there. It is not true to say there were no hostages. There were. They were killed, and they threw the bodies into the Tigris," Talabani said. "We have the full names of those who were killed and those criminals who committed these crimes."

In Haditha, taxi drivers Rauf Salih and Ousama Halim said they rushed to the stadium after hearing gunshots and found the bodies lined up against a wall. The reporter and other residents counted 19 bodies and said all appeared to have been shot.

Residents said they believed the victims – all men in civilian clothes – were soldiers abducted by insurgents as they headed home for a holiday marking the birthday of the prophet Muhammad.

The reporter did not see any military identification documents on the bodies and it was not possible to verify the claim, which may have been based on a previous incidents, including one in October when insurgents ambushed and executed about 50 unarmed Iraqi soldiers as they were heading home from a U.S. military training camp northeast of Baghdad.

U.S. and Iraqi military forces had no report of any killings at the stadium.

Militant violence has surged in the past week, especially in Baghdad, with explosions often going off one after another in the morning.

The first car bomb exploded near a U.S. convoy in an area of western Baghdad where the notorious Abu Ghraib prison is located, setting an oil tanker on fire, said police Maj. Moussa Abdulkarim. Two Iraqis were killed and five wounded, said Hussam Abdulrazaq, an official at the nearby al-Yarmouk Hospital.

Bankruptcy law signed

By Nedra Pickler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush signed the biggest rewrite of U.S. bankruptcy law in a quarter century on Wednesday, making it harder for debt-ridden Americans to wipe out their obligations.

"Bankruptcy should always be a last resort in our legal system," Bush said. "If someone does not pay his or her debts, the rest of society ends up paying them."

Many debtors will have to work out repayment plans instead of having their obligations erased in bankruptcy court under the law, which will go into effect in six months. The 500-page legislation won final congressional approval last week after being pushed for eight years by banks and credit companies.

The measure would require people with incomes above a certain level to pay some or all of their credit-card charges, medical bills and other obligations under a court-ordered bankruptcy plan.

Bush said the new law makes the financial system more fair for debtors and creditors.

"The act of Congress I sign today will protect those who legitimately need help, stop those who try to commit fraud and bring greater stability and fairness to our financial system," Bush said.

Those who fought the bill's passage said the change will fall especially hard on low-income working people, single mothers, minorities and the elderly and will remove a safety net for those who have lost their jobs or face crushing medical bills.

The financial services industry argued that bankruptcy frequently is the last refuge of gamblers, impulsive shoppers, divorced or separated fathers avoiding child support, and multimillionaires who buy mansions in states with liberal homestead exemptions to shelter assets from creditors.

"In recent years, too many people have abused the bankruptcy laws," Bush said. "They walked away from debts even when they had the ability to repay them."

New personal bankruptcy filings edged down from 1,613,097 in the year ending June 30, 2003, to 1,599,986 in the year ending last June 30, breaking an upward trend of recent years.

Between 30,000 and 210,000 people – from about 4 percent to 20 percent of those who dissolve their debts in bankruptcy each year in exchange for forfeiting some assets – would be disqualified from doing so under the legislation, according to the American Bankruptcy Institute.

Those people have six months until the law takes effect to escape the tougher guidelines. Bankruptcy attorneys have said they anticipate a rush to the courthouse.

Under the current system, a federal bankruptcy judge determines whether individuals must repay some or all of their debt.

Under the new law, those with insufficient assets or income could still file a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, which, if approved by a judge, erases debts entirely after certain assets are forfeited.

Those with income above their state's median income who can pay at least $6,000 over five years – $100 a month – would be forced into Chapter 13, where a judge would then order a repayment plan.

Pope Benedict pledges to work toward reunifying all Christians

By Tony Czuczka
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY – Charting a papacy in the tradition of his predecessor, Pope Benedict XVI pledged Wednesday to work for unity among Christians and to seek "an open and sincere dialogue" with other faiths.

In his first Mass as pontiff, Benedict invoked the words of John Paul II – "Be not afraid" – a message designed to show he is intent on following the groundbreaking path of the late pope.

The German-born pontiff also stressed he would draw on the work of the Second Vatican Council, the 1962-65 meeting that modernized the church, an issue important to liberals who are wary of Benedict from his time as Roman Catholicism's doctrinal enforcer.

As the world's 1.1 billion Catholics got the first hints of where the papacy is headed, followers of other religions weighed its meaning for interfaith relations. By and large, reactions were hopeful and expectant.

"I think he has been very open, so I have no worries about the ecumenical route," said British Cardinal Cormac Murphy-O'Connor. "It will continue. No doubt at all."

Benedict, the former Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, said his primary task would be to try to reunify all Christians and stressed that sentiment alone was not enough. "Concrete acts that enter souls and move consciences are needed," he said.

The 78-year-old pontiff said he wanted to continue "an open and sincere dialogue" with other religions and would do everything in his power to improve the ecumenical cause.

But Benedict has been one of the most forceful Vatican voices for Catholic missionary work and other forms of evangelization. He was the intellectual drive behind the 2000 document "Dominus Iesus," which outlined the Catholic Church as an exclusive road to salvation and angered Protestants, Jews, Muslims and other non-Christians.

In Israel, admiration for John Paul's tireless efforts to promote Jewish-Catholic reconciliation mixed with unease about Benedict's time in the Hitler Youth as a teenager.

House to open DeLay investigation

By Larry Margasak
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Retreating under pressure, Republicans on the House ethics committee said Wednesday they were ready to open an investigation into allegations of wrongdoing against Majority Leader Tom DeLay.

Four of the five Republicans on the committee were ready to move ahead, said Rep. Doc Hastings, the panel's Republican chairman. The panel also has five Democratic members.

The Republicans were "prepared to vote at the earliest opportunity to empanel an investigations subcommittee to review various allegations concerning travel and other actions" by DeLay, he said.

The ethics committee has authority to start an investigation based on information it receives "through public and other sources," Hastings said.

Hastings made his announcement in hopes of breaking a deadlock that has prevented the ethics panel from getting down to business for the year.

There was no immediate reaction from Rep. Alan Mollohan of West Virginia, the senior Democrat on the panel.

DeLay has said repeatedly he hopes to appear soon before the panel to clear up questions about his actions.

The Texan has come under intense scrutiny in recent months, in part over questions about overseas trips he took over the past several years.

The ethics committee admonished him last year in connection with other allegations. House Republicans unilaterally pushed through a change in the ethics rules in the following months – changes that Democrats argue were designed to shield the majority leader from further scrutiny.

As a result, Democrats have refused to allow the ethics panel to begin work in the new year.

Hastings had earlier offered to amend the rules that the Republicans had forced through the House. Mollohan rejected that offer, and he and other Democrats have been demanding a bipartisan rewrite.

Hastings' comments at a news conference went well beyond a proposed change in the rules, offering an immediate investigation into one of the most powerful lawmakers in Congress.

"Let me emphasize that this is an unusual and extraordinary step for the committee to take," he said.

He was joined at the news conference by three of the other four Republicans on the panel, Reps. Judy Biggert of Illinois, Melissa Hart of Pennsylvania and Tom Cole of Oklahoma. Rep. Lamar Smith of Texas did not attend.

Energy bill likely to be approved

By H. Josef Hebert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – House Democrats attacked a Republican energy bill Wednesday, contending it provides billions of dollars to highly profitable energy companies while doing little to promote alternative fuels and energy conservation or to address soaring gasoline prices.

Nevertheless, lawmakers said the bill is likely to be approved by the House on Thursday, setting the stage for a battle in the Senate over the nation's energy agenda.

Opponents of the legislation, which covers more than 1,000 pages, were planning to try to strip from the bill its call for oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska and to impose tougher fuel economy requirements on automakers.

Similar attempts have been unsuccessful, and GOP leaders said they are confident these will fail as well.

As lawmakers began the energy debate on the House floor, President Bush called for Congress to give him an energy bill by this summer and "send an important signal" that the country "is serious about solving America's energy problems." Congress has failed to agree on energy legislation, despite repeated tries, during the last four years.

In a speech to the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Bush said he wished he "could wave a magic wand and lower gas prices tomorrow" but said the nation's energy problems took years to develop and are "not going to be solved overnight."

House Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi of California accused Bush of trying to exploit people's anxiety over high gas prices to gain support for a bill that she said "was written by energy lobbyists for the benefit of the energy industry." She said it would neither lower energy prices nor curtail America's growing reliance on oil imports.

Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, the legislation's floor leader, called the bill balanced and said if it becomes law it will provide for a more diversified array of domestic energy sources from coal, oil and gas to nuclear and renewable such energy from biomass, ethanol and wind.

"Midterm and long term, if the bill becomes law, we'll see prices stabilized," Barton said at a news conference with Majority Leader Tom DeLay, also of Texas, who accused Democrats of being "obstructionists."

"There are those that do not want a solution, they just want the bill to fail," DeLay said.

The House bill would include more than $8.1 billion in tax breaks, almost all directed at traditional energy industries; allow oil exploration in the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska; and make it easier to build liquefied natural gas import terminals, even if states or local communities oppose the project.

Some lawmakers were incensed that they could not debate on the House floor a provision in the bill that would give makers of MTBE, a gasoline additive that is contaminating drinking water, a shield against product liability lawsuits by communities facing expensive cleanup costs.

The bill gives MTBE makers "safe harbor" and will leave communities and water districts with billions of dollars in cleanup costs, said Rep. Lois Capps, D-Calif., who had prepared an amendment to remove the MTBE section.

She also wanted to remove a provision that gives MTBE makers, including some of the biggest oil companies, $2 billion in transition assistance as MTBE is phased out over the next nine years. GOP leaders did not accept either amendment.

The MTBE liability issue has been a top priority for DeLay, who was instrumental in getting into the legislation a measure that would funnel $2 billion over 10 years for research into recovering oil and gas from extremely deep areas of the Gulf of Mexico.

1 killed, several injured in Iran plane crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran – A Boeing 707 carrying 157 passengers skidded off a runway at Tehran's airport and caught fire Wednesday, killing a child and injuring several other people, state-run television reported.

The station had initially reported 50 dead in the crash of the Iranian Saha Airlines plane, then reported scores killed before backing off both claims.

Television reports said the landing gear of the jetliner failed to open and the plane caught fire after making a hard landing, its nose and wing slamming into the runway.

State TV quoted the airline's managing director, identified only by his last name Nikokar, saying a child was killed.

"Only one person has been killed, and a number of passengers have been injured," television quoted Nikokar as saying.

Reports said part of the plane's fuselage plunged into a river but passengers were able to jump out of the craft. The injured, many of whom suffered broken bones, have been taken to Tehran hospitals for treatment, the television said.

The broadcaster said the plane landed at 10:15 p.m., and the fire erupted minutes later. It said the aircraft carried 157 people, including eight children, and had flown in from the tourist island of Kish in the Persian Gulf.

Saha Airline Services is owned by the Iranian military but also operates civilian flights. It was not known whether military personnel were aboard Wednesday's flight.

Congress split on soft money issue

By Laurie Kellman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The House and Senate appear headed in different directions on dealing with the influence of soft-money groups like the Republican-leaning Swift Boat Veterans and Democrat-aligned MoveOn.org that emerged in last year's presidential election.

A House committee chairman on Wednesday voiced support for a bill that would restore to the political parties some of the financial muscle lawmakers took away in the 2002 campaign finance law. His Senate counterpart would rather restrict what the outside groups can do.

The divergent strategies add up to general dissatisfaction with the way the 2002 campaign finance law has worked – or hasn't. All agree that the 2002 Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act elevated the election-cycle influence of organizations that operate under Section 527 of the tax code – nonparty political groups – by leaving their activities less regulated than those of political parties.

Rep. Bob Ney, the Ohio Republican who chairs the House Administration Committee, said the 2002 law led to "an increase in negative, scorched-earth politics" by empowering groups that attack candidates while muzzling political parties that try to respond.

At a hearing Tuesday, Ney made clear he was leaning toward supporting a bill sponsored by Reps. Mike Pence, R-Ind., and Al Wynn, D-Md., that would "level the playing field" by loosening spending and contribution restrictions on political parties.

Pence and Wynn would remove aggregate limits on how much money individuals can give to influence federal elections, removing the choice between contributing to parties, candidates and other groups. According to the Federal Election Commission, the 2002 bill limited an individual's overall contributions to $95,000 every two years. Of that total, only $37,500 may be given to candidates and no more than $37,500 to committees that are not national parties.

Another option, sponsored in the House by Reps. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., and Marty Meehan, D-Mass., has more support among some Senate Republican leaders, including Rules Committee Chairman Trent Lott of Mississippi. Rather than expand political parties' money-raising ability and reverse the restrictions enacted in the 2002 bill, it would force some 527s to operate under federal campaign finance limits.

Groups like Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, which in 2004 attacked Democrat John Kerry, and MoveOn.org, which attacked President Bush, would no longer be able to use unlimited amounts of money often donated by millionaires to buy advertising that mentions candidates.

In addition to Lott, the Senate measure is sponsored by the original patrons of the 2002 campaign finance law, Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., Russ Feingold, D-Wis., and Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. Lott announced Wednesday that his committee will consider the legislation on April 27.

Its proponents in the House said the Senate measure goes after major contributors to 527s, while not gutting the 2002 law. Not everyone sees the need to do that.

"These 527s ensured that we heard from these folks that have been left out of the political process for decades," said California Rep. Juanita Millender-McDonald, the senior Democrat on Ney's committee.

Civil unions legalized in Connecticut

By Susan Haigh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARTFORD, Conn – Connecticut on Wednesday became the second state to offer civil unions to gay couples – and the first to do so without being forced by the courts.

About an hour after the state Senate sent her the legislation, Republican Gov. M. Jodi Rell signed into law a bill that will afford same-sex couples in Connecticut many of the rights and privileges of married couples.

"The vote we cast today will reverberate around the country," said Sen. Andrew McDonald, who is gay.

"It will send a wave of hope to many people, to thousands of people across the country," he said.

The state House passed the measure last week but amended it to define marriage under Connecticut law as between one man and one woman.

The Senate approved the amended bill Wednesday 26-8.

Vermont is the only other state to allow civil unions. Massachusetts allows gay couples to marry. But those changes came about after same-sex couples won court battles.

Last summer, seven same-sex couples sued in Connecticut after being denied marriage licenses.

The case has not been resolved.

Roman Catholics and pro-marriage activists plan a rally Sunday in opposition to the bill.

"At the same time, we're still struggling to find an identity with the loss of four, pretty significant players in our program – Michaela (Franklin), Gabby (Guerre), Vali (Hejjas) and Lisa (Martin) – they made a huge dent on this program. Replacing them is just not possible.

"But we have some young players that are stepping up and playing very well and learning what it takes, and handling increasing demands."

What does it mean for this program to beat Florida and Illinois – teams that are generally national powerhouses?

"Frankly, it doesn't mean very much. Hopefully, it will give our team some confidence, that we are making improvements and that we are doing the right things as a program.

"Other than that, it really doesn't mean anything. This is the non-competitive season.

"It's a nice measure, I guess, a nice reward for hard work."

Of those young players, Stacey Spiegelberg has the task of filling in for Guerre at the setter position. What has her development been like over the spring?

"She is playing very well. They are all important, but her development and her learning that position, the setter position – which is a very difficult position to learn and understand and play at a high level – will be one of the determining factors in whether we can go from being good to great.

"And so she is playing very well and working very hard, and she is starting to understand the position at a higher level."

You have the Big 12 Libero of the Year coming back in Angie Lastra, who will just be a sophomore. Where is her game capable of going?

"We put her in a very difficult position last year as a freshman, coming in in three weeks and essentially throwing her into that roll. But she handled it beautifully.

"She's just starting to really grasp the level of volleyball and that she is so fast. She's the fastest player I've ever coached. She can make plays that are unbelievable.

"Our hope is that she will continue to get better as well, just like all the other players."

Heading out of the offseason, do you see major things that this team needs to work on?

"We have a long list of things that, by next fall, we've got to try to get into place. The unfortunate thing is that we've ran out of time.

"They (the players) will have significant responsibilities this summer, and a pretty specific list of objectives that they're going to have to try to accomplish, to a certain degree, on their own. Many of them stay in the summer to train and attend summer school.

"So hopefully, we'll be able to ask them to take some responsibility for their improvement as well to start making a larger dent."

Heading into your fifth season this next fall, where do you see the program heading and where would you like it to go?

"Our ultimate goal is to try and be in contention to win a national championship, and that means that you have to be in contention to win a Big 12 title. If you can win a Big 12 championship, then you're in the mix.

"Our ultimate goal is to continue to be successful, to continue to try and contend for championships – both in the conference and nationally – and to continue to strive to be one of the best teams in America.

"That's where I want to be and that's where I think the team wants to be. I think the team is willing and able to accomplish those things, but we are extremely young – as young as we've ever been.

"Sometimes experience is the best teacher. Well, we don't have a lot of experience that is going to be on the floor for us. So we are going to have to learn as we go."

he wanted, he was proud of the way Prochazkova played.

"I am pleased with the way Tereza has fought," Bietau said. "As a freshman, she has been in here twice now on Sunday and again today against a pretty solid opponent. She had to fight and came up short in the end, so that's not all bad."

Prochazkova said she was not familiar with the style of her opponent's play.

"At the beginning, I tried to get used to her style," she said. "She played, for me, a little weird. In the second set, I was four or five down...and then I started to play how she didn't like.

"In the third set, what can I say? I was 40-0 up in the first game and I lost the game, and I guess that game was the turning point of the set."

Highlights in singles play included Tamar Kvaratskhelia winning her 13th singles match in a row in straight sets over Imke Reimers 6-1, 6-4, despite turning her ankle badly in the second set. Junior Jessica Simosa rallied after losing her first set to beat Ewelina Skaza 2-6, 6-2, 6-0 and Fernanda Da Valle put away Katie Garcia 6-4, 6-3.

Even with the effort, Bietau said it's just too late in the season to lose doubles points, despite the improvement.

"There were some positive things in the doubles," he said.

"I liked the way we looked there better than I liked the way we looked on Sunday, but at the same time we're late in the Big 12 season and we need to win some doubles points, so we're not there yet."

went toward renovations of Memorial Stadium, Muir said. Ultimately, it was Wefald's decision and would be if there was a surplus again.

"We like to ask people, since it was their money to begin with," he said.

Muir said senate can put a referendum to the student body whenever, but when it comes to construction, it has to be done.

There is a possibility that other options besides a CSA could have been available, but the referendum had to be explicit.

"In this case, they came up with one project where the existing library bonds would be just rolled over and be used for CSA," Muir said.

Vicki Conner, co-chair of the CSA committee, said CSA was what the committee found to be the most needed on campus. She said it received very positive support.

"We really wanted to make sure a Center for Student Activities was right for students now," Conner said.

Since it is a legally binding contract, the Hale bond could not be ended early, she said.

"Because we've surpassed enrollment predictions, now we're in the position to reallocate that money elsewhere," Conner said.

The four main groups that will anchor CSA are Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, SGA and Union Program Council. The Office of Student Activities and Services will be included in CSA.

CSA would be connected to the Union on the east side, which is the side facing Kedzie Hall. It is projected to be 21,000 square feet and four floors high.

Student fees would pay for $4.5 million and the administration will raise $2 million.

A student referendum was put forth to raise fees $6.50 in November 2000 to fund a Student Activities Center but was voted down by more the 80 percent. That was a $4.8 million project.

Conner said the concept is the same, but there differences.

"It was just a different project," she said. "We decided that wasn't going to be big enough."

The "students first" motto of K-State will be exemplified through CSA, Conner said.

"I think the Center for Student Activities is a logical progress for the 'student first' dialogue," she said. "All of the elements that make our campus unique were student-led initiative.

The Man from Clear Lake: Gaylord Nelson
by Bill Christofferson

This political biography traces the life of the man who would eventually found Earth Day. Following small town beginnings in Wisconsin to his political career, which was deeply involved with the civil liberties and consumer rights movements, Gaylord Nelson made his presence felt in the political arena by voting with his conscience rather than his pocket book.

EARTH DAY
K-State Recycling invites all students, faculty, staff, and visitors to join in celebrating this year.
EARTH WEEK
K-STATE RECYCLES

K-State Facilities Recycling is celebrating Earth Week 2005 by kicking off the desk-side recycling program in the Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler engineering complex. We have begun placing three compartment recycling containers in their department offices, and will proceed to other buildings as procedures and potential problems are resolved. The following information was provided to Patty Berens, volunteer building recycling coordinator, to email to Durland/Rathbone/Fiedler office occupants.

K-State Facilities Desk-Side Recycling Program

WHAT WE PLAN TO DO:
Facilities Recycling wants to provide a convenient, cost effective way to recycle office solid waste materials. We will initially collect three products: office mix paper, newsprint, and magazines.

HOW WE WILL DO IT:
We will place a three compartment recycling container in each office. This is where we will need the help of office personnel to sort the three types of paper into the three compartment containers. The existing trash can is still for trash, and the three compartment recycling container will be filled with office mix; bond paper, envelopes, copy paper, computer paper, etc., in the large center container, newspapers in one saddle container, and magazines in the other (or in any configuration you wish). Then we will be need the help of the custodial personnel to empty the containers for transport to an appropriate recycling facility. The custodial specialists in your area will coordinate with the recycling personnel to pick up one type of recyclable paper one day, another the next, in whatever order and frequency is needed to maintain an orderly flow of material out of the building. Trash will still be emptied daily from class rooms and rest rooms.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?
Any time you need to discard a piece of paper, look and see if it can be recycled. If so, then place it in the appropriate compartment in the recycling container. Please continue to take your home recycling directly to a recycling facility such as Howie's Recycling Center. This program is designed to reduce the solid waste that we currently haul to the Riley County Transfer Station.

WHO WILL BE INVOLVED?
We will need the help of office occupants and custodial specialists, cooperating for success.

WHAT IF SOMETHING GOES WRONG?
If you have questions about recycling or the service we provide, please call 532-6446 or your building recycling coordinator.

Student for Environmental Action are hosting a program on Wind Energy at 7 p.m., Thursday, April 21 in the Union Flint Hills room. Please check their website at http://www.k-state.edu/sea/ for additional information.

You are also encouraged to recycle white bond paper, office mix paper, computer paper, shredder paper, cardboard, newspaper, magazines, telephone books, plastic bottles, aluminum cans, wooden pallets, computers and other electronic equipment (with appropriate signed D&T) at campus collection sites or by calling 532-6446 for special pickups. You may also visit our website at http://www.ksu.edu/recycling/.

Please encourage your friends, family, and coworkers to celebrate Earth Day by recycling.

Kansans discuss wind energy, land value

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Both sides had an opportunity to get their message across during the Kansas Wind Energy Forum last night at the K-State Student Union.

Sponsored by K-State Students for Environmental Action and the K-State Student Governing Association, three guest speakers gave their views in response to issues regarding commercial wind energy versus the protection of untilled tallgrass prairie.

Gerry Snyder, who helped organize the forum and is in the Department of Communications, said that the event was an excellent opportunity for K-State students to learn about a very heated debate.

"The turnout for the event tonight was wonderful, as the issue on hand is an important one for all Kansans," he said.

Snyder said the guest speakers they were able to bring in did an excellent job giving

Supporters of the Center for Student Activities referendum believe it's what K-State needs now; others aren't sure.

Vicki Conner, co-chair of the CSA Committee, said she developed the committee with the help of Pat Bosco, dean of student life, who is also the co-chair.

"I fully believed in this project," Conner, senior in political science and biology, said. "Any group of students could have put together a proposal. We weren't given some sort of power."

Senator Tim Weninger, sophomore in information systems, said he would like to see more options of ways to spend the extra money besides the the CSA.

"I think we could have come up with several different options and have them on the referendum," he

Soldiers' names released

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The names of the two Fort Riley soldiers who were killed in a training accident Tuesday were released Thursday afternoon.

Spc. Wesley S. Gordon, 19, and PFC Philip M. Christensen, 21, were killed when an M113 armored personnel carrier rolled on Fort Riley's training course.

Names of the soldiers were not released by Fort Riley until Thursday afternoon because the families of the soldiers had to be notified.

Gordon, from Houghton, N.Y., and Christensen, from Salt Lake City, Utah, were combat engineers in Company A, 1st Engineer Battalion, 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division, according to a news release from Fort Riley public affairs office.

A memorial service for the two soldiers was at Morris Hill Chapel on Custer Hill on Thursday morning.

Gordon enlisted in the Army in October 2004, but had been at Fort Riley since March 2005.

Christensen enlisted in the Army in February 2003, was at Fort Riley in June 2003 and served in Iraq from September 2003 until September 2004.

Gordon and Christensen's deaths are the fifth and sixth deaths reported at Fort Riley from training accidents. Five soldiers were injured during the training accident, but are non-life threatening, according to the news release.

Fort Riley has about 4,300 soldiers deployed to Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Finding the best bar meal

The Collegian gave five students $5 each and assigned them to five bars in Aggieville. Three of the five were able to eat without going over the price limit. The purpose of going out and looking at bar prices was to show college students where they could get the most food on a small budget.

Janelle Franklin, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine
Buffalo Wild Wings
Buffalo ranch chicken sandwich
$5.68
"I always get chicken when I go out to eat, plus the name of the item sounded interesting and appetizing," she said.

Even though her sandwich was small, Franklin said it was filling.

Buffalo Wild Wings, 1231 Moro St
Kitchen hours: 11 a.m. to midnight Monday through Thursday, 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. Friday and Saturday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Sunday
Specials: Tuesday: 35-cent wings
Wednesday: 50-cent legs

Sonder Smith, senior in biology
Pat's Blue Rib'n Bar-B-Que
Pork sandwich, french fries, drink (kid's meal)
$4.24

Smith found the meal to be filling for a kid's meal and said it was more than she would have normally eaten. Smith said besides appetizers and sides, the kid's meal was the only menu item for under five dollars.

Pat's Blue Rib'n Bar-B-Que, 1200 Moro St.
Kitchen hours: 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. every day
Specials: Tuesday: half-price Smokey Joes
Thursday: half-chicken, $5.95
Friday: Smoked Brisket Philly Cheese Steak, $6.95
Monday, Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday: specials vary

Zach Mohr, senior in economics
Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon
Two hamburgers and a bowl of chili
$5.30

Mohr said he and his fianceé were going for the most food possible with five dollars.

"Rusty's is pretty cheap and has lots of options," he said.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, 1211 Moro St.
Kitchen hours: 11:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. Monday through Sunday
Specials: Tuesday: Tacos (non-menu item) 2 soft tacos, chips and salsa, $3.95
Wednesday: 5 to 10 p.m. hamburgers, $1.50

Leshia Hansen, freshman in open-option
Rock-A-Belly Deli
Settlers Bean Soup
$3.25

She chose this item because she thought it would be the most filling menu item for the smallest price. Hansen was satisfied with the price and quality of her meal.

"The soup was hearty, and it filled me up," she said.

Rock-A-Belly Deli, 718 N. Manhattan Ave.
Kitchen hours: 10 a.m. to 2 a.m. Monday through Saturday
Closed Sunday
Food is served 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.
Specials: Sub-of-the-week, 50 cents off regular price
Daily special featuring a non-menu item, ranging from $4.50 to $6.50

Spencer Brown, sophomore in mechanical engineering
Porter's Bar
Chicken parmesan sandwich, chips, pickle
$4.00

"I chose the sandwich because it wasn't a salad; it wasn't like the other menu choices; and it sounded appetizing," he said.

Porter's Bar, 706 N. Manhattan Ave.
Kitchen hours: 4 to 9 p.m. Wednesday, 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Thursday, 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, 4 to 9 p.m. Saturday
Specials: Wednesday: 20-cent hot wings
Thursday: 11 a.m. to 3 p.m., $3 any sandwich and chips, 50-cent tacos all day
Friday: 2 to 4 p.m., free hamburgers all summer; 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., $3 sandwiches

Sophomore guard Fred Peete leaves team; 3rd player to leave this year

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The list of players who have left the K-State men's basketball program under Coach Jim Wooldridge continues to grow.

Wooldridge announced Thursday morning that sophomore guard Fred Peete had left the team.

Peete was the Wildcats' second-leading scorer last season, averaging 13 points per game on 37 percent shooting. Playing at both the point guard and shooting guard positions, the 6-foot-4, Memphis, Tenn., native started all 29 games for the Wildcats and had five rebounds, 3.8 assists and 2.1 steals per contest.

Peete

"Fred has expressed his desire to exclusively play the point guard position," Wooldridge said in a release. "He feels like this is his best position to reach his goal of playing in the NBA. Consequently, he has decided to transfer to a program where he can play the point guard position 100 percent of the time."

Peete is the latest highly-touted recruit to leave since Wooldridge came to K-State in 2000 and the third this year.

Sophomore point guard Dez Willingham departed in August and junior forward Marques Hayden parted ways with the Wildcats in February and will transfer to Washburn University in Topeka. Guard Nick Williams transferred after his freshman season in 2001-02 and started 18 games this past season for Cincinnati, helping the Bearcats advance to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

This is not the first time Peete has chosen to relocate in his basketball career. While in high school in Tennessee, Peete played at both Bolton and Westside High Schools before transferring to Pullman High School in Washington for his senior season. He was then a one-year starter in junior college at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M before transferring to K-State.

"In this day and age in college athletics, transferring has become a somewhat common occurrence," Wooldridge said. "Our league and institution are not immune from this type of situation. We feel very confident in our returning players and the anticipation of success for next season."

Regents discuss tuition waivers

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Concurrent enrollment and tuition waivers were the two primary issues discussed when the Kansas Board of Regents met with the Kansas Regents universities this week.

Concurrent enrollment, or being able to take courses for college credit at the high school level, was a big issue at the meetings, which took place on Wednesday and Thursday.

Michael Burns, student body president, said concurrent enrollment is supported at K-State.

"There is still some work to be done as far as concurrent enrollment, but right now the student advisory council supports it," Burns said.

The other big issue was tuition waivers.

The Board of Regents voted to allow each university to write their own tuition waiver plan for faculty dependents and spouses.

Burns said the proposal would allow the university to choose program.

"Some universities could give a full tuition waiver, and some could do nothing. The proposal allows universities to take their own course of action on tuition waivers," Burns said.

Currently, K-State does not offer faculty dependent tuition waivers.

Burns said it's good for universities to decide what is best for them.

"It's exciting to know that each university will have the opportunity to create their own plan and address tuition waivers as they see fit at each individual university," he said.

Another item that was discussed in the student advisory committee was tuition increases.

The University of Kansas is projecting the highest increase at 14 percent, while Fort Hays State is proposing the lowest at 6.5 percent increase. K-State is currently projecting a 8 to 10 percent increase.

The final tuition has not been set for next year yet, but the administration is drafting a proposal to take to the regents next month.

In addition to the normal meetings, some universities were able to flaunt their students.

KU, with three Goldwater and three Udall scholars and K-State, with one Udall, one Truman, and four Goldwater scholars, were both able to introduce all of their scholars to the Board of Regents.

President Jon Wefald, who attended the meeting on Thursday, said the best part was introducing the scholars.

"Chancellor Bob Hemingway (from KU) and I agreed to have all the students go up together and introduce the students to the Board of Regents," Wefald said.

The students who were introduced received a standing ovation from the board and shook the hands of all the regents.

STUDENT SENATE

Chair chooses new Senate chair in tie

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Outgoing Student Senate chair Eleri Griffin had to break a tie for the incoming senate chair Thursday night, but her decision came as no surprise.

During debate, Griffin spoke in favor of Tyson Moore for the position. By choosing Moore, Griffin broke a tie of 28-28.

Moore, outgoing vice chair; Matt King, outgoing chair of the governmental relations committee; and Ashley Boldt, outgoing intern coordinator, were nominated for chair at least week's meeting.

Moore

Boldt dropped out of the race due to health problems.

Then it came down to Moore and King, who both had strong support.

Griffin said in recent years, chairs haven't endorsed a candidate.

She said she supported Moore after working with both candidates. She said he has the capability, productivity and respect needed to be chair.

"More than anything, Tyson has the ability to inspire all of senate the way he inspired me," Griffin said.

Senator Nacole Boan said King is very committed to what he does.

"Matt will take the same dedicated attitude toward Student Senate," Boan said. "Matt genuinely cares about this body."

After the decision was made, Moore was sworn in and took over the meeting. Appointments for vice chair, intern coordinator and faculty senate representative were made.

Senator Emily Besler, outgoing chair of the student affairs and social service committee, was chosen unanimously as the vice chair. She ran unopposed.

Senator Lydia Peele won intern coordinator with a 33-22 vote. Susan Alsop ran against her. Both were senate interns this year.

Senator Alex Lovely ran unopposed for the faculty senate representative position and was approved unanimously.

Earth Day, Service Week offer volunteer opportunity

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Earth Day and Community Service Week celebrations will combine for the Saturday of Service this weekend.

Saturday of Service is sponsored by the K-State Community Service Program with the purpose of helping the environment.

Joseph McLean, AmeriCorps Vista leader, said volunteers will be working on a fish habitat project at Tuttle Creek State Park this year.

"The project is to assist with the improvement and enhancement of the fish habitat at Tuttle Creek," he said.

Several people have already volunteered and signed up for certain shifts, and McLean said everyone is welcome to come.

"The work we will be doing is physical labor, but anyone is capable of doing it," he said.

McLean said participating in the Saturday of Service allows time to get together with friends and complete community service requirements for a class.

"It's an opportunity to work with a campus community partnership to enhance the community in which they live," he said.

However, McLean said it is important that volunteers do not forget that it is National Volunteer Week.

"The overriding goal is to participate and to celebrate volunteers across the nation," he said.

TO THE POINT

Music industry must cater to consumer needs

Society often outgrows its laws.

As technology improves, laws limiting its use have become difficult to enforce.

The Recording Industry Association of America filed more than 400 lawsuits this month against college students illegally downloading music from the Internet. The suit was filed on behalf of major record companies.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

There is no way the RIAA will be able to keep up with prosecuting filesharers.

The music industry is a consumer market and must adapt its product and advertising scheme to fit consumer needs.

Instead of trying to win the impossible battle of ending illegal downloading, record companies' time would be better spent giving listeners incentives to buy CDs in the store.

It's hard to compete with something that's free.

But whether it's the quality of the songs or additional items such as posters, magazines or price reductions when buying music in a store or from a company Web site, the industry has to give consumers what they want.

File sharing will continue despite K-State's and other universities' efforts to block downloading programs. The RIAA can try, but it will never eliminate the illegal practice.

Record companies need to stop acting in a reactionary manner and put consumers first.

Fitting the stereotype

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

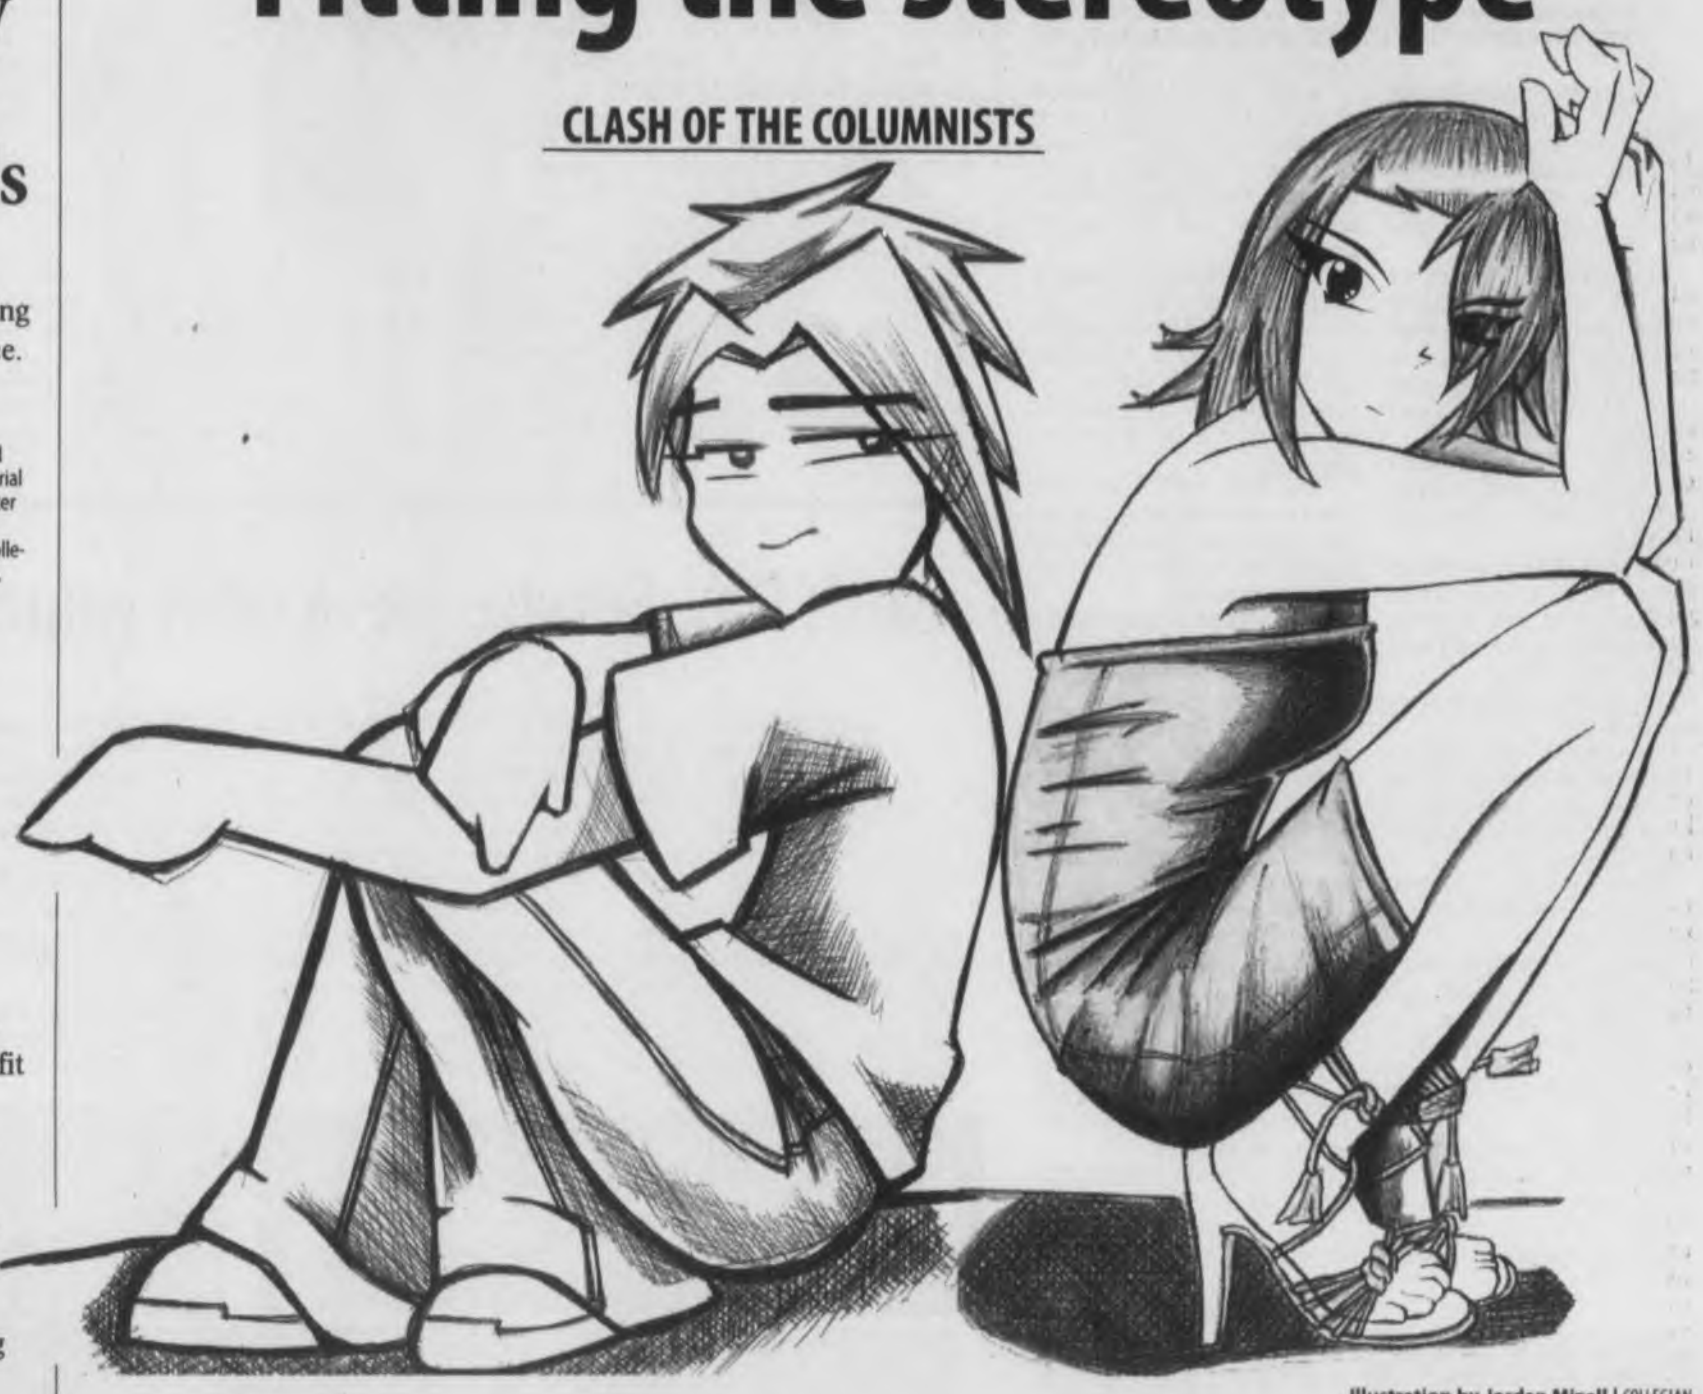

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

Men on campus too predictable; students should be individuals

ABBY HILES

Take a look around.

Whether you are in the Union people-watching, walking to the library or sitting in lecture mindlessly picking at the crossword, you can see them every where.

The five basic college male stereotypes: the frat guy, the cowboy, the college athlete, the grad student and the poser. You probably have them in classes and, if you are like me, mock them endlessly as they try to fulfill all the quotas of their specific sort.

Take the frat guy, for instance. Frat guys seem to sit in groups. I think it has something to do with brain power, and their inability to make inappropriate jokes without other Greeks to bounce them off of.

Frat guys seem to have a uniform. Khaki shorts, a t-shirt boldly displaying their letters, flip flops (even in 30 degree weather), a North Face fleece, baseball cap that used to be white and of course, the in-vogue Live Strong yellow bracelet. I'm pretty sure Lance Armstrong is proud to know that the entirety of the Greek population is helping him in the fight against testicular cancer. (For those of you who didn't know, that's what they are for. Not just fashion.)

Their cell phones "blow up" during class with a ring tone vaguely resembling a rap song they probably don't know the words to, and their interest in class only extends to what Pi Phi is sitting in front of them.

Let's move on, shall we?

On our particular campus we also house a stereotype not found at our neighboring school KU: the cowboy.

I could write about their uniform of too-tight jeans and unsightly belt buckles, the influx of plaid shirts and Carhart, but that would be too easy.

Besides, I think that most cowboys have been quarantined to the north side of campus, along with Ag majors and cow manure.

My next candidate for male stereotype is unmistakable.

College athletes at this university stick out like a Promise Keeper at Lilith Fair.

Fully decked out in purple from head to toe, these violet-wearing muscle heads seem to only wear college-sanctioned apparel 24/7. It's like they are in their very own Nike commercial.

They walk into class late, slowly shuffling their feet and toting that ever-present Big 12 messenger bag.

The athletes only sit with athletes, and half of the time they don't even take notes.

And why should they? Their Academic Resource Center has the notes on file already anyway with tutors waiting at their disposal. No worries.

Speaking of academic acceleration, another nominee for male stereotype would have to be the male grad student.

A few key items to recognize them: an iPod, Starbucks cup and other grad students.

Let's face it: undergrads aren't worth their time anyway. They have been there, done that, and frankly they like being around people who know the difference between "its" possessive and "it's" contraction.

That brings me to the crowd I like to call the posers.

Posers don't have any specific group because they seem to assimilate to whatever group is prominent in their classes.

You know the guys: semi-punk, semi-Goth, mostly because they can't tell the difference between the two. They just wear black, get a tat (probably temporary) and try their hand at art and hating society.

I'm not saying that girls don't have stereotypes too. (See Jonas's column.)

It's just that the four years that most of us are here should be the time to find ourselves...not find ourselves part of a particular demographic.

Challenge yourself to be outside of the stereotype and not be caught inside it.

And who knows?

You might like who you are without the crowd.

K-State lacks female diversity; individuality sacrificed to MTV

JONAS HOGG

If one plunges into the wilderness that is Kansas State, it is important to know exactly what type of wildlife to be expecting.

To assist in this endeavor, I will present a catalog of species. Since my colleague has already tackled (and in some cases unnecessarily roughed) the dominant of the sexes, it will fall to my shoulders to chronicle the KSU womenfolk.

Obviously, since women are so much more "diverse" and "open-minded" than men, there's greater variety to examine. We will limit ourselves to a few of the more prominent examples – specifically, the activist, the party-girl, the Barbie and the Puritan.

The activist is easy to recognize on campus: a fist raised in the air exposing the defiant hairy arm pit, unleashing an odor that is beyond definition. The activist often travels in groups but can strike out on her own seeking more recruits for the APAL (anti-penis action league).

Men should beware when engaging the activist in a debate, for women send out psychic distress signals which will draw supporters to their sides. In some cases, they instantaneously convert onlooking women to the activist side, thus leaving the man outnumbered in hostile territory.

Moving along, we come to the party-girl. The majority of these girls spend their senior year of high school watching crappy college movies such as "Animal House," "Road Trip," or "Old School." They arrive at college with only a faint idea that there is something here known as "class" that they will be required to attend on occasion.

It is for this reason that the party-girl is a bit of a rare sight on campus, and their arrival is often met by such remarks as, "Is she in our class?" "I've never seen her before," and "Dude, that's her!"

Next, we arrive at the Barbie. The Barbie is perhaps the most easily identifiable of all the college she-types. No matter how cold it is or how gray the weather, the Barbie will always sport a dark tan. When February rolls around and the sun hasn't hit Kansas soil in 3 months, the Barbie will still appear as if she is a resident of the Canary Islands. Generally, in defiance of her olive tan color she will also attempt to make her hair as blond as possible.

These efforts can backfire when overdone, resulting in hair that is bleached and dyed to the point where it ceases to be hair and becomes carpet and skin that has been tanned so much that the Barbie begins to resemble a platinum-haired Marlboro Man with breasts.

Finally, we come to the Puritan. These are the girls who spend the entirety of their college career living in the dorms and may not even be aware that a city exists beyond the campus boundaries. Any talk about drinking, or even worse, sex, will prompt revulsion and total denial that she will participate in any of these things (maybe once she's married).

The Puritan will likely have the same sense of style, sense of humor and same circle of friends when she graduates college as she did when she graduated high school. Likely, her high GPA will be put to good use when she gives up a promising career to home-school her 19 kids.

By the way, don't listen to my opponent about finding out who you really are and all that jazz. Such a thing seems just a hair ridiculous. After all, a new identity is just a quick trip to the mall or the latest MTV special away.

Renovations coming for Jardine

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 1993, Chuck Werring, the director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, began planning what he hoped would be the future of on-campus housing for K-State.

Eventually, these initial plans will turn in to a more than $100 million, 10-year redevelopment project for the Jardine Apartment Complex.

"This is a project we believe will be our future," Werring said. "This has been a journey for us all."

Most of the apartments in Jardine were built in 1957 to house families returning to K-State after World War II. The buildings have been remodeled since their construction, but have basically remained the same.

The development will be divided into several phases; the first phase will start this summer with the demolition of Jardine's A, B and C buildings to make way for new construction.

Further phases will follow; however, the plans have not yet been finalized to allow them to adapt to any changes during the construction of the new apartments.

"As we go through the project, we will make adjustments for what the market is," said Skyler Harper, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

The redevelopment will include, townhouse-like apartments, more green space and a town center that will include an academic resource center and possibly retail centers, such as a copy center, a coffee shop or a convenience store, said Stephanie Bannister, assistant director of Housing and Dining Services.

By the time construction is complete in 2015, the number of residents housed in the complex will nearly double – from 1,288 in 2004 to 2,144.

The primary concern when planning the redevelopment was the students, Werring said.

"People come with the idea that 'I want to learn', so supporting the educational mission is so important for us," he said.

Students were involved with the planning of the project from the beginning, Bannister said. Focus groups, surveys and interviews were conducted with the help of current residents in Jardine and with other students to try to get an idea of what features were the most important to the residents.

Kelly Thacker, graduate student in counseling and student development and a current resident of Jardine, said she attended several of the focus groups and said the people planning the development have listened to what the students told them.

"I think they've done an excellent job of taking what we've told them and made this wonderful project," she said.

While planning the redevelopment, Bannister said they tried to keep four "cornerstones" in mind: tradition, education, global and imagination.

Bannister said the tradition of community at K-State was very important when designing the new apartments. Front porches and decks were added where residents can socialize, and the apartments face each other to promote interaction.

Since the people living in the new apartments will be students, it was also critical that the buildings promote education.

"We realized that when students go to K-State, they go to the classroom, but afterwards, they go home," Werring said.

The global objective is important due to the diversity of the residents of Jardine apartments; 76 percent of the residents are international students.

Imagination is important because while planning the development, it was important to keep an open mind and be creative, Bannister said.

"You are not going to find a university with this kind of space and this kind of architecture with this many people," she said.

Along with the construction of new apartments, the original Jardine apartments will be remodeled. Some of the apartments will receive extensive renovations, while others will only be partially refurbished so that if the need arises, they can be razed for new apartments, Werring said.

Also, the landscaping around the apartments will change dramatically with the addition of a small lake and a stream running through the complex.

In preparation for the demolition of buildings A, B and C, the current residents of the complex have been moved to other Jardine apartments, said Walinda Arnett, senior in early childhood education and resident of Jardine.

Arnett said no one had to be "kicked out" of the apartments, and everyone who wanted to remain in their apartment was able to stay. Most of the residents are excited about the project and look forward to changes.

"This is going to be a huge opportunity for all of us," she said.

Cats for Karaoke helps out Flint Hills Breadbasket

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN
Singing "When you Lie Next to Me," Jerri Jones, Manhattan resident, does karaoke as part of Cats for Karaoke. The event was put on by four seniors in social work as part of a class project. The proceeds went to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Cats for Karaoke, a community service project, brought a crowd to RC McGraw's Thursday night.

The project, which is a requirement for students majoring in social work, was coordinated by Crystal Welborn, Mandy Whitson, Molly Rice and Megan Drovetta. All four are second-semester seniors in social work.

Cats for Karaoke accepted canned food to donate to the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Each can was worth a ticket, which was put in a raffle for prizes.

For people who forgot to bring cans, they could purchase a t-shirt for $3 and the money was donated to the Breadbasket. The raffles were at 10 p.m., 11 p.m. and midnight. Prizes were donated.

Welborn said the project was beneficial to the community.

"We chose to do this for the Breadbasket because around this time of year, they tend to run a little low," she said. "As social work students, we recognize the need for donations all year long."

Welborn said she appreciated that RC McGraw's allowed them to do their fund raiser on their karaoke night.

"We are grateful that RC McGraw's allowed us to use their venue," she said. "The generosity of them is unparalleled."

Sarah Brantl, Manhattan resident, said the most important part of the event was the donations.

"It's for a good cause, and people need to eat," she said.

Welborn said the real reason for doing the fund raiser was to assist the less fortunate.

"We knew it was important to do something nice for the people of Manhattan who can't afford it all year long," she said. "Around the holidays, a lot of people donate, but in the summer, they don't get enough donations, and hopefully this will help."

Bicycle Patrol, permits discussed at parking forum

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Police Bicycle Patrol are now exempt from campus traffic laws.

K-State's Council on Parking Operations sponsored a forum to discuss several proposed changes to the university parking regulations, which were approved during the meeting.

The first change in regulations dealt with the current bike regulations on campus. Before the change, the K-State Police Department Bicycle Patrol had to obey on campus traffic laws, including speed restrictions and riding on the sidewalk. Now, an officer can exceed the speed restrictions if he deems it necessary.

"We basically wrote it so that people know that the police can do things that they can't," said Darwin Abbott, director of parking services.

The second regulation discussed concerned the use of service permits, which will now cost $20. Service permits are temporary parking permits given to university staff who can park on some parts of campus, but not others. The permits allow them to conduct university business by parking in regulated lots.

The fee was started because some departments would abuse the permits by requesting more then they used.

"We saw that a lot of departments would have 25 permits for a department of 15," said J. Scott Smith, an animal sciences and industry professor and member of the council.

The classification of several parking lots around the Jardine Apartment Complex was discussed. Due to a shortage of parking caused by renovations at Jardine, some lots in the area will be changed from "W" lots, reserved for faculty and staff, to "Z" lots, open to anyone with a valid parking permit.

The status of parking lot C3, the lot around Edwards Hall, was also discussed. Client parking stalls will be added for people conducting business in Edwards Hall, such as paying parking fees.

TRACK AND FIELD

Track squad together again

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will have its entire track and field team at one meet for the first time this outdoor season, as the team visits Lawrence for the 78th Annual Kansas Relays today and Saturday.

"It will be one of the few times we will have our entire team at the same place at the same time," head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"Most of our kids will compete in their strongest events, but a lot of middle-distance runners and sprinters may do more relays than open events."

Rovelto said he is pleased with his team's conditioning level heading into the weekend, and wants to prepare his squad for the Big 12 Outdoor Championships, May 13-15 in Manhattan.

"For the most part, our top contributors are moving in the right direction, so we feel good about that," he said.

"At this time, we really need to start focusing in on the conference meet."

In the most recent Trackwire Top 25 poll, K-State's women rank No. 17 in the nation and third in the Big 12 behind No. 1 Texas and No. 6 Nebraska.

Three lady Wildcats lead their respective events in the Midwest Region: senior Chaytan Hill (triple jump), senior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle (800-meter run) and junior Breanna Eveland (pole vault).

Sophomore jumper Candice Mills, who has the 12th-best long jump in the nation at 20-06 1/2, said her team should continue to improve with each meet.

"I think we definitely have a good shot to compete well in the conference," Mills said.

"A lot of our athletes are really starting to peak, and we should only get better."

Mills will compete in the long jump at the relays against her coach, Austra Skyjute, who earned a silver medal at the 2004 Olympics in the heptathlon and broke the women's world decathlon record last Saturday at the Audrey Walton Combined Events in Columbia, Mo.

Mills said she hopes to break the school long jump record by the end of the season and is looking forward to jumping against her coach and two-time Olympian Shelia Burrell.

"It was good news for me," Mills said.

"I usually compete with a lot more intensity when the competition is a lot better, so I am excited."

On the men's side, junior high-jumper Kyle Lancaster leads the nation with his school-record height of 7-07 at the UTEP Springtime Invitational April 2.

Lancaster, from Fort Scott, Kan., hopes to keep his momentum rolling in his first appearance at the KU Relays, as he will compete in the invitational section of the high jump against the 2004 Olympic second and fourth-place finishers.

"It will be really, really good competition, but I am just looking at it as I would any other meet," Lancaster said.

"I am not going to jump 7-07 every week, but if I can jump 7-04 or 7-05, I will be pleased."

The KU Relays will feature a "Gold Zone" from 2-5 p.m. on Saturday, when seven Olympic champions – including Maurice Greene and Marion Jones – and 27 other Olympians will compete amid top high school and collegiate athletes.

Wildcats competing in "Gold Zone" events include Lancaster (high jump), Eveland (pole vault), sophomore Lisi Maurer (100-meter hurdles) and junior Christian Smith (mile).

Sproles awaiting upcoming draft

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Head coach Bill Snyder won't be upset if running back Darren Sproles isn't a first-day pick in this weekend's NFL draft.

After all, that is not the message he has been relaying to Sproles.

"I'm telling Darren 'Don't be disappointed about anything, just be pleased with the opportunity that comes, and we have confidence that you will respond extremely well to the opportunity that you're given, regardless of who it's with or when it comes,'" Snyder said.

Sproles finished his K-State career as the all-time rushing leader in school history with 4,979 yards.

Sproles

Though most expect him to go sometime after the late second round, Sproles has received some attention.

Snyder has taken calls from around five NFL teams asking about a number of topics ranging from Sproles' 5-foot-7, height to his durability and toughness.

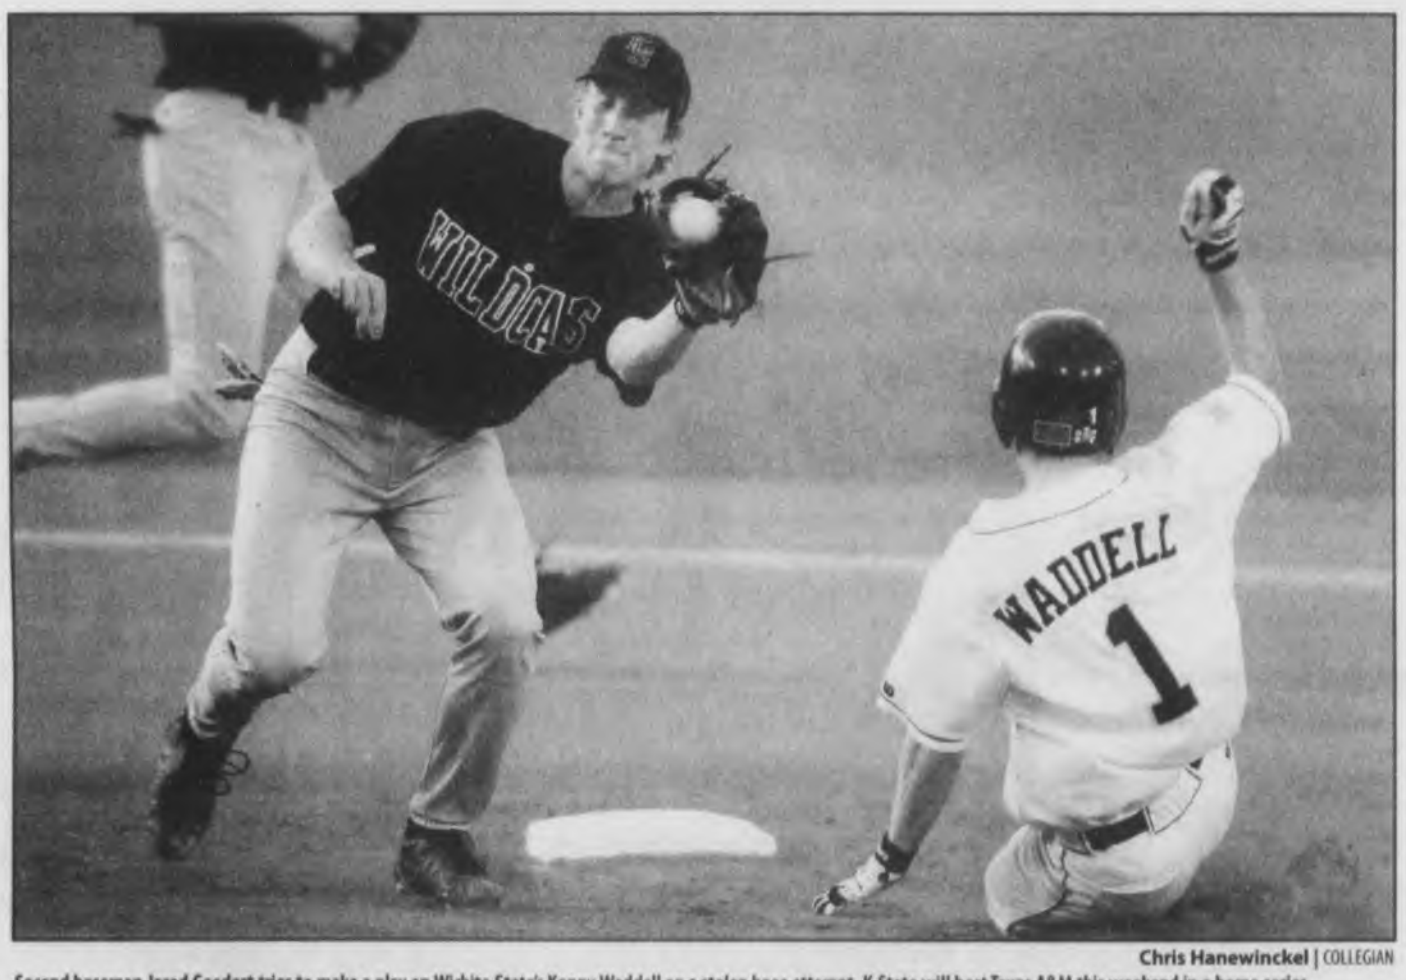
"I think everybody talks about a third-down back, everybody talks about a return specialist, and I understand that, but what I share with them is 'Don't underestimate his ability to be a complete and full-time running back for you, and don't ever underestimate how durable he is and the degree of toughness that he possesses,'" Snyder said.

Sproles may have improved his draft status after he shone in the offseason at the Senior Bowl and the NFL Combine.

At the Senior Bowl, Sproles was named the North's Offensive MVP in its 23-13 win over the South. Sproles finished the game with 55 yards on six carries and a touchdown.

At the Combine, Sproles tied for the top time by a running back in the 40-yard dash, recording a 4.46 time.

The offseason caught the eye of many around the nation, including Sports Illustrated writer Stewart Mandel, who this week on www.si.com listed Sproles as the most underrated running back heading into the draft.



"I don't care how small he is, Sproles is simply a breathtaking runner," Mandel said. "I can understand not wanting to make him a franchise pick, but you'd be crazy not to snatch him up as a potentially dangerous second back/special teams player."

In the weeks heading up to the draft, Snyder said he told Sproles not to worry about what might happen.

"Darren will never give you the impression that he's excited about anything, but he is," Snyder said. "He's a little nervous about it."

Tournament bid could rest on match-up against Texas A&M

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fate of the K-State baseball team's postseason hopes could hinge on the outcome of this weekend's three-game series with Texas A&M.

The Wildcats (18-17, 4-11) sit at ninth in the Big 12 Conference standings, and with two wins over the eighth-place Aggies, K-State could leapfrog into the crucial eighth spot in the league standings. The top eight teams qualify for the Big 12 Tournament at the end of the season.

"(Texas A&M) is going to feel like they need to come in and take two games from us," junior outfielder Steve Murphy said. "We are going to come out and play hard, because this is a chance for us to make a bid for the Big 12 Tournament, which is something we've been wanting to do since the beginning of the year."

If you go

K-State vs. Texas A&M

When: 6:30 tonight, 2 p.m. Saturday, 1 p.m. Sunday
Where: Tointon Family Stadium
Cost: Students get in free with K-State ID

Texas A&M (25-16, 5-11) travels to Manhattan hitting .280 as a team. The Aggies are led by shortstop Cliff Pennington, who is hitting .346, with six home runs and 34 RBI.

"He does a lot of things for them," Hill said. "He is a good shortstop and hits the ball very well."

K-State is coming off a 4-2 win over Wichita State on Tuesday, which completed the season sweep over the Shockers, K-State's first sweep over WSU since 1955.

"It felt great (beating Wichita State)," Murphy said. "Beating a team like that is a huge momentum builder for us. Our team can pretty much compete with the best out there."

K-State will head into the weekend ranked fourth in the Big 12 in hitting at .313. Junior Brandon Farr is ninth in the league in hitting at .368, sophomore Jared Goedert is ranked 14th at .355.

The Wildcat pitching staff has walked 104 batters in 301.0 innings, a 2.9 walks-per-nine-innings average, and has tallied 198 strikeouts.

The Aggies hold the series lead overall against the Wildcats at 24-5. In Manhattan, Texas A&M leads the all-time series 7-2.

"I think we are playing great baseball right now," Murphy said. "Basically, we will just go into this weekend and approach these games like we have the past four, and not give up."

K-State will take the field at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium. Action will continue at 2 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday.

Wooldridge needs to examine program, himself

I can picture it now.

K-State basketball coach Jim Wooldridge in his office at his desk, banging his head.

MATTHEW GIRARD

I would probably being doing the same thing once I learned my second-leading scorer and arguably the most talented player returning to the team for next season had decided to leave the team.

On Thursday, Wooldridge announced in a news release that sophomore guard Fred Peete had left the team.

In the release, Wooldridge said Peete wanted to go to a school where he could play the point guard position exclusively.

My first problem with this move is that Peete is not a point guard. During the 2004-05 season, the Memphis, Tenn. native averaged 1.5 assists to one turnover per game, often in relief of freshman point guard Clent Stewart. In comparison, the Big 12 Conference leaders in the assist to turnover ratio averaged close to three assists to one turnover per game.

That stat alone would – if I was a college basketball coach – make me think otherwise about putting Peete in charge of running the offense.

Peete is a shooter.

While in a Wildcat uniform, Peete took 327 shots in 29 games (11.2 shots per game), including 126 attempts from behind the three-point line.

I know most point guards are shoot first and pass second these days, but why not work on your shooting and not worry about everything that comes along with being the "floor general"?

My second problem refers to the large knot on Wooldridge's forehead.

In less than a year, Wooly has had three players leave for various reasons. You can make the argument that Dez Willingham and Marques Hayden just didn't fit in here at K-State, but now a third player has left under his watch.

Granted, Peete played at three different high schools and will be working on playing for his third college, but you have to wonder if the coach is doing something wrong when dealing with his players.

Yes, players are transferring all the time and K-State is not the only school to have this happen. Oklahoma lost two star players because of transferring.

The bottom line is Wooldridge needs to take a long look in the mirror to see if there is something deeper going on. If he wants to turn this program around and make it into the post-season, he needs to address the problem now.

MLB | Twins outlast Royals in 10 innings

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — While batting with the bases loaded has not been Minnesota's strength this season, the Twins started to break that dangerous trend in a two-game sweep of the Kansas City Royals.

Lew Ford hit a one-out single with the bases full in the 10th inning, lifting the Twins past the Royals 10-9 Thursday.

MLB | Chicago's Garciaparra out 2-to-3 months

ST. LOUIS — Chicago Cubs shortstop Nomar Garciaparra will be sidelined at least two-to-three months because of a torn left groin.

Garciaparra

Garciaparra was placed on the 15-day disabled list Thursday, one day after he got hurt while leaving the batter's box during a game against St. Louis. Cubs trainer Mark O'Neal said the muscle pulled away from the bone.

Team officials, doctors and Garciaparra will decide in the next 10 days whether an operation is needed.

NFL | Jets, Raiders complete trade with Jolley

NEW YORK — The New York Jets finally filled their need at tight end.

The Jets acquired Doug Jolley from Oakland on Thursday in exchange for their first-round pick in Saturday's NFL draft. The deal, agreed upon Wednesday night, was completed when Jolley passed his physical Thursday morning. Oakland gets the 26th overall selection, moving back into the first round after trading the seventh overall pick to Minnesota for Randy Moss in March.

Jolley

New York also gets a second-round (47th overall) and two sixth-round picks (182, 185) from Oakland, while the Raiders get a seventh-round selection.

CFB | Aikman, others named to Cotton Bowl Hall of Fame

DALLAS — Quarterback Troy Aikman, versatile Lance Alworth and coach Gene Stallings were among eight people inducted Wednesday into the Cotton Bowl Hall of Fame.

Aikman

The other 2005 inductees were former Cotton Bowl executive director Jim Brock (1979-92), Texas guard Mike Dean, Tennessee running backs Hank Lauricella and Andy Kozar and Penn State running back Lydell Mitchell.

NBA | League sets record attendance marks

NEW YORK — NBA regular-season attendance averaged 17,314 this year, the highest in league history.

Total attendance of nearly 21.3 million topped the previous mark of more than 20.5 million set during the 1995-96 season, the league said Thursday. Excluding the addition of the expansion Charlotte Bobcats, NBA games still drew more than 432,500 fans this season than last season.

This year's average attendance mark exceeded the 1995-96 record of 17,252 and last season's average of 17,050.

Detroit had the highest attendance (22,076), followed by Chicago (20,204) and Dallas (20,061). Charlotte (14,431) was next-to-last among the 30 teams, and New Orleans (14,221) had the lowest mark.

NBA | Paxson out as Cavaliers start rebuilding

CLEVELAND — Their shocking collapse complete, the Cleveland Cavaliers began to rebuild on Thursday.

Jim Paxson was fired as the club's general manager, dismissed by new owner Dan Gilbert one day after the Cavaliers' chaotic season ended short of the NBA playoffs for the seventh consecutive year.

Expected for weeks, Paxson's firing came exactly one month after coach Paul Silas was fired with 18 games left by Gilbert, the online mortgage banker who has had a rough introduction into operating a pro sports franchise.

Hope for junk food junkies

With planning, students can trade in bad habits for healthy lifestyle

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The busy schedule and high stress of college life often leads to a lack of attention on healthy eating, and the convenience of unhealthy choices turns many students into junk-food junkies.

Sandy Procter, registered and licensed dietician and extension associate in the Department of Human Nutrition, said making healthy snacking decisions does not have to be complicated – it just takes some planning ahead.

"Snacks should offer us more than just empty calories," Procter said. "We can benefit from snacks if we plan ahead – take an apple with you when you leave home, put some baby carrots in a small bag or pack some whole-wheat crackers in your backpack. We know we are going to get hungry, so why not decide to snack on something that is good for you?"

Kathy Grunewald, professor of human nutrition, also said planning ahead can help students make better choices.

"One of the biggest mistakes I have seen students make is skipping meals altogether," Grunewald said. "Then students snack on whatever they can grab. Snacks can be very good if they are planned and good choices."

For students who are concerned with weight or anyone wanting to maintain a healthy lifestyle, Procter said snacking can take the edge off our hunger, helping us to keep our total calorie intake under control. She said healthy snacking keeps us from overeating by preventing us from getting overly hungry between meals.

Obvious suggestions for healthy snacking are fruits and vegetables. Grunewald said a glass of milk or small piece of cheese are good ways to get calcium. Also air-popped popcorn, pretzels and different breads are good choices as long as they're not loaded with high-fat spreads.

Procter also said she suggests fruit and whole grains as convenient snacks.

"There is a variety of dried fruit available, and it is easy to take along a piece of fresh fruit," Procter said. "Some peanut butter on half of a whole-wheat raisin bagel can be very satisfying. Planning ahead with healthy choices can help us bypass vending machines and convenience stores."

Another mistake students often make is choosing foods labeled "light" or "fat-free". Procter said that what these foods lack in fat is often made up for in calories from sugar and carbohydrates. A better solution, Procter said, is to eat a smaller portion of the regular-fat item, such as a cookie, instead of pigging out on the "light" item.

When it comes to healthy drink choices, water is the universal solution. Sports drinks are also acceptable, but only for serious athletes who need to replace electrolytes depleted during extended exercise. Procter said that the acid in diet sodas and sports drinks can be damaging to teeth. Grunewald said she suggests fruit or vegetable juice or low-fat or skim milk as convenient ways to re-hydrate.

Healthy snacking throughout the day also provides emotional benefits.

"Eating is a pleasurable event," Grunewald said. "It is a good opportunity to take a break and socialize with others."

April has been proclaimed Child Abuse and Awareness Month and Sunflower CASA is offering the community a chance to help in the fight against child abuse and neglect by participating in the Light of Hope.

"We want everyone to come, not just volunteers," said Mary Budenbender, CASA intern. "We want to recognize the abused and neglected children, but we also want to raise community awareness about CASA."

Light of Hope will be at 5:45 p.m. Monday in the Manhattan City Auditorium. Deb Patterson, the K-State women's basketball coach, will be speaking following a candle lighting ceremony for the 160 abused and neglected children CASA volunteers served last year.

Light of Hope is a time for the community to recognize the children," Bedenbender said. "But it is also a time to recognize the hard work of our volunteers.

Film's depth a modern rarity

"Million Dollar Baby"
Movie review by Nathan Dorsett

Clint Eastwood's newest film creates dramatic situations familiar to an American audience.

Themes in the film include the traditional distance between fathers and daughters, the modern Roman Catholic Church and sanctioned violence.

"Million Dollar Baby" is the story of gym owner and cut man Frankie Dunn (Eastwood) who attempts to help a woman from one of the poorest areas of the South find her feet in the ring.

The fact that Maggie Fitzgerald (Hilary Swank) is a woman is essential to the character mix because it allows Dunn to realize the distance from his own daughter.

Many critics have responded to the ending with moral outrage.

The ending falls adeptly within Dunn's disillusionment with violence. He is conflicted until the end, which leads to the broader seminal point of Eastwood's work: compassion in the family and church through respect for the individual's right to choose is indeed a virtue.

Most notable is Eastwood's dedication to producing films with archetypal meaning within Americana, although that is not always popular.

"Bird," the story of Charlie Parker, is a portrayal of a legendary jazz trumpeter, and "Mystic River," introduces the equation of police power and the vigilante justice of "the street." Both represent characters that are both strong and vulnerable.

In Eastwood's film, "Tough ain't enough." It is painted in red letters on a steel sign that wouldn't look out of place in a chrome-countered diner like our own Ad Astra Cafe.

Boxing is a sport which has been the symbol of the American working man – and now – woman. Some might view the film initially as a boxing film; they are the ones who most need to see this critique of one of America's most violent and treasured sports.

Eastwood as a director, producer and lead actor is born of violence on the silver screen, since his earliest work as an actor on CBS's "Rawhide", playing Rowdy Yates, to "Dirty Harry" and his direction and production of "Unforgiven."

Eastwood's newest work is as daring as "Mystic River" with a revelation for the father, eerily missing in "Mystic River." It is a realization of where home actually is – a place where our choice is respected and cherished as much as life itself.

4:10, 7:10, 9:55
Set, of course, in Las Vegas, this drama follows Marv, a tough guy who meets the girl of his dreams, Goldie, only to see her murdered on that same night. Marv then searches every bar and shady hideout in Vegas looking for the killer.

"The Interpreter" (PG-13)
4:15, 7:10, 10

Kidman

Nicole Kidman plays a U.N. interpreter from South Africa who unintentionally hears details of a political assassination plot and has to convince a doubtful FBI agent that something bad's going down.

Recording industry targets students in copyright suits

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Recording Industry Association of America filed 405 lawsuits against individual students accused of abusing a new form of the Internet used on college campuses "on behalf of the major record companies" according to a press release by the RIAA on April 12.

These lawsuits come only two weeks after a legal case between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios and Grokster, a company that distributes file-sharing software, was discussed in the U.S. Supreme Court, a case that may determine the future of file-sharing programs

File-sharing programs enable users to send and receive copies of files on their computer through the Internet. However, the transfer of these copies may be infringing on copyright laws protecting the files.

When using more standard methods of duplication such as a copy machine, the law is very clear what type of copying is legal and what is type is not, Joe Knopp, local attorney, said.

A material may only be copied if it is being reproduced for educational purposes, which is typically not the case with what is transferred using peer-to -peer file-sharing networks.

"Even if a church were to say 'We are going to buy one piece of music and make copies instead of buying pieces of music; certainly the person copying the music is violating the copyright laws," Knopp said.

The Supreme Court is currently deliberating MGM v. Grokster, and the Court's decision will determine the future legality of peer-to-peer file-sharing networks. The plaintiffs claim that the transfer of files through the Internet is illegal and violates copyright laws, whereas the defendants claim that by declaring file-sharing illegal, the Supreme Court will hamper technological growth.

One of the major defenses offered on behalf of file-sharing companies is decision in Sony v. Universal City Studios from 1984. The case challenged whether it was legal to use Sony's Betamax video recording system to tape copyrighted materials.

The court ruled that the device was legal, because, according to the Court's statement, most users simply recorded a television program to view at a later time, which is a legal process.

The latest lawsuit is to target individuals using a network known as Internet2 to transfer copyrighted materials.

Internet2 is a project by the university community to form a super-fast network for research purposes. Using an Internet2 connection and a program called i2hub, students are able to download full-length movies in roughly five minutes and songs in only 20 seconds.

Harvard Townsend, director of Computing and Network Services, said even though K-State students have access to Internet2, programs such as i2hub are blocked, preventing the illegal transfer of files.

K-State has filtered all of its network since May of 2000, when programs such as Napster and iMesh were blocked due to the incredible load it put on the network, Townsend said.

"People couldn't get legitimate academic and research work done," he said.

If a student is caught downloading copyrighted materials by the RIAA or the Motion Picture Association of America, they will send a violation notice to CNS, who will then temporarily shut down the individual's Internet access until they are able to prove that what they were doing was legal.

Even though students may feel like the ban on file-sharing networks is a nuisance, Townsend said, in a way, the university is helping the students.

"In a sense, it protects the students too, because they're not getting sued," he said.

Organization works for recycling at KSU Stadium, in Manhattan

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Students for Environmental Action push the need for recycling on campus, in Manhattan and at KSU Stadium.

Becky Clark, junior in biology and member of SEA, said there is not enough interest from people to make a radical change.

"I've seen people throw their bottles away in the trash can when there's a recycling receptacle right next to the trash can," she said. "We're trying to promote that actions do have results."

Clark said SEA is in the process of trying to recycle at KSU Stadium. She said they are trying to show people why this would be a good idea, but it has been challenging.

"The stadium does not recycle anything. They see it as economically unfeasible, but it's not a big investment," she said. "It saves money by not having trash thrown away, we save money in energy and it also creates jobs because it takes more people to recycle."

Jim Muller, manager of intercollegiate athletic state, said they have not had a big program to recycle at the KSU Stadium.

"We did have several attempts, but we've never been able to have a program large enough," he said. "We've had several starts from campus groups, and each time it's been an overwhelming task."

Lani Meyer, junior in horticultural science and member of SEA, said one problem SEA has run into is that they haven't been able to recycle beer cans at the KSU Stadium because of legal issues.

"Consumption of alcoholic beverages is prohibited," Muller said.

Meyer and other members are trying to come up with different solutions to this problem.

"Jim didn't want people dumping beer cans in the recycling bin. People may see that, and that may not be good for K-state's image," Meyer said. "We're trying to come up with a way that wouldn't reveal the cans, such as colored bags, but that's another restriction we're coming across."

SEA is also trying to make curbside-recycling in Manhattan a reality.

"(Curbside recycling has) been brought up to the city several times, and they've not voted on it," Meyer said. "It's never really gone anywhere; I don't know why."

Mark Taussig, city commissioner, said there were reasons for not voting for it.

"We've talked about different ways of doing this," Taussig said. "I think it was just considered that it wasn't financially feasible."

However, Clark believes it could potentially be cheaper than just throwing things away.

"(The city commission sees) it as economically unfeasible, but it's not a big investment," she said. "It saves money by not having trash thrown away, we save money in energy, and it also creates jobs."

Taussig said that if Manhattan were to implement a program like this it would imply a tax increase.

"I didn't support the idea of mandating it, I didn't think that we should force everybody to do and pay for it," Taussig said. "But I would be very supportive of a volunteer program."

Taussig said recycling should be an individual decision and perhaps sometime a city decision, but not now.

"If people do want to recycle, they can easily; we do in our household," he said. "There's value in talking about it, investigating about it from time to time, to see if it makes sense financially and environmentally."

Clark said SEA will start a new desk-side recycling program, which would more than likely increase the recycling volume on campus.

"In every office they will have three compartments: mixed paper, newspaper, magazines," she said.

Zoo to teach children value of conservation at Earth Day celebration Saturday

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sunset Zoological Park will celebrate Earth Day Saturday afternoon.

A variety of environment-friendly exhibits will be on display. There will be a conservation carnival and live-animal programs.

Rachel Soash, curator of education at Sunset Zoo, said games are also planned for kids to help teach them facts about the environment.

"There is a trash game where kids must determine how long certain things will take to decompose, such as diapers, leather and glass," she said.

The live animal programs will showcase animals that are helpful to the environment.

"They may not be the animals that everyone likes; for instance, cockroaches are not the favorite among insects, but if we didn't have them, we would live with too much trash," she said.

Soash said there will be face painting, vendors and wonder spots, which talk about different animals and how they help the environment.

The carnival will be in the Africa section of the zoo, and different vendors will be set up throughout with information about their organizations.

A chance to vote for the name of the new baby sloth bear will also be available.

Admission is $4 for adults and $2 for children ages 3-12. Children who are two years old and younger get in free.

The event will take place rain or shine and will last from 1 to 4:30 p.m.

"We are trying to make people realize that one person can truly make a difference," Soash said.

"By buying wiser products, such as cleaning products at the grocery store you can help the environment. There are many options that can help improve the environment."

Kansas' population to rise

By Carl Manning
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A quarter century from now, Kansas will have a slightly higher population, and the people will be living longer.

According to Census Bureau projections for Kansas in 2030, the state will retain its four congressional districts, although not everyone agrees with that assessment. Kansas would be better off than Iowa, Nebraska or Missouri, each of which is expected to be down a district in 2030.

The 2000 census showed Kansas had 2,688,418 people, and projections released Thursday predict 2,940,084 in 2030, a 9.4 percent increase.

The nation's 2030 population is projected at 363.6 million, a 29.2 percent jump.

Kansas is 32nd in census rankings, but if the projections bear out, Arkansas will occupy that spot in 2030, and Kansas will drop to 35th.

That doesn't surprise Steven Maynard-Moody, director of the Policy Research Institute at the University of Kansas.

"The population growth in Kansas is slowing more quickly than it is nationally," Maynard-Moody said. "The proportion of the nation's population living in Kansas is declining."

Contrary to the census projections, Maynard-Moody said the state's rate of growth as compared with the rest of the nation could mean Kansas would lose a congressional district.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see it down to three in the next census," Maynard-Moody said.

But, he added, projections aren't absolute, and census data generally has some surprises, such as the state's Hispanic population more than doubling from 1990 to 2000.

The census projections also predict a jump in the state's elderly population, both in numbers and as a percentage of the total population.

In 2000, Kansas had 356,229 residents age 65 and older, or 13.3 percent of the state's population. The 2030 projection calls for 593,091 people in that age group, or 20.2 percent of the state's population.

That's an increase of 66.5 percent within that age group.

The 85-and-older group had 51,770 in 2000; that's predicted to be 87,969 in 25 years.

The 2000 median age was 35.2 years, versus a projected 39.1 in 2030. Nationally, the median age was 35.3 in 2000 and is expected to be 39 in 2030.

"All over the country, there's going to this bulge of baby boomers.

"In places like Kansas, this could be made a little worse because of the trend of young outmigration," Maynard-Moody said.

While the census data doesn't break down projections by county, Maynard-Moody said he expects a continued trend of rural counties having fewer, older people while urban areas grow.

"There was a huge jump in urban growth after World War II when people moved from the farms to cities, and the trend has been pretty consistent farm to city migration, and it accelerated again in the 1990s," he said.

One reason for rural depopulation is the industrialization of agriculture, requiring fewer people to maintain farms and ranches.

"This will be accelerated by environmental trends we are seeing in southwestern Kansas like the loss of water," Maynard-Moody said.

He said there are two kinds of rural areas – those near towns with health care, shopping and social services, such as Dodge City and Hays, and those far removed from such services.

"These areas will decline even with the elderly population because they won't be able to drive two hours to see a doctor," he said.

Legislature takes no action on proposal for tribal casinos in Wyandotte County

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A compact permitting two American Indian tribes to operate a large casino in Wyandotte County remains alive but isn't any closer to legislative ratification.

The Joint Committee on State-Tribal Relations took no action Thursday on the agreement between Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and the Kickapoo and Sac and Fox tribes.

The tribes hope to build a $210 million hotel-and-casino complex near Kansas Speedway.

The state would receive part of the revenue – at least $50 million annually – in exchange for limiting other kinds of gambling.

No other casinos could operate within 100 miles, and each track for dog and horse racing could have a maximum of 600 slot machines.

The committee's chairman, Sen. Pete Brungardt, R-Salina, said he does not know when the panel will meet again.

He said it's likely to wait to see whether other gambling proposals advance after the Legislature returns from its spring break Wednesday.

More teens abusing painkillers

By Larry McShane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

About one in five teenagers have tried prescription painkillers such as Vicodin and OxyContin to get high, with the pill-popping members of "Generation Rx" often raiding their parents' medicine cabinets, according to a study by the Partnership for a Drug-Free America.

The 17th annual study on teen drug abuse, released Thursday, found that in 2004 more teens had abused a prescription painkiller than Ecstasy, cocaine, crack or LSD. One in 11 teens had abused over-the-counter products such as cough medicine, the study reported.

"For the first time, our national study finds that today's teens are more likely to have abused a prescription painkiller to get high than they are to have experimented with a variety of illegal drugs," said Roy Bostock, Partnership Chairman. "In other words, Generation Rx has arrived."

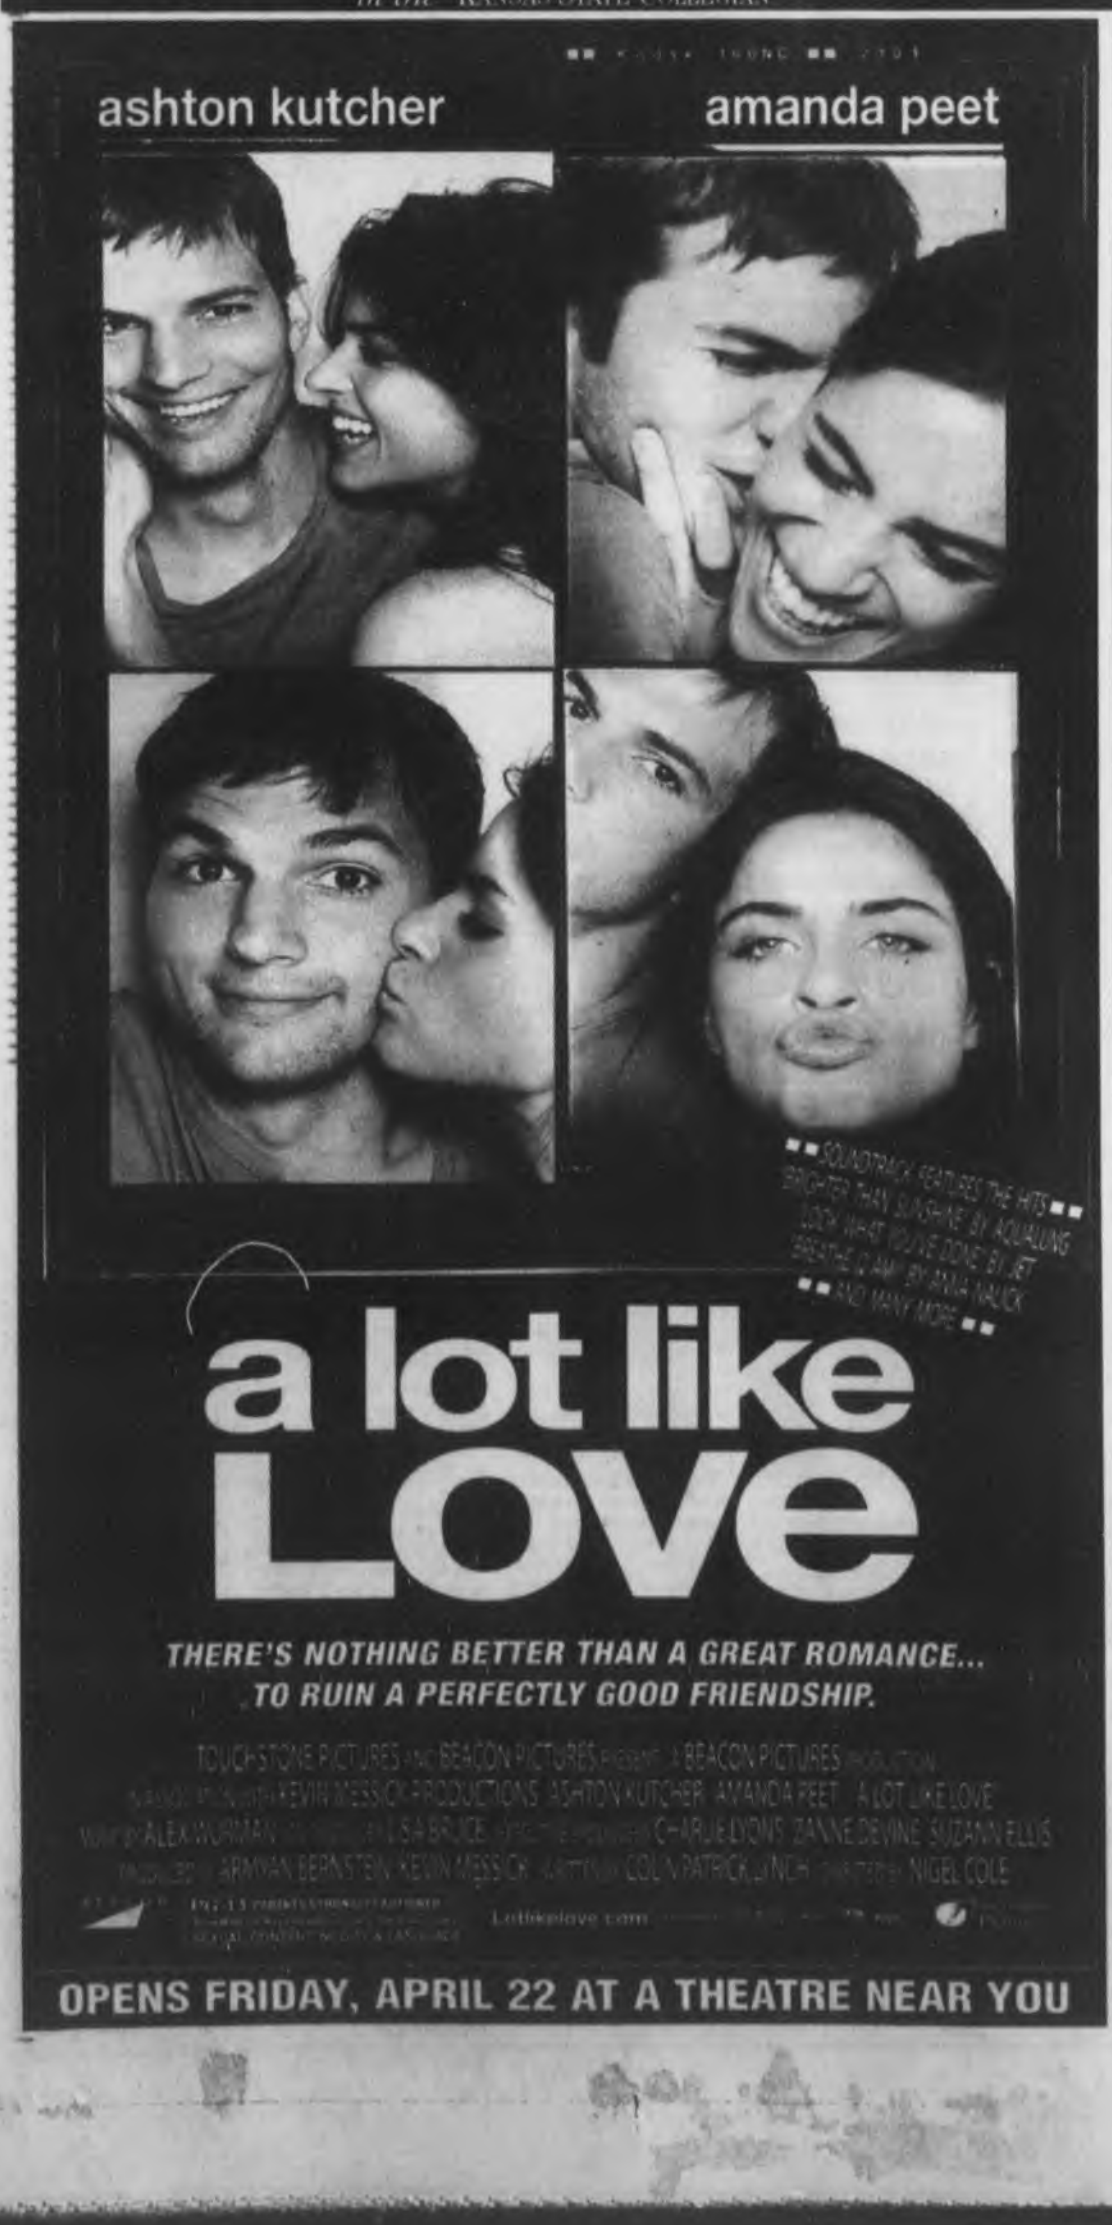
According to the study, the most popular prescription drug abused by teens was Vicodin, with 18 percent – or about 4.3 million youths – reporting they had used it to get high.

OxyContin and drugs for attention-deficit disorder such as Ritalin/Adderall followed with one in 10 teens reporting they had tried them.

Fewer than half the teens – 48 percent – said they saw "great risk" in experimenting with prescription medicines. "Ease of access" was cited as a major factor in trying the medications, with medicine cabinets at home or at friends' homes a likely source, the survey found.

It was only the second year the survey had studied abuse of legal drugs.

In 2003, the Partnership grouped together three prescription pain relievers: Vicodin, OxyContin and Tylox, and found that 20 percent of teens had tried them.



The 2004 study looked at Vicodin and OxyContin separately but excluded Tylox, and found that 18 percent had tried Vicodin and 10 percent had used OxyContin.

The 2004 figures indicated the same or a slight increase in use compared with 2003, said Barbara Delaney, director of research at the Partnership.

For the first time, the 2004 survey included a question about the use of over-the-counter products to get high. Nine percent, or about 2.2 million teens, had experimented with cough syrup and other such products, the survey reported.

It also found that the number of teens reporting marijuana use declined to 37 percent last year.

WIND | Panel debates balance of energy, preservation multiple perspectives to the issue.

"This forum tonight helped to give a better appreciation for both sides of the issue and allowed those on hand to gain more knowledge in general. We were trying to not side with one over the other, and we worked to keep the forum from turning into a debate," he said.

Lee Allison, chairman of the Kansas Energy Council and the Governor's representative to the Wind and Prairie Task Force, spent his opportunity speaking about finding a necessary balance between the two sides.

"Kansas has two incredible resources – the untilled tallgrass and a huge wind energy resource. The key is to try to find a balance or happy medium and preserve the prairie as much as possible while enhancing energy to the state of Kansas," he said.

Allison said that the state of Kansas was rated number one in potential wind energy in the United States. Allison said he felt there had to be a way to please everyone with regards to the issue.

"If we really can come to some type of agreement and work this issue out, it really can be in the best interest of everyone," he said.

Margy Stewart, owner and operator of the 200-acre Bird Runner Wildlife Refuge sided opposite Allison. She spoke of the damage that would be caused to the Flint Hills Prairie, as well as the economic and ecological impacts that would occur by creating wind turbines.

"In Flint Hills, we are lucky to have an ecosystem that enables us to become so easily immersed with. Ecologically, it is so rare that we have to appreciate the prairie for its true worth," she said.

"What everyone needs to understand is that today it might be wind turbines that threatens Flint Hills, but eventually, it may be something else as well."

Pete Ferrell, a rancher with a proposed wind farm in Butler county, was the third speaker of the evening who sided with a controlled commercial wind energy policy.

"There just is no evidence that a wind farm reduces land value from an economic perspective, as well as doing much to the ecological ability of an area," he said.

CSA | Students express opposition to Activity Center

said. "I would much rather see the money be spent somewhere else."

The referendum is asking students to vote yes or no to fund CSA.

If passed, student fees going toward the expansion of Hale Library will be redirected to fund CSA when the expansion is completed, which will be in fall 2006.

Each semester, students pay $10.27 in fees that go toward the library bonds, but this fee will end in 2015. The referendum is asking to extend it for a maximum of 10 years. It will take a 60-percent vote to pass.

Dan Sobek, CSA committee member, said this money could not go toward classroom improvement or a parking garage.

Committee members visited other college campuses to see similar facilities to find the best fit for K-State, Sobek, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said. One of universities was the University of Kansas, as well as other Big 12 schools.

He said all of those universities' facilities were being used, some more than others.

Nacole Boan, CSA committee member, said the committee is represented by a wide variety of student organizations. She estimated 30 to 40 students attended the committee meetings.

Boan, junior in political science, said the administration wanted this project and there weren't other options that this money could fund.

"(President Jon Wefald) has actually designated this as a priority project," she said.

At the All-University Open House, there was a booth set up about CSA, and Boan said prospective students were very enthusiastic. She said she talked to 25 to 30 prospective students.

"Not one of them was negative about it," Boan said. "They were all very enthused."

Weninger said he talked to organizations in the College of Engineering and found little support for the project.

Zac Cook, graduate student in civil engineering, said he has found that students are confused about the project. He said students think they will have to pay the money anyway, so they might as well vote yes.

"Past the confusion of the financing is the 'What I would do with $4.5 million'," Cook said. "I'm not telling them to vote no. I'm telling them to vote."

CSA is a $6.5 million project, with $2 million pledged by the administration to be raised privately.

Cook was the student body president during 2002-03 term, and he was here the last time the center was put to a student referendum in November 2000. It was called the Student Activities Center then.

That proposal called for a $6.50 per semester student fee increase and was voted down with more than 80 percent of the vote.

"Being around for the last time, it's strange to see it be brought up again," Cook said. "Last time it was the SAC, not it's the CSA."

Although this may be the best choice, Cook said there needed to be more talk on other possible options.

"When people throw out ideas, they may not be feasible," he said. "We needed to have people with a dialogue."

Bernard Pitts, executive director of the K-State Student Union, said a Student Activities Center was originally proposed along with the Union expansion project in 1994, but funding ran out. That project was funded by student fees.

"When we prioritized everything, the SAC was the last of the priorities," Pitts said.

Funding for upkeep of CSA could mean an increase in fees later on, but that's uncertain, he said.

"At this point, we don't know," Pitts said. "We are hoping our sales would increase."

Cook said there needs to be a plan for the future when bonds retire early. He said the early retirement didn't come as a surprise, because Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, plans conservatively.

"He always uses a projection of less in case our enrollment goes down," Cook said. "We need to have a planning process for what's going to go on in the future."

Sex offender to move into group home

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – The first man committed for treatment under the state's sexual predator law said publicity about plans to release him to a group home after 10 years at Larned State Hospital has left him in temporary limbo.

Earlier this year, a judge determined that Leroy Hendricks, now 70, was ready to leave the hospital and try living in the community again. The state Department of Social Rehabilitation Services said last month that it had arranged with Lawrence Community Innkeepers to house Hendricks and two other aging predators.

They were to be placed in a group home at an undisclosed location where they would be under 24-hour supervision. SRS spokesman Mike Deines said the agency still plans to move Hendricks to a group home in Lawrence, possibly within three weeks. Deines would not say where Hendricks would live, citing privacy concerns.

Hendricks, in a telephone interview Wednesday with the Lawrence Journal-World, said he would be in Lawrence now "if somebody hadn't opened their ... mouth."

"I'm stuck here till something happens, and I don't know when that will be," Hendricks said from the Osawatomie State Hospital.

Hendricks, who molested at least 10 children over three decades, was committed to Larned after completing a 10-year prison term and said his treatment at the state hospital worked.

"People like me and alcoholics are the same," he said. "There's no cure. All you can do is learn to control, and that's what you learn – you learn to change your thinking. When I got in here, I was a very angry man. I don't get angry any more."

Hendricks said that after about a week back at Larned, he was moved to a home on the grounds of the Osawatomie hospital. The SRS has used it to house younger sexual predators after they leave Larned, but initially it wasn't considered for Hendricks because of his physical condition.

The Kansas sexual predator law allows high-risk offenders to be held by the state for treatment after they've finished their prison sentence, and Hendricks was the first person to be committed under it.

Flu samples recovered

By Daniel Yee
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA – At least 99 percent of the killer flu samples mistakenly sent to laboratories around the world by a medical supply house have been recovered and destroyed, and there have been no infections, the government said Thursday.

Health officials have been scrambling since it was learned nearly two weeks ago that a dangerous strain was sent to 3,757 labs in the United States and 18 countries.

Only a "few stragglers" – about three dozen labs – have not yet destroyed the samples, and health officials are working feverishly to make sure they do so, said Julie Gerberding, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The government is investigating why and how Meridian Bioscience Inc. of Newton, Ohio, sent out the flu samples. The vials were included in test kits sent to laboratories to gauge their proficiency at detecting various strains of the flu.

The Asian flu strain killed between 1 million and 4 million people in a 1957 outbreak. The strain had not been included in flu vaccines since 1968, and anyone born after that date has little or no immunity to it.

"We don't know whether the strain involved in the test kits could infect people or not, so we had to assume it could," Gerberding said.

Bill allows oil drilling in Alaska

By H. Josef Hebert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The House approved a broad energy bill Thursday aimed at boosting domestic production, including provisions to allow oil drilling in an Alaska wildlife refuge and to shield makers of a gasoline additive from water contamination lawsuits.

The largely Republican crafted bill was approved 249-183 after two days in which the GOP majority turned back repeated attempts by Democrats to add measures they said would reduce energy use, including a proposal for higher automobile fuel economy requirements.

The bill includes $12 billion in tax breaks and subsidies for energy companies, more than the Bush administration said it wanted. Nevertheless, the White House strongly endorsed the measure.

"This is a comprehensive piece of legislation, and it does address one of the fundamental problems facing our nation and that is that we are growing more dependent on foreign sources of energy," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

Democrats argued that it would have little effect on U.S. reliance on oil imports and failed to address high gasoline and other energy prices.

Contentious issues during debate involved the gasoline additive, MTBE. The bill calls for shielding MTBE makers from product liability lawsuits stemming from contamination of drinking water supplies. Democrats warned the liability waiver would leave the public with billions of dollars in cleanup costs.

An attempt by Rep. Lois Capps, D-Calif., to strip the MTBE assistance from the energy bill was defeated, 219-213.

Capps said groundwater contamination from the gasoline additive has affected more than 1,800 community water systems in 29 states with a potential cleanup cost of $29 billion. MTBE makers, including large oil companies and refiners, dispute that estimate but have argued they need liability protection because of an expected surge in lawsuits.

The MTBE provision has been a top priority of Majority Leader Tom DeLay and Rep. Joe Barton, chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, who argue that Congress endorsed the widespread use of the additive when it required gasoline contain an oxygenate to help clean up the air.

Both are from Texas where major MTBE manufacturers are located.

The energy bill would shield these companies from lawsuits claiming that MTBE is a defective product and that the companies knew all along it would cause water contamination problems. At least 80 lawsuits involving MTBE have been filed.

The bill also calls for phasing out MTBE use by the end of 2014 – longer than MTBE critics say is necessary – and would provide $2 billion over eight years to help the manufacturers shift away from making the additive.

"They're not giving MTBE manufacturers a slap on the wrist. They're giving them a pat on the back," said Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi of California where MTBE contamination has been widespread. "It is the taxpayers who are stuck with the bill."

The MTBE issue was blamed for blocking approval of energy legislation in the Senate in 2003 as Democrats waged a filibuster against the provision. It is expected to cause a problem with the bill in the Senate again.

Students, community complete volunteer projects on Earth Day

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday of Service celebrated both Earth Day and Community Service Week by gathering hundreds of volunteers at Tuttle Creek State Park.

The event was sponsored by the K-State Community Service Program and the Student Governing Association.

More than 200 people volunteered during the two shifts, exceeding expectations.

"We anticipated 150 volunteers all together," Tori Collins, CSP and AmeriCorps VISTA member, said.

Emily Besler, junior in marketing and political science and SGA coordinator, said various groups worked together to make this big project work.

"Tuttle Creek staff provided equipment for projects, the Community Service Program got the volunteers and (SGA) allocated money to CSP for advertising," Besler said.

Edward Phelps, member of the Tuttle Creek Lake Association, said there were different

Student Activities Center

Bonds are not easy to explain, and the construction of the Center for Student Activities referendum deals with bonds.

In fall 2006, the Hale Library expansion bonds can be paid off, which students pay into from $10.27 in fees.

That fee is up for a vote on Tuesday to redirect it toward funding the building of the CSA.

If it passes, the Hale Library bond will be retired early and another will be created to go toward the CSA, said Keith Ratzloff, assistant vice president for administration and finance.

"We're going to basically pay the loan off early," Ratzloff said. "The $10.27 is going to be transferred over to fund CSA."

If it doesn't pass, money will continue to go into the Hale bond until 2015, when it is set to expire.

Excess money goes into a reserve account, he said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said the money in the reserve account is what will be used to pay off the Hale bonds early.

"We've built up reserves that are above and beyond the original bond obligations," Bosco said. "We're obligated to keep them right there until the students decide what they want to do with them."

Student fees would raise $4.5 million to fund

Idea for center began more than a decade ago

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Center for Student Activities is not a new idea at K-State.

In April 1994, a student referendum approved the expansion of the K-State Student Union.

Fifty-nine percent of voting students were in favor of the expansion. Although 60 percent was needed, Student Senate voted to let it pass. This increased fees by $25.

The expansion was an $11.5-million enhancement project, according to past Collegians. Construction took place in the late 1990s, and a CSA was part of the proposal, then known as Student Activities Center.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said they ran out of money to fund SAC.

"The Student Union building was built in the early 50's, and the infrastructure was so bad we had to put more money into the stuff behind the walls," Bosco said.

Close to 60 percent of the $11.5 million went toward bringing electrical, plumbing and life-safety systems online.

There was a $40 million wish list, he said, so SAC was not the only item left unfunded.

"The list is enormous. This is the next piece," Bosco said. "We're just checking off the next priority."

In November 2000, students voted no to increase fees for SAC. More than 80 percent out of 2,465 students voted against the $6.50-cent increase.

Sproles taken by San Diego in 4th round of NFL draft

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The wait is over.

After watching the first three rounds of the National Football League draft go by on Saturday, former K-State running back Darren Sproles was drafted 29th in the fourth round (130th overall) by the San Diego Chargers on Sunday.

According to the Chargers' Web site, Sproles said he is excited about playing in San Diego.

"It feels really good to get my shot, because everybody was saying that being 5'6", I wouldn't get a chance," he said. "I like the way they run a whole bunch of draws, stuff like that and outside zone that will fit me pretty good."

SAN DIEGO CHARGER

Sproles, who finished his career at K-State as the all-time rushing leader with 4,979 yards and the all-time leader in the Big 12 Conference in all-purpose yards with 6,812 yards, was the 13th running back drafted and will join former Wildcat linebacker Ben Leber as a member of the Chargers.

Chargers officials said the Olathe, Kan., native was drafted primarily as a return man, but he could see some time as a third-down back.

In his career as a returner for the Wildcats, Sproles tallied 378 total yards and one touchdown on punt returns and 846 total yards on kick returns.

The last time Sproles played at Qualcomm Stadium in San Diego,

WEEK IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

New pope addresses world

Eric Vandeville | THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
German cardinal Joseph Ratzinger was elected Pope on Tuesday and took the name Benedict XVI.

Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger greeted a crowd of thousands outside St. Peter's Basilica Tuesday as the newly elected Pope Benedict XVI. The 78-year-old pontiff is the oldest selected in more than a century, and he and his brother predict his reign to be short-lived.

LANCE'S LAST TOUR DE FRANCE

Fans of the yellow Livestrong bracelet and Lance Armstrong will have one more chance to see him win the Tour de France. The cyclist announced Monday he will retire after he attempts to win his seventh straight Tour in July. The announcement came after Armstrong mentioned his intent to spend more time with his children and campaign against cancer.

BTK HEARING WAIVED

Rader

Dennis Rader, the man accused of the BTK serial killings, waived his preliminary hearing Tuesday. Rader's decision means the state has enough evidence to go to an official trial, which will determine whether or not the former Park City enforcement officer is responsible for the 10 slayings that occurred over more than two decades.

NEW CITY OFFICIALS SWORN IN

Former Manhattan mayor Brad Everett and Commissioner Mark Taussig said goodbye Wednesday night as new commissioners Mark Hatesohl, Tom Phillips and Jayme Morris-Hardeman were sworn in during Manhattan's city commission meeting. Ed Klimek was selected as mayor for the second time during his commission term.

WENDY'S WOMAN ARRESTED

The woman who claimed she found a human finger in a bowl of Wendy's chili was arrested and accused of attempted grand larceny. Investigators said the March 22 claim is a hoax, but an expensive one that cost Wendy's $2.5 million in business losses in the bay area.

CHINA, JAPAN MEET FOR PEACE

Chinese and Japanese leaders met Saturday to try to settle a 30-year-long dispute over Tokyo's handling of its atrocities during World War II, but the effort failed. Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi asked for an official apology for violent, anti-Japanese protests in China, but Chinese President Hu Jintao did not give any indication to oblige.

CONSPIRATOR PLEADS GUILTY

Zacarias Moussaoui told jurors Friday that he was personally chosen by Osama bin Laden to fly a plane into the White House on a later Sept. 11 attack that did not take place and that he conspired with the hijackers who killed thousands of Americans. Four of the six conspiracy counts could bring the death penalty to Moussaoui, which prosecutors plan to pursue.

Teachers feel stress of mandate

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN ,

No Child Left Behind is supposed to close the achievement gap between students and make sure all students reach academic proficiency.

Katha Hurt, principal of Woodrow Wilson Elementary, said NCLB has little, if any, effect on students' achievements and only serves to add stress to teachers.

It has been two years since President Bush signed the act, and Hurt said it will take time to see if students perform better, which she said isn't a large problem in Manhattan, because the district is already exceeding expectations.

"Manhattan scores in general continue to gradually increase, and we're already achieving above expectations," Hurt said.

However, state assessments may not accurately measure Kansas students' abilities against those of students from other states, since there is no national standardized test.

"Until all states give the same exams, it's comparing apples to oranges," said Angie Messer, head of the math department at Manhattan High School.

"You cannot compare how Kansas does to, say, Nebraska, because we give different exams."

There are also other problems with NCLB.

"The biggest problem we face is that the plan isn't realistic about the abilities of special education students," Hurt said.

"There are always going to be children who can't reach expectations."

One solution to this, Hurt said, would be to encourage students to perform to the best of their own abilities.

Another problem with NCLB is that it can add extra stress to teachers, Messer said.

"(No Child Left Behind) is very high stakes for teachers, because it questions your abilities," Messer said.

With emphasis placed on core subjects such as reading, writing, math and science, there aren't as many opportunities for students to pursue other subjects, such as art.

"When we focus on reading, math, science, etc., other things suffer, such as the fine arts and culture," Hurt said.

Messer said another problem with NCLB is that there are few rewards for students who do well in school.

"There are no incentives by the state for a student to perform well," Messer said.

"There are no scholarships, no graduation requirements, nothing for doing well."

It is left to schools and teachers to provide incentives for their students to perform well.

"I have seen our district increase our incentives for students to perform to the best of their abilities," Messer said.

"Of course, there's the satisfaction of doing your best, but we all know that doesn't mean anything to high school kids."

While there may not be many scholarships for students, there are other forms of funding for college students.

The NCLB provides $13.7 billion to the Pell Grant Program, $128.3 million of which is to go to Kansas students in 2006.

According to www.nclb.gov, Kansas receives $613.7 million in funding for new federal student loans.

Even with added grants and loans, some educators feel there are flaws with the NCLB.

Educators agree that it needs better funding and is, at the moment, unrealistic.

"I think [No Child Left Behind] is a wonderfully optimistic concept that we should all keep striving for, but it needs some refinement," Hurt said. "It needs to become more realistic."

The next Willie the Wildcat

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students auditioned for a chance to become the next Willie the Wildcat on Friday.

"I have been a K-State fan my whole life," Lukas Sundahl, senior in kinesiology, said. "A lot of the former Willie skits have inspired me."

Those who auditioned completed four activities regularly used by Willie at games. They performed 30 seconds of the Wabash Cannonball, answered "what if" questions, performed a home game skit and performed the KSU motions.

"Willie is a character," Melynda Stein, assistant director of marketing and promotion, said. "The person who is Willie has to know what the traits are and be able to pull them off."

Furthermore, the student who becomes Willie has to be athletic. The athleticism will help with the cheers, pushups and various other things Willie has to do, Stein said.

He also has to be creative.

"Willie builds props, develops skits and has to react on the spot," Stein said. "They have to be good with people. They can't be shy."

The identity of the person who becomes Willie the Wildcat has to be a secret. They are not allowed to talk or tell fans who they are.

If the person who is Willie talks to one of the fans, the punishment is up to the coach.

The person who becomes Willie must also have time for the job. He or she would work over the summer, train on a daily basis and perform in more than 200 events throughout the year.

"Over the next few weeks even, there are nine events for Willie to attend," Al Enlow, cheerleading coach, said.

Jeremy Roberts, junior in speech, said he understands how much time it takes to be Willie.

"It's like a full-time job," he said. "If I get it, I hope to do justice to all K-State alumni and fans out there as Willie."

Stein said the next Willie the Wildcat should keep the legacy.

"We've had a good string of people who are Willie for a long time," she said.

Even so, she said she has high hopes for the next Willie.

"I really hope they can expand Willie's creativity," she said.

Sundahl said if he became Willie, he would want to do just that.

"I want K-State to have a Willie who's not afraid to dance at games," he said.

It is not too late to audition to become the next Willie the Wildcat. Enlow said if a student is interested, they should either call or e-mail him or visit him in Ahern 103A.

Lecturer to present Kaw Nation history

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Originally the Kaw Nation lived in Kansas, but they were moved to Oklahoma.

Some of its original land was purchased again near Council Grove, Kan.

This "full circle" is the topic of tonight's lecture by Betty Durkee, the Kaw Nation historic director.

The lecture is the third in a four-part Lewis and Clark series to celebrate Manhattan and Riley County's 150th birthday.

It is called "Lewis and Clark and the Kanza: Diverse Cultures Come Full Circle."

"People have really enjoyed the lectures," said Cheryl Collins, director of the Riley County Historical Museum.

If you go
Lewis and Clark Lecture
When: 7 tonight
Where: Manhattan Public Library 629 Poyntz Ave.

Collins said the previous speakers were well-informed and interesting, and Durkee will be no different.

The land purchased near Council Grove still has remnants of Kaw nation buildings, she said.

It will be turned into a historic park.

The Kaw nation once had a large village near Manhattan, Collins said.

"In some ways, it's a more direct connection than the other lectures, because the large Kaw village was in Manhattan," she said.

The lecture is at 7 tonight at the Manhattan Public Library, 629 Poyntz Ave. There will be a sign language interpreter.

"I think people will enjoy it," Collins said.

TO THE POINT

No Child Left Behind sets unfair standards

It's been two years and the No Child Left Behind Act is still creating an unnecessary burden on both teachers and students.

Manhattan is lucky. The school district has been meeting state standards, but the mandate focuses on failure, not success.

Teachers are still required to administer a host of standardized tests, taking away from teaching time. Once the test results are in, they mean little, as the standards vary from state to state.

The danger is that teachers will begin teaching to the test to ensure students succeed and aren't faced with the harsh penalties imposed by the act, such as a loss of federal funding.

Some states have rebelled and passed laws banning schools from adhering to the NCLB provisions.

Connecticut officials are filing a lawsuit against the act claiming the mandate includes additional testing that unfairly costs the state $8 million annually.

The federal government has had two years to fully fund the program, and it has failed.

Students deserve an education with not only math, science and reading but music, foreign language, physical education and arts.

Teachers, who are already underpaid, and students deserve much more than an underfunded program that standardizes education.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Mocking justice

British disarmament policy, new knife ban only produces rising crime

JONAS HOGG

First come the guns, then come the... butter knives?

According to The Scotsman, the British High Court recently upheld a law that states anybody carrying anything "which has a blade or is sharply pointed" is guilty of a crime. Unless, of course, they have a "good reason" or "lawful authority."

This mockery of justice stems from the fact that a man, Charlie Brooker, was convicted of carrying that most deadly and heinous of all weapons – the butter knife. His attempts to overturn his conviction have thus far failed.

Opponents of gun control have been warning us about this for years. First come the guns, then comes everything else. The United Kingdom has few guns. Correction, the United Kingdom has few legally owned guns, but it also has what the scientists like to call an "ass-ton" of illegally owned guns.

Britain has seen not only a rise in overall violent crime, but also an increase in gun crime since the implementation of its draconian gun control measures. This abysmal failure of policy has left the gun control folks scratching their heads.

As it stands now, it is illegal to carry a knife, but if some get their way, it will soon be illegal to own certain knives as well.

Collectors, martial artists and Renaissance-fair folk will all be forced to relinquish whatever is deemed inappropriate by a bunch of judges– who are themselves protected by men carrying weapons.

All this to thwart the ever-present fear of the drive-by swording.

Who dares to imagine what will come after swords and knives? A nation-wide ban on sharp sticks doesn't sound too ludicrous at this point.

It is truly sad when a nation becomes so wussified they must beg the government to try to make them safe.

The reality is that government can't make you safe. Modern police forces stop approximately 5 percent of all crime; the other 95 percent is left to be investigated with the hope that someone will eventually be caught.

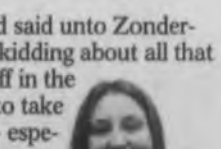
But as Britons gather to lobby Tony Blair to do something about rising "knife crime," one must wonder what went horribly wrong in what was once a civilized nation.

For starters, the government convinced the people not to take care of themselves. It sold the people lock, stock and barrel on disarmament and promised them a world free of crime.

What they got was a world of rising crime rates, a world where people go to jail for shooting a burglar in their own home and a world where the traditionally disarmed bobby now carries weapons through some areas of the United Kingdom.

Since banning guns fell flat on its promises, the whiners are now looking at what else is out there that could possibly make them unsafe. It would appear knives are next on the list of evil, unsafe devices.

Banning butter knives just begs the question, "Where is this going to end up?" It would be nice if people realized that gun control, knife control and the like are absolute failures at curtailing crime. The fact that mainland Europe, which is thoroughly disarmed, has crime rates that are either catching up with or surpassing ours (which are declining, by the way) should be evidence enough of that.



Sadly, most people are idiots. When gun control fails, they'll find something else to blame crime on. Knives are the second step. How long will it be until the government bans opposable thumbs for everyone, except those with "good reason" or "lawful authority?"

Biblical revisions preserve message, should not be condemned

JACI BOYDSTON

And the Lord said unto Zondervan, "I was just kidding about all that misogynistic stuff in the Bible. Feel free to take a red pen to it – especially the Old Testament, yikes– and ye shall be rewarded with a larger market share of the growing 18- to 34-year-old female demographic."

Apparently, tailoring products to appeal to the working woman isn't just for soft drinks and sports cars anymore. As Zondervan, a leading Christian communications company, has demonstrated with its recent rewrite of the Bible, even a two millennia-old document on which almost 2 billion people base their faith can be altered to better fit in with changing times.

In Today's New International Version (TNIV), antiquated terms like "fourth watch of the night" are replaced with clearer language, and words with questionable modern meanings (think: "stoned") are altered.

These relatively minor differences are fairly uncontroversial, but that's not all the TNIV changes.

As The Associated Press reported on April 19, about 30 percent of the TNIV's revisions swap gender-specific words for neutral ones. For example, in the new version, Isaiah 19:16 ("The Egyptians will be like women. They will shudder with fear.") is made into the less offensive, "The Egyptians will become weaklings."

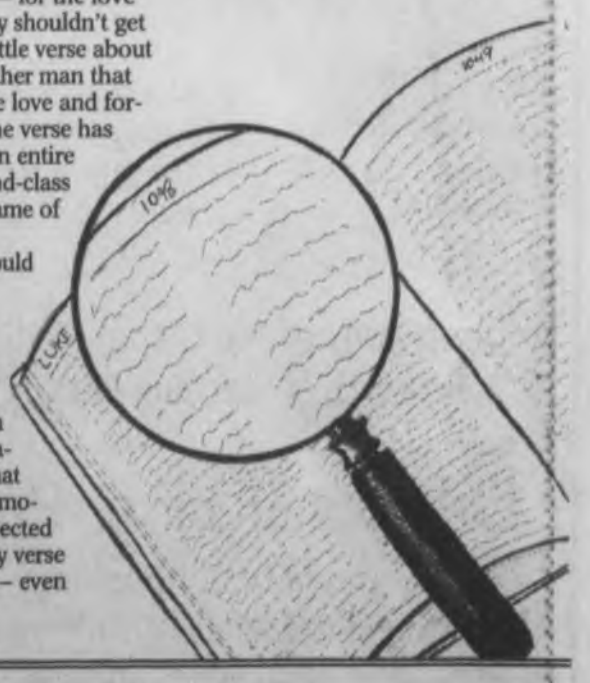
Questionable motives aside, this movement toward politically correct religion presents an interesting dilemma for Christians. If "blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it" (Luke 11:28), shouldn't the word of God be left unaltered?

That depends on your priorities. If the text is more important than the message – which is the case for some – Zondervan should be kicked to the curb. But for those less repulsed by a loose biblical interpretation, there's a big problem. If we start modifying a verse here and editing a parable there, how much longer can we use a literal interpretation of the Bible as justification for our hateful and discriminatory ways?

The TNIV's rejection of a literal biblical translation must be scary for conservative Christians – especially those who have based their entire lives off the words in that sacred book. But maybe they need to be scared a little to realize the Bible's true value.

Instead of getting caught up in whether God created "man" or "men and women" in his image and whether you shouldn't covet your neighbor's "wife" or "spouse," Christians should focus on the Bible's main ideas, not its individual verses.

You know – all the stuff about loving your neighbor, turning the other cheek and not throwing stones at other sinners. And the part about giving to the poor and helping the sick? That part was awesome.



These are the things Christians and readers of the Bible should consider important. And – for the love of God – we definitely shouldn't get so caught up in one little verse about a man lying with another man that we forget about all the love and forgiveness stuff. That one verse has been used to render an entire group of people second-class citizens – all in the name of God.

Is that how we should be using the Bible?

Christians need to decide what the Bible's function is. If it is the infallible word of God in which every single letter is sacred, then revisions that pander to different demographics should be rejected immediately and every verse should be adhered to – even those that promote hate and intolerance.

But if we interpret the Bible loosely, focus on the parts that call for love and acceptance and not get too caught up in every little pronoun, the text shouldn't matter as long as the message is the same.

Did anybody find a set of keys?

The Delts are like the retarded little brother of the rest of the greek system.

Everything that's been said about dorms now applies to DU.

I'm at Rusty's Last Chance on Wednesday watching Beauty on the Beach, and somehow they ended up having a Jell-O wrestling match after Beauty on the Beach. It was the greatest thing I've ever seen.

The wrestling match at Rusty's on Wednesday distorted my jeans so much that I ripped my zipper in half.

Why, Fred? Why?

Fred Peete: you will never be a NBA point guard. Way to blow the only good opportunity you ever had.

I just wanted to say thank you to the girls' tennis coach for calling the police on us because one of the people we were playing tennis with had black-soled shoes.

I would also like to apologize to the police for wasting your time.

By the time you keep raising my tuition, I won't have any money to go to the new Student Activities Center.

How is it that I find more news about K-State in the Topeka paper than in the Collegian?

Hey Collegian: there's this thing called proofreading. Maybe you should try it.

The nice thing about being a Theta is that when Halloween rolls around, you don't even need a costume.

To all you out there bashing Delt, you need to ask yourselves, "How far do you want to take this?" Cause we'd go all night.

I don't need a picture of a preppy frat boy in the paper to tell me how to dress like a mama's boy.

Student-run auction raises money

By Alex Yocum
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Casual elegance was the tone set by the Hospitality Management Society during its ninth annual auction Saturday.

Part of the hotel and restaurant management program, a team of about 12 students, organized the event to help raise funds for its student-endowed scholarship and for trade shows the team visits.

"It is one of the only student-endowed scholarships that we know of on campus," Pat Pesci, instructor in hotel and restaurant management, said. "The scholarship started four years ago so students could have good opportunities."

Students sent out tickets before semester break so community members could participate and then talked to professors and alumni from the university.

This year, students sold about 130 tickets, but there was also room for walk-ins, and anyone was welcomed to participate.

"The items that people could bid on were donated by numerous donators," Jessica Moore, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "We receive things from hotels and industries around Manhattan and even some national reps from California."

To prepare for the auction, the students put in more than 10 hours a week and got credit hours for their services, Jessica Golden, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said. They also had to volunteer for the two-hour event to be able to travel for the rest of the year.

"It is a bit of reality for the students," Pesci said. "It helps them get ready for their marketing, management or financial futures."

All the food was catered by the students; they made a brie cheese bake, fruit, tarts and other dips. By the end of the auction, around $7,000 was brought in by donations, ticket sales and the silent auction itself.

"It is great preparation for the future," Golden said. "It is definitely worth it and fun. People look forward to it, and we like knowing that we did a good job."

Film festival honors winners

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Filmmakers, actors and movie buffs gathered together in Forum Hall Friday night for the Little Apple Film Festival.

The festival is an annual event sponsored by the Union Program Council Films Committee, although this is the first year it was given an official title.

Twelve films were submitted to the festival this year, including two feature length and 10 short. The entries were judged by a panel composed of members of the UPC Films and Art committees, as well as several UPC staff members.

The top four short films and the first-place feature-length film were shown during the festival. The student who submitted each film was honored on stage with a cash prize before its screening.

Rebecca Butler, co-chair of the films committee, said the festival is a great showcase for up and coming talent.

"We want to give student filmmakers a place to show their work," Butler said.

The winning films represented many different genres, including drama, documentary, comedy and suspense. Some elicited laughter, while others maintained a thoughtful silence throughout the auditorium.

Dale Buchheister, a junior in theater and film studies at the University of Kansas, appeared in the short film "Requies" shown at the festival.

"This is the first time the film has ever been played in public," he said.

Buchheister compared the film festival experience to performing in a live theater setting.

"Audiences can make a show so much better," he said. "Watching them respond to the film - you just feed off of that energy. It's the greatest feeling I've ever had."

Audience response to the festival was positive overall.

Valerie Silverwood, freshman in elementary education and history, attended the event with a friend. Silverwood said she enjoyed the evening and would definitely consider returning next year.

"I liked it," she said. "I thought it was very entertaining and funny. It was different from just renting a regular movie."

Wildcat women shut out 7-0 against Texas, Texas A&M

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team was shut out 7-0 in back-to-back matches by Texas A&M and Texas over the weekend to end the regular season.

The Wildcats (8-11, 3-8) have now lost four straight at home heading into the Big 12 Tournament Thursday in Austin, Texas, where they could possibly face Oklahoma in the first round.

The losses were convincing, and head coach Steve Bietau said his squad wasn't comparable to the competition over the weekend.

"A little humility," Bietau said of what he would take away from the weekend. "We wanted to stay in there and compete, and I would say the scores would make you question how well we did with that. The problem is, I'm viewing my players in a situation that they haven't been in that many times.

"Unfortunately, we are not in a position to measure ourselves against Texas and (Texas) A&M right now."

There were not many positives for Wildcat fans to take away from the weekend. Every loss for K-State came in straight sets. The team won a combined five matches in the second set against Texas.

The Texas loss came on senior day for Judith Diaz and Maria Rosenberg, the home finale of a record-setting season for Rosenberg,

San Diego, Sproles a solid; Chargers will rise with his help

No, it's not going to grab national headlines, and no, the football world isn't rocking with excitement, but Sunday was still a pretty huge deal for Darren Sproles.

JOSH WITT

It happened quietly – and probably a little later than K-State football fans and Sproles himself would have liked – but the San Diego Chargers' selection of the Big 12 Conference's career all-purpose yards leader in the fourth round of the 2005 NFL Draft was a solid move for Sproles' future.

He gets to play for a great team on the rise, but there are some things that still bother me.

There are not 129 players better than Sproles. And there were running backs taken ahead of Sproles that do not have the credentials that arguably the best offensive player in K-State history does.

I'm terribly sorry, Philadelphia, but Louisiana Tech running back Ryan Moats, when the Eagles took in the third round at No. 77, will not be a better pro than Sproles. It's great Moats was the Western Athletic Conference Offensive Player of the Year. Fantastic for him.

Let's compare the WAC versus the Big 12. I think the competition was just a little bit tougher for Sproles – no offense to Boise State. You can't tell me Moats has a performance like Sproles' 2003 Big 12 Championship Game against Oklahoma to show off.

And the whole size thing should not have kept teams away from Sproles. Stack him up against Moats and you'll see that Sproles is just one inch shorter at 5-foot-7, and we all have seen how strong he plays.

But, oh well, Sproles is still in a great situation in San Diego.

Wildcats move into 8th place in Big 12 Conference

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite a series-ending loss on Sunday, the Wildcats clinched a home series against Texas A&M over the weekend to move into eighth place in the Big 12 Conference standings.

The Wildcats won the pivotal Big 12 series by taking games one and two on Friday and Saturday.

"This weekend was definitely a positive one for us," junior Steve Murphy said. "Taking two from them was huge for us. We needed it."

If the Wildcats can hold their spot in the standings, they would qualify for the Big 12 Tournament.

"We're taking the field right now with a lot of confidence, and these guys expect to win," Coach Brad Hill said.

The series ended with an exciting extra-innings match on Sunday. However, the Wildcats came up just short in the bottom of the 10th inning, falling to the Aggies 6-5.

"We had a lot of opportunities, but we just couldn't get it done," Hill said following Sunday's game. "Our discipline at the plate just wasn't very great. We competed very hard today, but we just couldn't come back and get the win."

Sophomore Jared Goedert's two-out double off the wall in the bottom of the ninth scored Terry Blunt from third to tie the game at five and send it into extra innings.

Texas A&M's Austin Boggs hit a solo home run in the top of the 10th inning, giving the Aggies the series-ending win.

On Saturday a two-run seventh inning proved to be the difference in helping the Wildcats come out on top of the Aggies, 4-2 .

With the game tied at two, Dent led off the seventh and hit the first pitch from reliever Clayton Turner over the right-center wall to give the Wildcats a 3-2 lead. K-State added another run later in the inning with a RBI double from freshman Cris Tapia that scored junior Joe Roundy, giving the Wildcats the 4-2 lead.

"In the seventh inning, we needed to get a lead-off man on, and we didn't really do that, but we got the RBI instead," Dent said following

Wildcats win 7 events at Kansas relays

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – Seven Wildcats won event titles in three days of competition at the 78th annual Kansas Relays in front of more than 24,000 people – the second-largest attendance in the meet's history.

The Wildcats ended the competition on a positive note Saturday as their women's 4x400-meter relay team came from behind to capture the title.

Morgan Bonds, a freshman from Hutchinson, Kan., ran the anchor leg for K-State.

"I was thinking, 'I need to stay close to her (the leader), because if I do that, I'll have a chance to win in the last 100,'" Bonds said. "It worked out, because eventually, she came back to me."

The relay team qualified for the Midwest Regional Championships at the Mt. SAC Relays on April 17 in Walnut, Calif., and Bonds thought they had a good chance to win on Saturday.

"We thought we had as good of a shot as anybody," she said.

Senior Stelios Kapsalis was another Wildcat to win an event on Saturday, as he won the men's triple jump.

Kyle Lancaster sails over the bar during the invitational events Saturday at the Kansas Relays. Lancaster placed second behind 2004 Olympic silver medalist Matt Hemingway.

MLB | White Sox win 7th straight, beat Royals 4-3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pinch-hitter Pablo Ozuna doubled in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning and the Chicago White Sox beat the Kansas City Royals 4-3 Sunday for their seventh straight victory.

Ozuna

Royals starter Denny Bautista had limited the White Sox to two runs and two hits over seven innings, leaving with a 3-2 lead.

Chicago rallied with two runs in the eighth off three Kansas City relievers. Willie Harris started it with a single off Jamie Cerda and stopped at second when Paul Konerko singled off Shawn Camp (0-2) to snap an 0-for-10 skid.

MLB | Yankees place Wright on disabled list

NEW YORK — Jaret Wright was placed on the 15-day disabled list Sunday with yet another shoulder injury, and the New York Yankees' right-hander will miss at least four to six weeks.

Wright walked off the mound with one out in the sixth inning of a 10-2 loss to Texas on Saturday because of pain in his right shoulder. This is the eighth time he has been on the disabled list in his nine-year career, and the sixth time because of a problem with the shoulder — he had season-ending surgery in 2000 and 2001.

Tests on Sunday showed torn scar tissue in Wright's shoulder, and he was relieved by that.

NFL | Troubled back looks forward to starting anew

DENVER — He sat out for two years, sued the NFL and alienated his alma mater. After being regarded as one of the best prospects in the country, he wound up as little more than an out-of-shape curiosity.

Clarett

It's no wonder Maurice Clarett surprised a lot of people by getting chosen in the third round of the draft. On Sunday, he reported to his new team and his new life, wearing a smile and holding a Denver Broncos jersey.

He claimed his troubled past was now "water under the bridge." He said he would be a model citizen for the Broncos — no holdouts or attitude problems here. Most of all, he said he had been humbled after two years of unseemly turmoil and was glad to be playing football again.

"I'd like for, when people say my name, to mention me with the Denver Broncos and not with all the hoopla and everything else," Clarett said at his introductory news conference.

Event features local bands, extreme sports; hopes to restore Fancy Creek area

By Will Klusener
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The weather may have been windy and unseasonably cold this weekend, but the entertainment and events at the first Find Your Element outdoor festival were hot.

The festival, which was at the Fancy Creek area of Tuttle Creek State Park, benefited local music and extreme sports. It featured skydivers, BMX demonstrations, camp grounds and more than 15 bands.

Events ended on Sunday with the Fancy Creek Challenge, the first mountain-bike race sponsored by the Blue Hills Adventurers.

"We really couldn't have asked for a better first event," said Karen Loumaster, senior in public relations and co-founder of the event.

The other co-founder, Nate Schotanus, was also pleased with the turnout.

"We had more than 250 people attend, and we got thanks you's from most of them, saying they they're glad we did this and that they want to come back."

Though many people came for the music and camping, the extreme sports demonstrations were equally entertaining, said Dan Valentine, Manhattan resident.

"The music is good, but I think my favorite part of this was the parachuting demonstrations because, well, how often do you get to see people falling out of the sky all day?" Valentine said.

Matt "Bro" Pemberton, frontman for The Pembertons, said that while they accepted the invitation to play at FYE because they wanted to support the community, he also looked forward to seeing the extreme sports events.

"I was hoping to see someone bounce (off the ground), but I guess everything worked out OK for the parachutists," Pemberton said.

Other people showed up not only for the music, camping and events, but out of a sense of community and civic responsibility, said Stacy Davis, Manhattan resident.

"I think Karen and Nate are doing a great thing and are helping to keep the community together," Davis said. "The benefits are a for a good local cause too, and I wanted to support them."

Find Your Element was not only about promoting local music and extreme outdoor sports, Loumaster said. It was part of an ongoing effort, which includes building mountain bike trails, to restore the Fancy Creek area.

"This used to be the most popular area of Tuttle Creek before the flood of'93, and we feel that this area really has a lot to offer, Loumaster said. "We want to restore Fancy Creek to prominence, and music and outdoor sports are a great way to show off all that this area has to offer."

Though FYE was a success, there were a few problems typically associated with a first time event, said Schotanus.

"There are always things that you forget to plan for, or underestimate," Schotanus said.

"We were going back and forth between Manhattan and here all day, getting things we ran out of or hadn't planned for.

"There were things like not having enough volunteers, and we also had to lower the ticket prices from $45 to $30 so more people would come," said Schotanus.

Admission price was perhaps the biggest problem of the weekend, according to Loumaster.

"Our goal was to break even on this, so it was difficult to lower the price, Loumaster said. "This was all very expensive, and people risked their lives for entertainment, so we thought the price wasn't that steep."

FYE was an overall success, and figures to have plenty of support for next year, said Davis.

"The music, biking and entertainment were great, and I can't wait to come back next year," Davis said. "Whoever didn't come out here is definitely missing a great time.

That sentiment was echoed by Schotanus.

"It really turned out well, and we're planning on making it even bigger and better next year."

Tom Park, freshman in marketing and photography, jumps over a ramp with his bike Saturday afternoon at the Fancy Creek State Park. Ramps and jumps were set up for riders to use at the Find your Element festival.

Kutcher's latest not good, mediocre

By Abby Wambaugh
DAILY O'COLLEGIAN (OKLAHOMA STATE U.)

STILLWATER, Okla. – Touchstone's latest movie, "A Lot Like Love," is set to hit theaters this weekend. This feel-good romantic comedy stars well-known actor Ashton Kutcher ("Just Married" and "That '70s Show"), cast as Oliver, and Amanda Peet ("The Whole Nine Yards"), who plays Emily.

The movie starts with Oliver and Emily meeting on a flight from Los Angeles to New York and, though both hit it off, they decide they are all wrong for each other.

Emily dismisses Oliver, declaring he struck out by not making the first move, not being a guitar player and not being the right sign for her. Oliver is a planner and wants to have all his ducks in a row, his ducks being a house, career and car, before he gets married.

The two characters could not have been more opposite on the screen.

The next day the two spend the afternoon together after meeting by chance on streets of New York. One of the main themes throughout the film – photography – shows up and Emily takes a roll of film. Despite the seemingly perfect day, Emily still says they are not meant to be. Oliver gives her his number and says to call in 6 years, and she will see that he has all his ducks in a row.

The movie frequently passes over large gaps of time and jumps to later in life when Emily is pursuing acting. A much calmer and less rebellious Emily is dumped by her boyfriend on New Year's Eve. Devastated, she desperately looks for a date for New Year's Eve when she notices the slip of paper with Oliver's number on it from a few years before and calls him.

This point is one of many when the movie takes an unrealistic turn of events.

The two spend New Year's Eve together and Emily happens to have clothes for the party for both Oliver and herself in the car. Despite the awkward run in with Emily's ex-boyfriend, Emily confesses she is surprised to find herself falling for Oliver. At that moment Oliver chooses to tell her he will be leaving the following morning for San Francisco to continue starting up his own online company selling diapers.

Oliver leaves Emily the camera they used to take pictures with when they first met, with a note when she wakes up to an empty house.

After receiving Oliver's camera, Emily gets into photography and begins to make that her career when Oliver comes back to visit her after his own traumatic break up.

The two hit it off again yet both decide the timing is all wrong, and Oliver returns to continue pursuing his company.

When Oliver's company goes south he moves back to Los Angeles for good and back in with his parents. He decides that now, 7 years later, when he is broke, living with his parents, and unsure of the future that it doesn't matter if he has his ducks in a row or not, he wants to be with Emily.

Despite its trite storyline, the movie does have a few added elements that set it apart from most movies in its category.

"A Lot Like Love" does not have amazing acting, a complex plot, or riveting action and fight scenes, but it is a well-done romantic comedy perfect for a girl's night out.

CELEB NEWS

Author Warren now on postage stamp

Pulitzer Prize-winning author Robert Penn Warren now graces a U.S. postage stamp. Hundreds of people gathered in Warren's hometown in southwestern Kentucky last week to witness the unveiling of the stamp, the 21st in the U.S. Postal Service's Literary Arts series.

"I can think of no better way to return the favor than by dedicating this stamp to a letter-writing man," said Ann C. Wright, district manger for the Kentuckiana District of the Postal Service.

Best known for his 1946 novel "All the King's Men," Warren wrote 16 volumes of poetry, 10 novels, a collection of short stories and college textbooks on poetry and fiction.

Warren's children, Roseanna Warren and Gabriel Warren, helped unveil the new stamp.

Britney hub's ex not surprised by pregnancy

The ex-girlfriend of Britney Spears' husband says she isn't surprised to hear that the pop singer is pregnant. "Hey, it was bound to happen," actress Shar Jackson told MTV News last week in her first interview since Spears and Kevin Federline announced the pregnancy April 12. "It was a goal, and it was conquered, moving on."

Jackson, who appeared in the sitcom "Moesha" and the 2000 film "Love & Basketball," has two young children with Federline and said "he loves his kids to death."

Jackson said she is willing to let her kids have a relationship with Spears' child. "I mean, they're family, so if the other side of the family permits, then yeah," she said.

Jackson, who is starting a cosmetics line with a lip gloss called "He Cheated," has accused Federline of being unfaithful, but said she doesn't bear him any ill will.

Maureen Brase-Houchin and Tomomi Kojima practice playing their drums as part of the Japanese Festival Saturday in the Union. The pair were part of a traveling group known as Kokyo Taiko that is based in Lincoln, Neb. Money raised from the event was to be used to help pay for new drums.

Japanese festival offers food, games

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Colorful kimonos, sumo suits and other items from Japan occupied the K-State Student Union.

They were all part of the ninth annual Central Kansas Japanese Festival, with hosts including the Consulate General of Japan at Chicago, the Japanese Student Association, the Japanese Appreciation Alliance and the Japanese Language Program at K-State.

Masanori Tsukurimichi, president of the JSA, said the event, which lasted from noon until 6 p.m. on Saturday, was intended for more than just Japanese students.

"It's basically an educational festival to teach American students and other cultures about the Japanese culture," he said.

About 500 students and visitors attended the festival and visited the events, which included a tea ceremony, an etegami workshop, Yosakoi Soran dance, sumo wrestling, and omikuji (Japanese fortune telling.)

The K-State Karate Club taught Okinawan Goju Ryu Karate-do, a style of karate from Okinawa, to visitors and gave a workshop afterwards. Those in attendance also had the opportunity to learn Japanese calligraphy, shodou, or go to the video game room and experience the latest video games Japan has to offer.

There were carnival activities for the young children in attendance as well, such as a bean bag throw and ring toss. Many organizations were also selling Japanese products, food, books and clothes.

The festival encouraged tsunami relief donations, and participants could work toward the goal of making 1,000 origami cranes that would be sent to tsunami victims.

Kyoko Mizuno, adviser for the JSA and instructor of modern languages, said this year was probably the festival's largest turnout yet.

"It seems every year we add extra activities, and I think that is why more people continue to come," Mizuno said.

She said that while the Yosakoi Soran dancing and the etegami workshop (postcard painting) were new events this year, they always include everyone's favorites like the tea ceremony and Go and Shogi, which are popular Japanese-style board games.

"We always have something informational too, and this year we had a study abroad presentation from a student who went to Japan and a presentation by JET," Mizuno said.

The combined efforts of the different cultures and organizations to put on the large event was important, since there are fewer than 50 Japanese students at K-State.

Mizuno said with so many participants, the planning process for this year's festival began last August. There will be a meeting sometime next week to begin preparations for next year's events.

"It's a year-long learning and planning experience," Mizuno said.

"The Japanese students and other students who want to learn about the culture collaborated together."

Mizuno said the event is worth the hard work, because there are many older people who moved here from Japan decades ago and now do not get a chance to return much, if at all. Mizuno said that while the Japanese festival is for all different cultures, for the Japanese, it's like bringing them home.

"One of the reasons I wanted to do this was to bring Japan home to them," she said.

Bombs in Baghdad kill 21, wound 73

By Sameer N. Yacoub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD – Insurgents exploded two car bombs in a Baghdad market and two more in Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit on Sunday, killing a total of 21 Iraqis and wounding 73 in one of the bloodiest days since Iraq's historic elections.

The anti-coalition forces have grown more emboldened in the past week, bringing down a civilian helicopter carrying 11 people Thursday and striking with bomb attacks across Iraq Saturday, killing at least 16 people, including an American soldier. The violence – largely targeting Iraqi police and security forces – has played out as the National Assembly struggles to assemble a government.

Earlier Sunday, the U.S. military said it arrested four more suspects in Thursday's downing of a civilian helicopter north of Baghdad, bringing the number apprehended so far to 10. All 11 helicopter passengers and crew were killed, including one shot by insurgents.

The Baghdad bombs killed 15 people and wounded 40. The first exploded in front of an ice cream shop in the western al-Shoulah district, police Maj. Mousa Abdul Karim said. As people rushed to assist the wounded, a second bomb detonated within a few minutes, he said.

The U.S. military said it received a report that at least one explosives-rigged car, parked near an Iraqi police station in western Baghdad, had detonated, causing some 30 casualties. It had no further details.

Earlier, a car bomb exploded outside a police academy in Saddam Hussein's hometown, and another one went off moments later as authorities rushed to the scene, killing at least six Iraqis and wounding 33, officials said.

The carefully coordinated attack by insurgents in Tikrit occurred as academy recruits were about to travel to Jordan for training, said police Lt. Shalan Allawi.

As police imposed a curfew in the city, Mohammed Ayash, a doctor at Tikrit General Hospital, said four policemen and two civilians were killed by the bombs, and 33 people were wounded, most of them policemen. Tikrit is 80 miles north of Baghdad.

South of the capital, three insurgents were killed Sunday as the roadside bomb they were trying to plant in the town of Mahawil exploded, said police in nearby Hillah.

In the Baghdad area, insurgents attacked several U.S. military convoys Sunday. In one attack, a roadside bomb hit a convoy in the east, killing one American soldier and wounding two, the U.S. military said. Iraqi police said two Iraqi civilians also were wounded in the attack.

Also, the military announced another casualty from a day earlier – an American sailor who died Saturday when the Marine convoy he was traveling with was hit by a roadside bomb in Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad. Sailors sometimes participate in such operations in support roles such as medics.

At least 1,567 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

The military said a bomb also exploded near a U.S. patrol in western Baghdad on Sunday, but no one was hurt.

Ahmad Chalabi, head of an Iraqi exile group that provided intelligence to the United States on Saddam's weapons programs, told CNN Sunday that part of the problem was the continuing stalemate among Iraqi politicians on naming a government.

Iraqi leaders are struggling to form a Cabinet that will include members of the Sunni minority.

Miniature car racing attracts crowd

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The nice weather brought remote-control car races to the parking lot of Tad's Tropical Sno.

Manuel Beza and Les, Gene, and Brian Prather race the cars as a hobby and have fun doing it. They try to find a spot and race on almost every weekend.

Beza said he started racing two years ago and initially began the hobby because he thought it was interesting and wanted to get into it.

"It's great to be able to just get together and race," he said. "We don't have any sponsors or anything; it is all our own money and time."

The race track is made out of PVC pipe, and there can be from 10 to 12 cars on a typical Sunday.

The gas-powered cars can cost up to $3,000-$4,000 and can drive up to 35 mph. The battery powered cars cost between $400-$500, including tools and upgrades, and can drive up to 22 mph.

Beza said that the races draw crowds, and it is great to see how excited they get and how much they love it.

Les Prather, truck driver for Advanced Auto Parts, said he prefers battery-powered cars because they require less maintenance.

"My dad races the cars professionally in California, and we got into it from there," he said. "As long as you take care of your car and don't run it into too many damaging things, it will run for years and years. It is great to be home on the weekends and be able to do this. It is a nice hobby."

Prather runs the cars with his brother, Gene, and his son, Brian.

Ordering cars, parts and tools can be done at hobby shops or on the Internet.

Morgan Stuewe, junior in business management at Wichita State University, said it was fun to watch.

"I live in Alma and was visiting a friend in Manhattan and decided to go to the snow cone place," she said. "We just stayed to hang out and watch the show."

Prather said Tad's Tropical Sno doesn't mind the cars being there.

"We will more than likely be out here next weekend racing again, and hopefully even more people will show up," he said.

Beza shows Evan, 2, and Garrett Schnoor, 4, how to steer a remote control car Sunday afternoon. Both gas-powered cars and battery-powered cars were used by racers.

U.S. prisons swell by nearly 900 inmates per week in 2004

By Siobhan McDonough
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Growing at a rate of about 900 inmates each week between mid-2003 and mid-2004, the nation's prisons and jails held 2.1 million people, or one in every 138 U.S. residents, the government reported Sunday.

By last June 30, there were 48,000 more inmates, or 2.3 percent, more than the year before, according to the latest figures from the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

The total inmate population has hovered around 2 million for the past few years, reaching 2.1 million on June 30, 2002, and just below that mark a year later.

While the crime rate has fallen over the past decade, the number of people in prison and jail is outpacing the number of inmates released, said the report's co-author, Paige Harrison. For example, the number of admissions to federal prisons in 2004 exceeded releases by more than 8,000, the study found.

Harrison said the increase can be attributed largely to get-tough policies enacted in the 1980s and 1990s. Among them are mandatory drug sentences, "three-strikes-and-you're-out" laws for repeat offenders, and "truth-in-sentencing" laws that restrict early releases.

"As a whole, most of these policies remain in place," she said. "These policies were a reaction to the rise in crime in the '80s and early '90s."

Added Malcolm Young, executive director of the Sentencing Project, which promotes alternatives to prison: "We're working under the burden of laws and practices that have developed over 30 years that have focused on punishment and prison as our primary response to crime."

He said many of those incarcerated are not serious or violent offenders, but are low-level drug offenders. Young said one way to help lower the number is to introduce drug treatment programs that offer effective ways of changing behavior and to provide appropriate assistance for the mentally ill.

According to the Justice Policy Institute, which advocates a more lenient system of punishment, the United States has a higher rate of incarceration than any other country, followed by Britain, China, France, Japan and Nigeria.

There were 726 inmates for every 100,000 U.S. residents by June 30, 2004, compared with 716 a year earlier, according to the report by the Justice Department agency. In 2004, one in every 138 U.S. residents was in prison or jail; the previous year it was one in every 140.

In 2004, 61 percent of prison and jail inmates were of racial or ethnic minorities, the government said.

An estimated 12.6 percent of all black men in their late 20s were in jails or prisons, as were 3.6 percent of Hispanic men and 1.7 percent of white men in that age group, the report said.

Other findings include:

State prisons held about 2,500 youths under 18 in 2004. That compares with a peak, in 1995, of about 5,300. Local jails held about 7,000 youths, down from 7,800 in 1995.

In the year ending last June 30, 13 states reported an increase of at least 5 percent in the federal system, led by Minnesota, at about 13 percent, Montana at 10.5 percent and Arkansas at 9 percent.

Among the 12 states that reported a decline in the inmate population were Alabama, 7 percent; Connecticut, 2.5 percent; and Ohio, 2 percent.

Oil prices cause tension

By Salah Nasrawi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sky-high oil prices and the prickly issues of terrorism and bringing democracy to the Middle East could provide some tense moments between old friends when Saudi Crown Prince Abdullah visits President Bush at his Texas ranch Monday.

The two men were also expected to discuss Israel's pullout from the Gaza Strip, Syria's role in Lebanon and a U.S.-Saudi economic agreement that would speed the kingdom's entry into the World Trade Organization.

Bush has promised to press Abdullah during Monday's meeting to do more to help ease global oil prices, which have soared well beyond $50 a barrel. But he has acknowledged there may be little the Saudis can do to quickly bring down prices.

There were hints the two oil men also may address a complaint by Bush's critics that his energy bill does little to promote alternative energy approaches.

An article in Tuesday's English-language Arab News, a prominent Saudi newspaper, urged Bush and Abdullah to "take a joint and noble stand" by launching a major study into current and alternative world energy resources.

Saudi Oil Minister Ali Naimi promised last week to increase production capacity from the current limit of 11 million barrels a day to 12.5 million barrels by 2009 and possibly 15 million barrels after that.

The kingdom now pumps about 9.5 million barrels daily.

Hassan Yassin, former head of the Saudi Information Office in Washington, wrote in the Arab News article that Bush and Abdullah should launch a major study into the availability of world energy resources because if current growth persists in China and India, additional production will not be enough to meet global energy needs.

"Such a study would require worldwide cooperation, it must be thorough and transparent, and it must make recommendations for current energy sources as well as for alternative and cleaner energy sources," Yassin wrote.

Yassin suggested Bush should not press too hard on another key American concern: bringing democracy to the Arab world.

Entrenched Arab regimes say it cannot be imposed from outside.

"Western rhetoric and outspokenness should give way a little more to local forces and more discrete but effective discussions," he wrote.

Saudi authorities say political reforms are being made, but long-standing rights concerns and restrictions on democracy advocates – including trials of three liberal intellectuals – are sure to come up in the meeting.

Saudi Arabia completed its first nationwide election last week, but only men could vote and half the council seats are appointed.

Qenan al-Ghamdi, a prominent Saudi political analyst, also urged the United States not to push too hard on how it wants Riyadh to combat Islamic extremism.

Frist defends anti-filibuster effort for federal judge nominations

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Majority Leader Bill Frist said Sunday it was not "radical" to ask senators to vote on judicial nominees as he hardened his effort to strip Democrats of their power to stall President Bush's picks for the federal court.

Frist, speaking at an event organized by Christian groups trying to rally churchgoers to support an end to judicial filibusters, also said judges deserve "respect, not retaliation," no matter how they rule.

A potential candidate for the White House in 2008, the Tennessee Republican made no overt mention of religion in the brief address, according to a text of his videotaped remarks released before the event in Louisville, Ky.

Instead, Frist seemed intent on steering clear of the views expressed by House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, R-Texas, and other conservatives in and out of Congress who have urged investigations and even possible impeachment of judges they describe as activists.

"Our judiciary must be independent, impartial and fair," Frist said.

"When we think judicial decisions are outside mainstream American values, we will say so. But we must also be clear that the balance of power among all three branches requires respect – not retaliation. I won't go along with that," Frist said.

For months, Frist has threatened to take action that would shut down the Democrats' practice of subjecting a small number of judicial appointees to filibusters. Barring a last-minute compromise, a showdown is expected this spring or summer.

"I don't think it's radical to ask senators to vote.

"I don't think it's radical to expect senators to fulfill their constitutional responsibilities," Frist said.

Hybrid vehicle sales nearly double

By Dee-Ann Durbin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hybrid vehicle sales nearly doubled in the United States last year as gas prices soared and a wider variety of models attracted consumers.

New hybrid vehicle registrations totaled 83,153 in 2004, an 81-percent increase over the year before, according to data released Monday by R.L. Polk & Co., which collects and interprets automotive data.

Still, hybrids represented less than 1 percent of the 17 million new vehicles sold in 2004. But the U.S. hybrid market has grown by 960 percent since 2000, when 7,781 were sold, according to the Polk data, and major automakers are planning to introduce about a dozen new hybrids during the next three years.

Lonnie Miller, director of analytical solutions for Southfield-based Polk, said federal and state tax credits for fuel-efficient vehicles have helped spur hybrid sales. More people also are buying into the idea that driving a hybrid is socially responsible, he said.

"What's different about this than other types of vehicles is that hybrids are about what people want to give back and what they want to feel they're doing with their vehicles," Miller said.

Legislators expect short wrap-up session

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Abortion opponents expect to try overriding Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' veto of a clinic regulation bill, and gambling promoters could make yet another run at casino legislation.

But there's little else of note for legislators to consider when they resume their session Wednesday, on its 79th day.

They've already tackled many significant issues, and the biggest one, education funding, is out of the mix because the Kansas Supreme Court doesn't plan to issue its next ruling on school finance issues until at least mid-May.

Republican leaders who set the Legislature's agenda expect the wrap-up to last four days at most, perhaps only three.

"It just depends on how fast the paperwork moves," said House Speaker Doug Mays, R-Topeka. "There's very little to do."

Leaders from both parties said they see no sense in further debates on education funding without a Supreme Court ruling.

The justices scheduled arguments for May 11 on a plan Republicans pushed through the Legislature to increase annual spending on schools by $127 million.

It relies on existing revenues and taps the state's cash reserves, something Democrats contend will create future problems.

That's an issue, and the court also must decide whether legislators met a mandate from justices in January to distribute state aid to schools fairly and provide enough money for a continual improvement in education.

House Minority Leader Dennis McKinney, D-Greensburg, said that without a court ruling before the wrap-up, "It's pretty well narrowed down to the budget and a few other items."

Legislators must finish work on an $11.3 billion budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, but the bulk of the spending plan already has been signed into law by Sebelius.

There's only one last spending bill to consider, and GOP leaders don't expect too much controversy.

However, a debate over abortion is likely.

Sebelius, who supports abortion rights, vetoed a bill that would have imposed new regulations on abortion clinics.

Palestinians request movement in Gaza Strip

By Ibrahim Barzak
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Palestinian negotiators said Sunday they want Israel to allow movement in and out of the Gaza Strip after its withdrawal from the territory this summer and suggested international monitors could control borders to allay Israel's security concerns.

Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas, meanwhile, said that before he travels to the United States in May, he might meet with Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

The Bush administration has urged Israelis and Palestinians to do more to coordinate the Gaza pullout, initially envisioned by Israel as a unilateral move.

Abbas went from the West Bank to Gaza on Sunday, a day after appointing three new security chiefs, another step in his internal reform program.

The new chiefs are veterans, but with the appointments, Abbas has streamlined the unwieldy security apparatus, cutting down the number of branches to three.

Israel's plan of "unilateral disengagement" from Gaza and four West Bank settlements says border arrangements will remain in place.

Israel fears free movement would enable militants to smuggle weapons into Gaza and launch attacks on Israel from Gaza.

Israel currently controls all crossings in and out of Gaza – the Rafah terminal linking Gaza and Egypt, as well as the Karni, Kissufim and Erez crossings into Israel.

During more than four years of fighting, Israel has imposed stringent travel restrictions on Gazans, who can only leave the strip with special permits.

Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Mark Regev said the sides should focus on coordinating the pullout.

"Bringing up different issues now, changing the focus, is not necessarily going to be productive," he said.

The Palestinians fear that after Israel evacuates 21 Jewish settlements in Gaza and withdraws its troops, it will isolate the 140-square-mile strip with 1.3 million Palestinian residents.

Gaza is surrounded by a heavily fortified fence.

Palestinian negotiators said Sunday that Israel must allow free movement in and out of Gaza, relinquish control of the Rafah crossing and establish a "safe passage" between Gaza and the West Bank.

The demands were also contained in a four-page paper on Palestinian preparations for the pullout, presented to senior U.S. envoys several days ago and obtained by The Associated Press.

In the document, the Palestinian Authority writes it seeks "full ... sovereignty over the land borders, regional waters and air space of these areas, including securing an international presence."

Mohammed Dahlan, the Palestinian Cabinet minister in charge of coordinating the withdrawal with Israel, told reporters that "there will be no separation between the West Bank and Gaza, and we will not allow the Gaza Strip to be turned into a prison."

TENNIS | Doubles shut out over weekend, to play Texas on Thursday

who set the all-time singles win record at K-State.

Rosenberg said her play was sub-par in the two matches.

"(Petra Dizdar) was really good, but I didn't do anything," she said.

If there was a positive, it was the doubles play against Texas. Rosenberg and freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia kept their doubles match against Texas' Kendra Strohm and Katie Ruckert close before finally succumbing to 8-5. Judith Diaz and Fernanda Da Valle led early with 7-4 before collapsing and surrendering their match 9-7.

Rosenberg said she was pleased with her play.

"It was good," Rosenberg said of the doubles match.

"I think we had a chance; it was a good fight."

Diaz said her and Da Valle's surrender of their early lead was a product of a lack of focus.

"They kept fighting," she said. "I guess we lost focus a little bit, and we didn't close some balls that we needed to close."

K-State will return to the court Thursday in Austin, Texas, at the Big 12 Tournament.

Saturday's game.

Senior Eric Rollins (2-2) got the win by throwing 1.2 shutout innings in relief of Mitch Walter.

Friday night's game against the Aggies gave the Wildcats a 5-3 win in the first game of the series.

K-State scored four runs in the the first off Aggie pitcher Jason Meyer. Senior Terry Blunt led off the inning with a double to left, and scored off a single to right by junior Brandon Farr.

Roundy then reached first off a throwing error on his sacrifice bunt, allowing Farr to score. Junior Barrett Rice then doubled in Goedert, and junior Eric Eymann singled in Rice, giving the Wildcats a 4-0 lead.

The Aggies cut the lead to 4-1 in the fifth, but the Wildcats answered with a run in the fifth.

The Aggies scored two more in the sixth on a double and a sacrifice fly to cut the margin to 5-3, but they would get no closer.

Junior Chase Mitchell (4-5) got the win for the Wildcats, giving up three runs on eight hits, striking out five and walking two in 5.1 innings.

Peterson threw 1.1 innings for the first of his two saves.

on track," Kapsalis said.

Despite his victory at the relays, Kapsalis said he has more work to do to meet his expectations.

"I am probably coming close to my expectations but not exceeding them," he said. "I think I can do something more."

K-State's other winners included redshirt freshman Laci Heller (hammer throw), junior Christina Lara (1,500-meter run), freshman Ben Delay (3,000-meter steeplechase) and junior T.J. Staab (shot put).

Two Wildcats placed second in invitational events on Saturday – juniors Kyle Lancaster (high jump) and Christian Smith (mile).

Smith finished his race with a time of 4 minutes, 7.7 seconds, despite not feeling well.

"I did not feel good at all during the race," Smith said. "Overall, I was pretty disappointed. I thought I would run a lot faster. It was not my best day, and I should have done better."

After his race, Smith knelt down on the infield and was hunched over for a half hour.

"After a lot of my races, I have trouble getting around afterward, especially when I do not run as well," he said.

"My head hurt and I just did not want to get back up."

While the Wildcats were a favorite by many in the crowd, most came to watch Maurice Greene, Marion Jones and more than 30 other Olympians compete amid top high school and collegiate athletes.

Greene, the former 100-meter dash world record holder and product of Schlagle High School in Kansas City, Kan., finished third in the men's Invitational 100-meter dash (10.17 seconds) and anchored the winning 4x100-meter relay.

Jones, who won three gold medals at the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia, made her KU Relays debut and aided her team to victory in the 4x200-meter relay.

"This is awesome," Jones said of her experience. "I am kicking myself in the behind for not having come (to the meet) before."

K-State will next send its team to two of the most competitive meets in the nation – the Drake Relays and the Penn Relays, April 29-30.

COLUMN | Sproles will play well

Even though fans, no doubt, would like to see Sproles get a ton of playing time right away, maybe that wouldn't the best thing for him long term.

In San Diego, Sproles will be looked upon to be a special teams presence and a third-down back spelling relief for one of the top running backs in the game, LaDainian Tomlinson.

This should be great for Sproles, as he will be able to learn from one of the best and not have the weight of the world on his shoulders.

The team won't rely on his every move for success, but as a situational back and return-man, Sproles could very well make the Chargers a better football team.

That's saying something for a team that won the AFC West last season with a 12-4 record.

Will he be a superstar? Doubtful.

But it's definitely possible that we'll see Sproles making key plays for a team competing for a trip to the Super Bowl.

the $6.5 million project, and $2 million is pledged to be raised privately by the administration. Bosco said he will work to get $1 million donated, and Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career development, pledged to raise the other $1 million.

Bosco said Gordon pledged because student groups needed more space.

"That was in direct response to an overwhelming student concern for more space, and she responded by matching the $1 million I pledged," he said.

Bill Muir, faculty representative for Student Senate, said construction projects have to have a student referendum, but they can go toward anything.

"You could always have any kind of student fees for a capital improvement, but it would take a referendum," Muir said.

Senate could decide where this money is going without a referendum, if it were not for the construction, he said.

Such things as a parking garage or classroom improvement have other funding means, Muir said.

"That's by the users. Those people who pay for parking permits pay the garage," he said. "Classroom space is something that private funds or state funds generally go toward."

Ratzloff said no other student-fee bonds are close to retirement. There are the Peters Recreation Complex and K-State Student Union expansion bonds, and they could at sometime be able to be paid off early.

"I monitor to see how close we are to paying it off," he said. "I talk with the students quite frequently to see what the options are."

That $4.8-million project was developed by former student body president Jake Worcester and included the same four anchors that currently exist: Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, Student Government and Union Programming Council.

That plan was 16,525 square feet and three stories high. It included 120 cubicles for organizations to use.

Vicki Conner, Center for Student Activities Committee co-chair, said she supported it then for its possibilities.

Zac Cook, graduate student in civil engineering, said he voted against it because of what it lacked. He was the student body president in 2002-03.

Bosco said the current proposal is better than the one in 2000.

"All the stars are all lined up and several years ago that wasn't the case," he said. "We didn't have the opportunity to raise private money at the time. Now, with increased enrollment we can creatively get a much bigger bang for our buck."

This proposal is $6.5 million, and 21,000 square feet.

Conner said the committee didn't look at the last proposal when coming up with this one.

"We haven't based our proposal for the Center for Student Activities off anything in past years," she said. "We wanted to make sure that the center was right for the students now."

Cook said he's still uncertain of this proposal, because it doesn't offer options besides a CSA.

"My whole thing still is the process. It may have come out of the efficient use of student funds, but there wasn't anything else looked at," he said.

Cook said students should make sure they want $10.27 each semester to go toward a CSA and not about the fact there won't be a fee increase.

"Does the average student think they can get $80 worth of service out of this structure while they're here?" he said.

Conner said CSA will be beneficial to all students.

"I just think that the possibilities of this center are endless," she said.

projects for the students to work on, but the main project was accomplished.

"Our main project was to construct fish attractors," Phelps said. "We got that done in the morning shift because we ran out of cement."

The fish attractors consist of buckets that are filled up with cement. The volunteers then proceeded to stick four yard-long sticks of wood in the cement. These 875 buckets will dry and then be dropped in designated parts of the lake. Fish will come and swim around the wooden sticks, making it easier for children to catch the fish.

"The wood we use is cottonwood or oak, because it lasts about 20 years," Phelps said. "We do this mostly for the kids; it's great to watch when kids catch their first fish."

Volunteers also cut down small trees and weeds to clear the view for fisherman.

They picked up trash, planted trees, cleaned up the marina and helped create paths.

"It was an excellent experience," said Nick Eilert, sophomore in pre-nursing and volunteer at the Saturday of Service. "It was just really cool to see all the volunteers out there working."

Collins said that CSP is trying to push these types of events to benefit K-State.

"We are trying to make sure these projects are yearly," she said. "We want these programs to be sustainable at K-State, because it's important to the campus."

Phelps said he was impressed with the willingness and effort all of the volunteers demonstrated.

"We have boy scouts camping out here this weekend that are here to help us," he said.

Eilert said he would recommend volunteering to everyone.

"It takes the attention off of you in this self-centered society we live in," he said.

KSU Foundation accused of discrimination

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A former employee of the KSU Foundation has accused the agency of race and sex discrimination, according to documents obtained by the Collegian.

Grace Hwang, former director of the development for international programs at the Foundation, filed a complaint on Jan. 31 with the Kansas Human Rights Commission and U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The KSU Foundation is a local agency of K-State with more than $300 million in assets. The last payroll included 81 employees, said Alice Roepke, director of the agency's human resources. Roepke declined to give demographic information. The information was also not listed in the Foundation's 2004 Annual Report.

Hwang
FORMER DIRECTOR OF THE DEVELOPMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

Gary Hellebust, Foundation president and CEO, refused to comment about Hwang's complaint.

Hwang, an Asian-American female from Taipei, Taiwan, accuses the Foundation of the following violations of the Kansas Act Against Discrimination during the time period of Dec. 30, 2000, to Nov. 30, 2004:

– On March 18, 2004, Hwang claims she was informed she would no longer raise funds for the International Programs accounts. This responsibility was later allegedly assigned to a Caucasian male with less experience.

– On three occasions from March 30, 2004, to Sept. 10, 2004, Hwang alleges she was instructed to pay travel expenses and take vacation time for work-related conferences and to host an embassy reception. However, Caucasian employees were allegedly not required to do the same.

– During an annual review on June 16, 2004, Hwang claims she was subject to a verbal reprimand regarding allegations that included running

Meeting space isn't difficult to find for student organizations on campus, some student leaders said.

Some would appreciate the added space and features of the Center for Student Activities, but others don't think it is necessary.

William Chang, former president for the Taiwanese Student Association, said TSA meets at a member's home or somewhere in Aggieville where the atmosphere is more relaxed than at the K-State Student Union.

"It's easier to just meet at home and everyone can just relax and sit there and talk," Chang, junior in life science, said.

The storage space and 24-hour access features of the Center for Student Activities would benefit TSA, he said. Chang said members store TSA materials in their

More than 230 customers got their wish for free ice cream cake Monday night as they helped raise funds to grant the wishes of sick children.

Monday night was Cold Stone Creamery's fourth annual ice cream social to raise money for the Make-A-Wish Foundation. The event took place across the nation from 5 to 8 p.m.

The $227.28 raised in Manhattan will go directly to Kansas' Make-A-Wish Foundation.

The foundation, started in 1980, grants the wishes of children ages 2 1/2 to 18 years who have terminal illnesses.

Each year, the national Make-A-Wish child designs the cake. This year's ice cream cake was designed by 11-year-old Micah from Somerset, Mass.

Marvin Self, co-owner of Cold Stone Creamery in Aggieville, said preparations for the event consisted of making two cakes a day during the past week.

Cold Stone has been taking $1 donations all month for the foundation, as well as contributing 25 cents on the dollar for each case of ice cream mix bought in April.

"We're hoping to raise an excess of $1,000 for the foundation," Self said.

Chi Omega sorority members collected the donations at the door. Make-A-Wish Foundation is the sorority's national philanthropy project.

Renae Johnston, sophomore in open option and member of Chi Omega, was pleased with how the event went.

"It's awesome how people were willing to give $10 for one piece of cake," she said.

Cold Stone's management appreciated the sorority's help.

"Chi Omega's help made the evening go smoothly," said Kara Kibbe, Cold Stone manager.

Laura Grauer, freshman in biochemistry and pre-pharmacy, donated $5 to the foundation.

"The organization is great because kids can get their wishes," Grauer said.

Kibbe contributed to the event by making eight of the 10 cakes for the event.

Kibbe said she enjoyed being a part of the event.

"It has been interesting to watch how individuals donate their money knowing that it's going to a good cause," she said.

CSA plans to renovate 3rd floor of Union

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Designs are just preliminary for the Center for Student Activities, but the ideas are thought out.

CSA Committee members worked with Ken Ebert, president of the Ken Ebert Design Group, Architects, to come up with what they wanted.

If today's referendum passes, CSA will be 21,000 square feet. That includes the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor and the Union Programming Council on the third floor, which will be renovated.

Ebert said about 14,000 square feet is going to be new addition, which will be added onto the east side of the K-State Student Union.

The addition would probably end at the sidewalk, but it would not go into Mid Campus Drive, he said.

Construction may go out into the road, though, Ebert said.

"Those kind of issues are not definitely furnished out until well into the design process," he said.

Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, Student Government and Union Program Council are the four anchors for CSA.

Vicki Conner, co-chair of the CSA Committee, said it is uncertain where each anchor will be housed in CSA, but each will have its own office.

CSA will feature movable walls

Referendum watch party to take place in Aggieville; 91.9 to announce results

By Joanna Rubick

The fate of the Center for Student Activities will be determined today.

Students can vote from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at www.sgaelections.ksu.edu with their eIDs.

Vicki Conner, co-chair of the CSA Committee, said there will be a watch party at 6 p.m. at Pat's Blue Rib'N Barbeque and everyone is invited.

"We'd love for a large crowd to join us," Conner said.

If you go

KSDB-FM 91.9 will announce results of the referendum.

To pass, the referendum needs 60 percent approval.

"I think it will be a pretty quick turnaround, so it shouldn't be long after 6 p.m.," Conner said.

CSA Referendum

Arguments to vote yes
- The center will provide a home for all student organizations.
- It will foster an atmosphere of collaboration between student organizations.
- It will improve programming of events.
- Groups will experience better recruitment and retention.
- Student fees will not increase.

Arguments to vote no
- It does not provide options besides a center.
- K-State has greater needs than a CSA.
- It will be an increase in fees after 2015.
- Students voted against it by more than 80 percent in 2000 with a $6.50 per semester increase.
- The wording is confusing and deters voters.

Chris Swick, news director for 91.9, said 91.1 won't have a half-hour show like it does for the SGA general elections, but they will announce the results.

Lecture explores Kanza history

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Betty Durkee, project director for Allegawaho Memorial Heritage Park, gives a speech Monday evening on Lewis and Clark at the Manhattan Public Library. The speech was the third in a series presented by the Manhattan Public Library and Riley County Historical Society.

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They just missed Lewis and Clark because they were out on a hunting and gathering expedition.

Betty Durkee, Historic Preservation Director for the Kaw Nation in Kaw City, Okla., told the story of the Kanza, or Kaw, people on Monday evening.

She has worked closely with tribes in North Central Oklahoma, but is not a tribe member.

The speech, which was a part of the 150 lecture series of the history of Manhattan, was called "The Kanza, the tribe Lewis and Clark almost met."

Durkee began the presentation with the traditional woman's way to say hello in the Kanza language. The word "Aca" is where Kanza and Kaw come from.

She then followed with background information on where the Kanza came from, their semi-nomadic lifestyle and how they "almost met" Lewis and Clark.

"The women were the farmers in the family," she said. "The men took pride in being able to take on other tribes. They were warriors."

There were about 3,000 tribe members at the time of Lewis and Clark's exploration who never met the pair because members were out following game.

She said Lewis and Clark gave wonderful reports of what the land was like, which made the land more attractive.

The first treaty, in which was the government told the tribe that it wasn't large so it didn't need much land, was enacted in 1825.

Two other treaties followed and, by the third, the land was decreased to 80,000 acres.

"The government wanted to create individual ownership instead of community ownership," Durkee said.

"If you can't move around, you can't hunt freely and you can't live off the land, you won't have as healthy a life. The morale and health began to decline and they became more susceptible to disease, by 1872 they were in sad shape."

She said the Kanza were eventually moved to Oklahoma. The Allotment Act followed in 1901-1902 with a clause that stated that tribal members were wards of the government and were considered incompetent to manage land.

However, if they became competent, then they had to withdraw from tribal roles.

"The idea was to destroy tribal identity," she said.

Durkee said that today the Kanza people are working to restore their culture. The language was lost since there are no living elders who speak the language today.

However, there are 55 tapes of one of the last elders speaking the language and a dictionary is being compiled.

She invited the public to go to Council Grove, Kan., June 18-19 to revive the dance of the Kanza people, as well as other events.

An audience member asked what should have been done to handle land sales and relocation.

"(The U.S. government) should have not been as greedy and not broken every promise," Durkee said.

Soldiers partake in Army Relief fund

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Soldiers at Fort Riley are working to help their peers through financial difficulties.

Fort Riley has set up its annual Army Emergency Relief fund, which will last until May 5, to help soldiers with financial difficulties.

Last year the fund raised about $89,000.

"The Army Emergency Relief fund is a non-profit organization," Kaye Moseley, financial readiness program director at Fort Riley, said.

"They are funds that soldiers donate money to so money can be used for fellow soldiers that are in tough situations."

Some soldiers at Fort Riley are on the verge of being deployed while others are returning from overseas.

Moseley said the unpredictable lives of these soldiers can lead to financial difficulties.

"Soldiers have unique problems because they are away from home," she said.

"They don't always have home support. Their unpredictable lives can often lead to unpredictable spending."

Most who supply money for the fund are active duty and retired soldiers.

"Donors should get the sense that they are helping soldiers and family members that are having emergency situations," Moseley said.

"This is a way of paying them back."

Sam Robinson, public affairs officer, said this is a way for soldiers to help other soldiers.

"This is a way for soldiers to help them out through the tough times," she said.

"It gives donors a good feeling to help someone who has had a rough time.

"Soldiers are known to be giving people. They are known to help others, usually strangers."

If soldiers would like to contribute to the Army Emergency Relief fund, they can contact their unit.

"Each unit has a campaign representative," Moseley said.

Retired soldiers or non-soldiers can mail a contribution to the DMWR in building 253 at Fort Riley, or contact Sgt. Major John Smiley at (785) 239-3643.

Center for Student Activities a waste of student fees; vote no today

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Center for Student Activities on today's referendum is wasteful, pathetic and underhanded.

And those are the best things we can say about it.

The $6.5 million project would unnecessarily centralize several campus entities in a new building. Proponents say it would provide necessary meeting space for campus organizations and free up space for groups that would pay in the Union.

It would not, however, be a good use of students' hard-earned money.

It would not provide the much-needed classroom space K-State lost when it demolished Denison Hall.

It would not improve existing structures in dire need of renovations. It would not increase faculty salaries, establish a functional transportation system or improve the quality of education at K-State.

If it passes, the referendum would succeed as a political ploy to slide an incredibly wasteful project under the radar of the general student body.

By putting the referendum to a vote at the end of the semester, at a time when students are stressed with tests and projects, instead of during the student government elections, proponents have made a thinly veiled attempt to slide the project past students.

The way the referendum has been forced upon the student body threatens students' voices about how their money will be spent.

Instead of being handed a proposal and asked to vote yes or no, students should have more choice in what long-term projects their money will fund.

Less than five years ago, a similar project failed by a huge margin, with more than 80 percent of students voting against a $6.50 fee per semester to fund a Student Activities Center.

Today's vote would not increase the amount students are paying each semester; instead, it would divert existing fees from other, potentially worthwhile projects toward a limited-use facility.

If the referendum fails today, perhaps the student body will be given options.

If the referendum passes, we suggest the movable walls inside the center be arranged to send a message to the next decade of students: Sorry.

Vote no today.

Different ways of life

Country folk like it ignorant, simple; can enjoy nature's beauty, relaxed atmosphere

JESSE MANNING

You can call us ignorant. Sometimes we are.

You can call us simple. Trust us, we like it that way.

You can bash the people, but you can never rob us of our small town pride – a pride that makes rural communities so much better than the New Yorks and the L.A.s of the world.

Small towns are steadily losing ground to the allure of cities, but they've still got a lot to offer. They're the best places on earth to grow up, live and work, raise a family and retire.

Country folks have peace of mind living in rural areas. We don't lock our doors at night and our kids play on their own in the park. Parents aren't worried 'cause everybody knows everybody else in town.

But have you ever seen those kids on leashes? That's something that came out of a city.

"I don't trust my child or the vast majority of the people who live around me, so I'm going to keep my kid on a dog leash." Poor city folk – you ain't never gonna see no country kid on a leash.

In the rare event that there is some sort of danger, small town people know how to handle it. Go ahead. Break into that farmer's house. If the guard dog don't get ya, the shotgun will.

Peace through strength, ya know. It's obvious Reagan was a cowboy.

All the arts and entertainment that you'd find in Times Square can be found in Podunksville, USA – you just have to look a little harder for it and have an open mind. What big city liberal wouldn't champion that?

If you like paying $6 for a bottle of beer (or whatever kind of girly drink you prefer), fine – check out the bar scene in San Francisco. After you've waited in line and paid the outrageous cover charge, maybe you can get a slight buzz before you run out of cash.

We small town folks know how to have a good time and save money. Nobody needs a fancy club when there are pastures everywhere. A case of beer and a campfire beats the glittery city nightlife any day. Plus, when our part-time cop comes to shut down the party, he doesn't give tickets – he gives rides home.

And therein lies the beauty of small town life – it's personable. Everybody is somebody, not just another face in the crowd. Small towns are like big families, and everyone has something to contribute and a part to play.

It's too easy for cities to chew people up and spit them out. They're too big to be friendly or inviting. You can't be an individual in a city of hundreds of thousands or millions of others.

A city with personality? Never heard of one, but each small town has a personality all its own.

Country folks like a more relaxed atmosphere as opposed to being too busy. We like slow Sunday dinners instead of fast food, and you'd better never let your cell phone go off during church.

Popped collars might get you popped in the mouth for just being an idiot. They ain't meant to be worn like that.

We can see our stars at night, and instead of nothing but skyscrapers from east to west, we can watch the sun rise and set.

And that's a beauty that can't be matched. The country's got everything the city does, except we know how to do it better.

Big city life has everything small towns don't: fashion sense, entertainment, Starbucks

SARAH RICE

I have always appreciated small towns, especially the ones that are so small I can hold my breath from the welcome sign to the end city limit.

But growing up in Manhattan, by no means the smallest town around, I always yearned for something more.

As a little girl, my friends and I would have contests to see if we could hold our breath long enough to get through Keats, Kan. – surprisingly, it's not that hard. The town, if you can call it that, has a population of... well, it's not even listed on the U.S. Census.

Last summer, I lived in Washington, D.C., and can't wait to move back.

Big cities have a seductive culture of entertainment, restaurants and intelligence and a personality all their own.

The magnificence of the U.S. Capitol and the daily hustle of important men and women in dark suits never has never lost its appeal.

Things happen in big cities that matter.

In small towns, the most important movers and shakers pass laws like removing the word "Christmas" from the title of the traditional holiday parade.

In a big city, you drink often, but socially. Six bucks for a beer isn't bad when you are only having a couple. You can drink a few imported beers or vodka tonics to spend time with friends and don't have to worry about drinking to forget you live in the middle of nowhere, thousands of miles away from any form of civilized life.

Whether it's going out to the bars, a play or concert, there is always something to do no matter what time of night. When it's hard to get up in the morning, have no fear, a Starbucks mocha is within walking distance.

There's no need for a caffeine boost in the country – the plop of fresh cow droppings next to your head provides a suitable alarm clock.

When traveling to big cities, Midwesterners are always scared of getting mugged, so they lock their luggage, wear ridiculous looking money pouches underneath their clothing and carry Mace in a holster ready to whip out at any sign of danger.

Yet, the whole time I lived in D.C., I only saw one stabbing – an incident that ended with a chase into Urban Outfitters and a search helicopter flying over the area. Oh yeah, and that time I had to run from the Senate building in high heels because a plane was within minutes of crashing into the Capitol.

While small-town driving requires looking over one's shoulder every minute searching for any sign of a cop with a radar gun, big-city driving requires traveling at excessive speeds to avoid being smashed by a Mini-Cooper or hybrid car.

If that makes you nervous, public transportation can get you almost anywhere and always provides comedic relief as tourists jam their metro passes in the wrong slot and end up bruised as the turnstile slams into their thighs.

Perhaps the best thing about a metropolitan area is the sense of fashion and hygiene. No more yellow teeth and belt buckles the size of dinner plates. I would look at a popped collar any day over the sheer terror of walking behind someone sporting a mullet.

You can keep your mullets and pasture parties – I'll take my stabbings and Starbucks.

Sarah Rice plans to be drinking vodka tonics and mocking tourists in a big city after graduation in May. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Fewer campus groups will have access to CSA

Editor,

I'll keep it to the point: vote no on Tuesday on the issue of privilege fee reallocation. Here's why:

1. Students have said no to this proposal before, and by a wide margin. The center proposed in 2000 – which is similar to the current one – only had room for 150 groups, not the more than 400 groups that are at K-State, meaning smaller groups would have to apply to use the facility, as space would be limited. With a less space-intensive plan, even fewer groups will have access. The only groups that will benefit are SGA, UPC, Greek Affairs and the Multicultural Student Organization, who already have offices in the Union.

2. This is not our time. The committee backing the CSA uses the slogan "Leave a legacy." Bill Snyder will leave a legacy.

The students, on the other hand, should be focused on responsible spending.

With tuition having more than doubled in the last five years, most students are already under financial strain.

The previous projects funded by students occurred when tuition was manageable and there was a clear need for new facilities or improvement on old ones.

A quick look at this year's SGA allocations reveals that it asked every student group to cut budgets by 10 percent.

While I respect the opportunity for students to better the university, there are needs elsewhere on campus for funding. Students should consider these needs before paying for new office space.

3. Send a message to the university – we don't want a CSA. After turning down the proposal once, the forces behind the CSA aren't getting the message.

While the first proposal was presented neutrally for students to consider, a lot of resources have been put into promoting the CSA this time.

I, for one, don't want SGA, UPC or the administration spending my money to promote something I have already said I don't want. If the students make their opinion clear, it should be respected.

When you vote on Tuesday, don't let your money go to waste; vote no.

Keeping up with 'Joneses' not in best interest

Editor,

There is plaster falling off of the walls. There are third grade-sized desks with graffiti from the 70s. Allergy-aggravating dust from antiquated chalk boards along with a general stench permeates throughout.

All of these shortages of resources existed when I graduated last year in December.

Assuming that there have been no enormous windfalls in the last three or so semesters, it is safe to say that K-State needs to rethink its priorities in higher education.

Occasionally I read the Collegian online to see what is happening, and I see that once again, the bureaucratic monster has reared its ugly head and spat forth yet another formulation of a "Student Activities Center" which has now been given the brilliantly shuffled name "Center for Student Activities."

I served on UGB and SGA for several years and I can say with good faith that it is being pitched to you, the students, with false promises and half-truths.

Sure, it would be a nice thing to have on campus, but so would moving sidewalks and a brewery in Hale.

The CSA falls in the category with the "Visitor's Center" that was proposed for East Stadium.

The real reason is to "Keep up with the Joneses" (read: KU) in new student recruitment.

Smoke and mirrors may wow a fence-sitting high school senior, but once we get them in the door, they are greeted with water-stained ceilings and departmental cuts.

Is it worth spending $6.5 million to ensure that the president of XYZ Club can play "Office Secret Santa" with the treasurer of the ABC club?

$6.5 million on a space for campus clubs that has a main selling point of "moveable walls and furniture"?

$6.5 million on something that will be heralded as the second coming of campus activities to attract more students to an already (and admitted by administration) crowded campus?

This is your chance to stick it to the tuition hikes, to stick it to the systemic flow of good professors for greener pastures and to stick it to the crumbling plaster in Waters Hall.

This is your chance to stick it to the man.

Stand up and say no to the CSA.

Instead, take your $10.27 to Aggieville, where at least you'll get something out of it.

Center will allow large, small groups to publicize events, have permanent workspace

Editor,

I have been blessed.

I have been blessed to spend the past five years at K-State, blessed to meet the amazing people I have met here, blessed to be part of so many motivated groups and organizations.

And I feel so very grateful for the opportunity to leave K-State just a bit better than when I first arrived, to help in continuing the legacy of student-led initiatives that collectively craft our student experience. Bramlage, Hale Library, the Union, the Rec – each of these buildings is a product of students stepping up and committing to the future of K-State. The next step in this legacy is the Center for Student Activities.

The CSA will be a 21,000-square foot addition to the east side of our current Student Union. The Center will provide a home for our more than 400 student organizations and foster an atmosphere of collaboration on campus. It will allow even the smallest student organization to publicize events, learn from other groups, and have permanent, state-of-the-art workspace.

Groups of all sizes will benefit from improved support staffing and better resources. Students looking to get involved will now have a destination to obtain information, easing recruitment and retention. Programming will improve as groups work together in new ways. Visit our website at www.ksu.edu/osas/csa for further details.

The possibilities for the CSA are endless.

In these times of rising tuition, the CSA committee has been adamant about not increasing student fees, and we have devised a proposal that will not increase fees by instead reallocating the existing Hale Library bond.

Further, this is a great chance for us as students to determine where our money goes, as the fee will continue to pull from our accounts until 2015 regardless of the outcome of the referendum. It is questionable at best where that money would go if the Center were not approved.

With our "student-first" philosophy, the Center for Student Activities is right for K-State.

Vote yes tomorrow at www.sgaelections.ksu.edu. Remember, it's our turn to add to the legacy.

Vicki Conner
SENIOR IN BIOLOGY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE
CENTER FOR STUDENT ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE CHAIR

Collegian should help support referendum

Editor,

I am writing to inform you of a couple misconceptions that were printed regarding the CSA.

First, this is not a project researched by SGA.

A committee of students from organizations all over campus have been meeting since September to research this issue and what campus needs.

SGA only approved the referendum and then supported the CSA committee proposal.

Second, I would like, as a member of this committee, to speak to what CSA can do.

I think that the Collegian has emphasized the "four main groups" way too much. The center is a place for all student groups to meet. It will include conference rooms and meeting spaces for student use only.

There will be a work room so that organizations can work on projects, a locked storage room for student groups to keep supplies in.

The CSA will serve as a source of consistency – often now smaller groups get lost in the transitional changes year to year because they do not have a base to call home.

CSA is that base.

There will be a master calendar that is clearly visible for organizations to submit their events to so that there are not conflicts – or projects of similar interest happening at the same time.

On other university campuses – and the CSA committee visited them – activity centers have increased student involvement, they have fostered an arena of communication, allowed for greater attendance at, and bigger, events.

These are all possible because the environment of CSA is one that fosters communication and growth.

It is vital that we let the students know these aspects of CSA. CSA is a home to every student on this campus.

CSA is the best project to use the reallocation of student fees for.

I would hope the Collegian is willing to help move our university forward and support this project.

Coach Hill showing why he's best coach in game

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Slowly but surely, Brad Hill is showing why he is one of the best baseball coaches in the collegiate game.

K-State's skipper has the Wildcats playing their best baseball of the year, a sign of good coaching and a commitment to getting better each day.

Over the weekend, K-State (20-18, 5-12) won the series over Texas A&M, taking two of three games from the Aggies.

After last weekend's series win over Texas Tech, the Wildcats have won two straight Big 12 Conference series for the first time since the 2002 season.

The series win over the Aggies bumped the Wildcats to eighth in the Big 12 Conference standings, which is huge for K-State, as the top eight teams make it to the Big 12 Tournament.

With Big 12 series against Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska still on the schedule, the Wildcats have the potential to move as high as sixth, as Kansas and Oklahoma are both in the bottom half of the league standings.

Just two years removed from a dismal 15-37 season that saw the resignation of long-time Wildcat coach Mike Clark, the fact that K-State is playing this well is a testament to the ability of Hill to get the best out of his players.

Hill came to K-State after a nine-year stint at Central Missouri State University, where he compiled a gaudy 418-91 record that included nine trips to the NCAA Tournament and a national championship in 2003.

He came to K-State and his effect was felt immediately.

In Hill's first season in 2004, the Wildcats earned their first-ever national ranking at No. 30 while they were in the middle of an 11-game winning streak – the longest streak since 1912.

K-State started the season 19-6, but once Big 12 play hit, the Wildcats' lack of Big 12-caliber athletes became painfully clear, as they limped to a 26-30 final record, including a 4-23 record in league play.

Hill cleaned house after last season, and just seven players from the 2004 season returned this year.

He brought in a wealth of talent, many of them junior college transfers, and they have proven to be more adept of handling the rigors of the Big 12.

The result has been better play, and the Wildcats are now in a position to make some noise in the Big 12 Conference.

The hiring of Hill was one of the best moves Athletics Director Tim Weiser has made in his time at K-State, as Hill is quickly moving the baseball team in the direction of becoming a conference contender.

Hey, if Nebraska can be a national powerhouse in baseball, so can the Cats – it's not outside the realm of possibility.

Sticking with the present, the last two weeks have been great for Coach Hill and the baseball team.

Winning conference games leads to winning conference series, which leads to sweeping conference series, which leads to successful seasons.

With Hill at the helm, those successful seasons may be happening a lot sooner than expected.

Cats hope for continued momentum

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hoping to keep its momentum and play well, K-State (20-18, 6-12) will take the field against Sacramento State at Community America Ballpark in Kansas City, Kan., today.

"We can't have a drop off," Coach Brad Hill said. "That's the big thing right now, and we have to keep our confidence up."

Sacramento State (18-22) is coming off a home weekend tournament that ended with a 4-3 loss to UC-Irvine. However, the Hornets defeated No. 5 Arizona 7-4 on Saturday.

The Hornets are led offensively by Taylor Watanabe. He is hitting .339 in 23 games this season.

Over the weekend, K-State won a pivotal weekend series against Big 12 foe Texas A&M, as the Wildcats took two of three games from the Aggies and worked their way into the tournament-qualifying eighth place in the Big 12 standings.

Hill said he is worried about his players being back up and ready to-play after the weekend series.

"I'm tired," Hill said. "This kind of series makes you physically and mentally tired. Those were all really close ball games. We are going over to (Community America Ballpark), so that may give them something a little bit different to look forward to."

The Wildcats jumped up to third in the Big 12 in hitting after the weekend series. They are currently hitting .309 as a team and are led offensively by junior Brandon Farr, who is 11th in the Big 12 with a .353 batting average.

Coach looking at next year as 'a blank page' with new players

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Deb Patterson has just seen the most successful class in K-State women's basketball history graduate and leave her program.

The senior class of Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn, Brie Madden, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker won 104 games, went to four straight NCAA Tournaments and, in 2003, won the program's first Big 12 Championship, making the past four years the most successful stretch in history.

Now Patterson is faced with the task of re-establishing the foundation left behind by the five seniors. The cupboard isn't bare, so to speak, but the look and feel of next year's team will be a drastic change.

On Monday, Patterson sat down for an interview with the Collegian to discuss the future of the K-State women's basketball program and what lies in store for K-State fans.

Have you had time to reflect on the past four years and what that senior class meant?

"I think it's been an ongoing process through this final year, and I think it's been a very special time and a lot of unbelievably tremendous achievements by our program over the course of the last four years. Certainly, it's been kind of an emergence of Kansas State onto the women's basketball scene.

More specifically about Wecker and Mahoney, how excited are you about them moving on to the professional level?

"I'm thrilled for them. Both Kendra and Megan instilled in our program and coaching staff and players to realize that these young people came to Kansas State with a dream of being able to become the very best that they could be, as players and as people and as students.

"I think there's no question whatsoever that they were able to realize those dreams here. That's a very special thing. It doesn't happen for a large percentage of the people that play this game.

"I think you could say that they made the perfect choice, and it was a perfect fit for Kansas State and Kansas State was a perfect fit for them."

Looking ahead to next year, what players are you looking at to step up on this team and fill the holes those seniors left?

"I feel as we head into next season, I'm looking at the team, and the identity that it and the individuals in it take, as a blank page, to be very honest. I think it will be very much like starting with a piece of paper with no lines on it. It will be truly a new

Wildcats jump 4 spots in weekend tourney

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team continued its recent trend of gradual improvement at the Big 12 Championships over the weekend.

The Wildcats started the weekend in last place, but jumped four spots to finish eighth.

The team finished with a three-round total of 951, with sophomore Katy Heffel leading the Wildcats' charge, finishing tied for 22nd with a score of 234.

Despite her finish, Heffel said she felt there was room for improvement.

"I was disappointed with the last day," she said.

"I played better than I did during the Betsy Rawls Invitational so that's good, but I wish I would've played better."

After Saturday's second round, the Wildcats sat at No. 10, but a third round of 317 pushed K-State up two spots, edging rival University of Kansas by one stroke and passing the University of Oklahoma. Along with KU and OU, K-State also beat out Colorado and Iowa State University.

The Wildcats' leader throughout the year, sophomore Helene Robert, shot a team-high 87 during the second round. However, Robert came back to finish in a tie for 41st after scoring a team

TORONTO — The slumping Toronto Blue Jays fired hitting coach Mike Barnett on Monday and replaced him with first-base coach Mickey Brantley.

The Blue Jays are 9-11 after losing seven of eight. They were swept last weekend in Baltimore and outscored 24-7.

Barnett

Toronto is batting .270, seventh in the AL. The Blue Jays' 95 runs ranked sixth in the league.

Barnett, 46, had been the Blue Jays' hitting coach since joining the organization in January 2002. He was given a one-year contract extension last Oct. 4.

NBA | League fines Mobley for obscene gesture

NEW YORK — Sacramento guard Cuttino Mobley was fined $15,000 by the NBA on Monday for making an obscene gesture toward fans at the end of the Kings' first-round playoff game at Seattle.

Mobley

Mobley, who scored 22 points in an 87-82 loss, made the gesture after hitting a 3-pointer with 42.4 seconds to play that cut the SuperSonics' lead to 83-82.

Game 2 of the Kings-Sonics series is Tuesday night in Seattle.

CFB | Commission opposes 12-game football season

MIAMI — The Knight commission urged the NCAA to oppose the addition of a 12th regular-season game for Division I football teams until the effects of recent academic reforms for players become clear.

The NCAA Division I Management Council has backed legislation that would allow Division I-A and I-AA schools to add a 12th game starting with the 2006 season. The NCAA Board of Directors on Thursday considers the legislation, which has the support of most athletic directors.

The Knight commission last week sent a memo to the NCAA Board of Directors. The commission is a privately funded group formed in 1989 to promote reforms and greater presidential control of college sports.

GOLF | Singh wins Houston Open in playoff with Daly

HUMBLE, Texas — Vijay Singh had a bunch of pars, two timely birdies and one big break to win the Shell Houston Open.

Taking advantage of John Daly's errant playoff drive that skipped into the water, Singh overcame putting problems and a long birdie drought Sunday to win the tournament for the second straight year and third time in four years.

Singh

Daly, who birdied the final two holes for a 5-under 67 to match Singh at 13-under 275, sent his drive on the first extra hole, the par-4 18th, into the water. Then, after a drop, Daly sent his third over the green.

NFL | Former Miami QB Berlin signs with Miami

SHREVEPORT, La. — Brock Berlin, a former high school All-America quarterback at Evangel Christian Academy in Shreveport, signed a free-agent contract with the Miami Dolphins after no one selected him in the NFL draft.

Berlin

"I'm really excited about the opportunity with (Dolphins coach) Nick Saban," Berlin said. "It'll be an easy transition since I'm already down there."

Berlin spent his college career in Florida, first with the Florida Gators before transferring to Miami, where he started the past two season for the Hurricanes. He signed with the Dolphins on Sunday night.

Last season with the Hurricanes, Berlin completed 56 percent of his passes for 2,680 yards and 22 touchdowns. He was intercepted six times.

Raising awareness

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

April is the month for new beginnings. Spring is firmly in the air, flowers are blooming and birds are singing in the cold April rain. But April is also a month dedicated to the awareness of child abuse and neglect.

On April 25, the Sunflower Court Appointed Special Advocate Project hosted its annual Light of Hope ceremony to initiate a new class of CASA volunteers and to help spread awareness into the community about child abuse.

Blue Ribbon Month began in 1989 by Bonnie Finney of Norfolk, Va. She took a stand against child abuse after the death of her grandson, a victim of child abuse.

The Light of Hope presentation began with Amy Horgan emotionally reading the story of Bonnie Finney. Horgan has been employed as program coordinator for Sunflower CASA since June 2003. She shares supervision of case management in regards to CASA volunteers with advocate supervisor Jennifer Anguiano, she said.

As part of her introductory speech, Horgan brought up the statistic that there are more than one million abused and neglected children in the United States each year. With CASA volunteers,

"There are no hopeless children, only children who have yet to experience hope," she said.

Following Horgan's moving introduction, the speaker for the evening was introduced. Deb Patterson, K-State women's basketball coach, gave an energetic speech encouraging all CASA volunteers to go above and beyond the call of duty with their assigned children.

"You should do more than anyone would expect you to do," Patterson said. "Remember, there is no traffic jam in the extra mile."

Patterson became involved in CASA about two years ago, when she met a speaker promoting the importance of CASA. She then became interested in bringing attention to the immense need for people, especially students, to act as court advocates for abused children who would otherwise not have a voice, she said.

"The people here are truly making a difference," Patterson said. "We must let people know that abuse is a problem, but that they can make a difference."

Mary Budenbender, intern at CASA through the College of Human Ecology, explained further the role of volunteers involved in CASA. As a volunteer, people will be the eyes for the judge and the voice for a particular child in court, she said.

"The volunteers go out and have fun with the child for about one to two hours per week," Budenbender said. "If the child wants to talk about their situation, the volunteers are there for them, but they do not force the children to talk about their home life if they don't want to."

Travis Swanson, junior in political science and CASA volunteer, has just completed his CASA training. He got involved through a fraternity brother who told him that CASA was in need of more male volunteers. Swanson met with a group of 18 other volunteer trainees every Monday since early February.

Swanson will begin volunteering this summer when he will be assigned one or two children deemed in need of care, Swanson said.

"It is most definitely a worthy cause," Swanson said. "I will enjoy using my abilities to help younger people find some stability in their lives."

During the conclusion of the Light of Hope ceremony, 160 candles were lit in honor of the number of children helped by CASA during the past year. Even with such a large number of children helped, volunteers are still needed, Jayme Morris-Hardeman, executive director for Sunflower CASA, said.

"We have about 100 volunteers with the program of which about 65 percent are college students who do an outstanding job," Morris-Hardeman said.

Sunflower CASA is most in need of male volunteers. Only about eight volunteers are male, she said.

The next CASA training session will begin on June 2 and meet on Monday and Thursday nights from 6-9 p.m. Training will last until June 30. No location has been selected yet. Another class will begin in September for those returning to school in the fall.

'The Interpreter' doesn't live up to potential

By Graham Flanagan
THE CRIMSON WHITE (U. ALABAMA)

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. – Boy, "The Interpreter" sure looked great on paper. The first film from Oscar-winning director and "co-star" Sydney Pollack ("The Firm," "Out of Africa") since 1999's box office dud "Random Hearts" matches recent Oscar winners Sean Penn and Nicole Kidman in a political thriller about an assassination plot that a United Nations interpreter (Kidman) might or might not have overheard while making a late-night visit to her listening booth. Penn plays the skeptical Secret Service agent assigned to investigate the case.

In addition to this potentially intriguing storyline, the movie serves as the first time the United Nations has actually allowed a movie crew to film in its tightly guarded facilities.

For this task, Pollack contracted cinematographer Darius Khondji ("Se7en"), whose work here, though not nearly as complex or even as interesting as his previous efforts, should be praised for its naturalistic approach to recording the U.N. facilities on film.

For the scenes in the outer lobbies and corridors of the compound, Khondji predominantly utilizes whatever available light he can find to give the scenes a realistic, you're-actually-at-the-United-Nations type of feeling that adds an air of authenticity to the proceedings.

Sadly, Khondji's ability to create powerful and memorable images isn't supplemented with a script that effectively tells two equally compelling stories: the twisting, turning political assassination plot and the "relationship" that forms between the two leads.

It seems as though Pollack's sabbatical from the directing game somewhat damaged his abilities for pacing and suspense – perhaps the best example of which is "The Firm," a similarly lengthy thriller that nevertheless commands your attention for its entirety.

Here, I'm afraid the director decided to get things started too quickly. Within the first 20 minutes of the movie we've already plunged into the plot, and the two hours that follow slowly and, in some cases, sloppily put the pieces of the puzzle together.

Unfortunately, the numerous rewrites just couldn't breathe any life into the aforementioned "relationship" subplot that contrasts the central story.

Much of the problem with the movie can be attributed to the Penn character who, even though the writers attempt to add dimension with a tragic back story, doesn't amount to much more than "a guy in a suit that says things and occasionally points a gun."

Frankly, Penn deserves better material and should have demanded it. Also lacking oomph in the character department is director Pollack, who appears as the head of the Secret Service in an inconsequential handful of scenes serving as little more than cameos that lend absolutely nothing to the progression of the story.

The fact that "The Interpreter" suffers from myriad shortcomings when so many talented people are on board truly surprises me; but talent or no talent, there are just some things that need to be ironed out before going ahead with the production of an $80 million political thriller.

They could've made a classic. Oh, well.

Comedian George Lopez has kidney transplant

Comedian George Lopez was recovering on Monday from a successful kidney transplant surgery using an organ donated by his wife, his publicist said.

Lopez, who stàrs in the ABC sitcom "George Lopez," needed the transplant because of a genetic condition that caused his kidneys to deteriorate, publicist Ann Gurrola said. She said the surgery was not urgent for Lopez, who turned 44 on Saturday.

"It came to a point where his kidneys weren't operating at the full capacity that they needed to," Gurrola said, adding that both Lopez and his wife, Ann, were doing well after the operations.

Elton John's publicist says singer to wed

Pop singer Elton John will marry his longtime partner David Furnish later this year or early next year, his publicist said Monday.

Britain's tabloid newspaper The Mirror reported Monday that John, 58, would marry his Canadian partner Furnish, 42, before Christmas.

Laws recognizing homosexual civil partnerships come into effect in Britain in December.

John's spokesman Gary Furrow told British Broadcasting Corp. the nuptials may be postponed until 2006.

"A date and a venue has not been set, so it may not be until next year," Furrow told the BBC.

John was reported in The Mirror as saying the wedding could be held in Windsor, west of London, where Prince Charles and the Duchess of Cornwall were married earlier this month.

High school student to compete in international fair

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Jordan Bishop, a Manhattan High School senior, stands next to his project that detects cosmic rays. Bishop will show his project next month at the International Science and Engineering fair.

Project features cosmic ray detector

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan High School senior will be displaying his cosmic ray detector in the International Science and Engineering fair next month.

Jordan Bishop won the grand prize at the Wamego Regional Science Fair and qualified for the international fair.

"I started my junior year of high school and brushed up on particle physics," he said.

"I really wanted to do it for scholarships and I have always been extremely interested in mathematics."

The initial idea for the project came from his high school science teacher, Fred Nelson, who had some grant money.

Nelson said they found the plans for the detector that were from another person and they took those and adapted it to make it their own.

He said a cosmic ray detector is set up to count the cosmic rays that are coming in.

He said the project found that more rays are coming from straight over head than from an angle.

Bishop said that he has received around 13 awards for the project and is looking forward to getting into the bigger fairs and competing.

He said he has already received a $1,000 scholarship from the Department of Engineering at K-State.

"Jordan did most of it all by himself," Nelson said.

"He researched it, assembled it and tested it. It was a totally independent project.

A lot of the times you see students doing the research for parents or professors, this wasn't the case here. This was a self-directed study."

Nelson said he is proud of Bishop and that it is uplifting to see students succeed.

Bishop will be competing in the Kansas Junior Academy of Science Fair on May 5 and the International Science and Engineering Fair, which includes about 44 other countries, on May 8.

He said he has gained more opportunities for scholarships and he has enjoyed meeting so many intelligent people.

"The smaller fairs are usually qualifying for other larger fairs," he said. "The largest scholarship I have received is the $1,000 from K-State."

Bishop said that he is looking forward to getting into the bigger fairs and competing at a higher level.

He said he was happy with the way the project came out and there have been no problems thus far.

He will be graduating from high school in May and majoring in engineering at K-State.

K-State partners with Brazilians

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State and the Federal University of Santa Maria in Brazil will be working together in various scientific agricultural programs starting next school year.

The exchange will consist of K-State students going to Brazil to learn about no-till farming and University of Santa Maria students coming to K-State to learn about carbon sequestration.

"No-till and carbon sequestration are a big thing in the world right now," Steven Graham, assistant to the dean and director of the College of Agriculture, said.

Chuck Rice, professor of agronomy, explained carbon sequestration as a way of recapturing carbon dioxide that has been released into the atmosphere. It involves producing as much plant material as possible and recycling plant residues back into the soil to accumulate as organic matter. The more organic the matter is in the soil, more carbon is stored in the soil and less is in the atmosphere, Rice said.

No-till farming is a method of farming in which farmers do not till the soil between harvesting one crop and planting another. It helps keep more carbon in the soil as well as helping to conserve moisture and save time and energy costs, Rice said.

"There's less carbon in the air because more of it is in the soil," he said. "At the same time it reduces soil erosion and it conserves soil water."

Rice is currently working toward getting all the logistics of the project worked out.

Jon Wefald, K-State president, and Fred Cholick, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of K-State Research and Extension, signed an agreement. The Federal University of Santa Maria also signed this agreement and Rice will travel to Brazil this summer to work out the details. Both Rice and Graham said they think this will be a great program once it's running.

"The outcome for the students will just be a broader knowledge understanding," Rice said. "They get a better global perspective of agriculture, and it makes them more globally aware of things."

Karina Fabrizzi, graduate student in agronomy, said she is looking forward to working with this project.

"It will be a great opportunity," Fabrizzi said. "I think it'll be a great experience, not only professionally, but also personally."

Graham said that this is a great project and a good tradeoff because both parties will benefit.

"Chuck is doing something very important and unique in the world," he said. "By going to Brazil hopefully we'll bring back some new no-till techniques and teach them what we know about carbon sequestration."

Each year the UFM Community Learning Center, 1221 Thurston St., offers 300 classes to K-State and the Manhattan community. UFM began in 1968 to connect the community and university.

"The UFM was started by KSU students and faculty to create place for the environment to share issues," said Linda Teener, executive director of UFM.

People enroll for various reasons.

"Some come because they are really interested in the topic or to meet new people," Teener said.

Teachers are also found in the classrooms.

"Teachers teach to share what they know," she said.

UFM offers a variety of non-credit and credit classes.

"We offer everything from swimming lessons, scrapbooking, golf, belly dancing and yoga," Teener said.

The cost of non-credit classes ranges from $10 to $100. Credit classes follow regular K-State fees, Teener said.

The most popular class was the hip hop dance class.

"We had two sessions that were filled and we added a third which also became full," Teener said.

Another popular class offered at through UFM is Boxing for Men and Women. Kristen Houtwed, freshman in kinesiology, said she enrolled in the Boxing for Women because it sounded interesting and different.

For more information
Visit www.ufmprograms.org

Instructor Lorissa Ridley said she thinks the students are drawn to the class because it's not like an aerobics class.

"They are actually learning to box as if they were going to be in a ring," Ridley said.

Ridley, owner of K.O. Boxing, said because of her class, students have gotten stronger, improved their participation in other sports and increased their endurance.

"It teaches all aspects – endurance, strength, abdominal training," Ridley said.

Houtwed said this class makes participants sweat.

"It gets you in to shape without being in the gym. If you don't want to sweat, don't be here," she said.

In addition to getting fit, Houtwed said participants also learn how to fight.

"My favorite is the Haymaker – it's a hook punch off the back foot. This is the knock-out punch," she said.

Ridley has about 65 students ranging from freshmen to seniors. The classes are taught at the Cottonwood Racquet Club at 3615 Claflin Road. These courses are offered as either credit and non-credit.

Ridley, who has taught at UFM since last summer, said she is excited that the students are excited.

"I like the fact that students are excited about being here," she said.

At UFM, anyone can be an instructor.

"Our classes are taught by people from the community and the campus," Teener said. "Instructors range from age 6 to 98, even K-State students can teach a class."

UFM is a part of the Division of Continuing Education. Funding is received from Student Government Association, fund raising, class fees and grants.

UFM is always looking for suggestions that interest the community and campus.

"If we haven't taught it, we probably know someone who has or can teach it in the future," Teener said.

Scrapbookers become official club

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Scrapbookers Unite" will become an official campus organization today, club adviser Lisa Hanson said.

Scrapbookers met Monday to discuss the creation of a club devoted to the art of scrapbooking and the paperwork to make the club official will be processed today.

Brie Handgraaf, president of "Scrapbookers Unite," said the organization has already seen widespread interest, with 51 people joining on Thefacebook in the first week.

"I hope this club can bring current scrapbookers at K-State together and get new scrapbookers involved," Handgraaf said.

"Scrapbooking is really about making the most of your memories and preserving them for future generations. I just want to be a part of that."

This organization will not only act as an outlet for scrapbookers, Handgraaf said, but is also aimed at increasing representation of college students and their various interests in scrapbooking stores.

"I want to raise awareness of college-age scrapbookers," Handgraaf said.

"Hopefully we can get companies to cater more to what goes on in our lives and what we scrapbook."

Handgraaf has been in contact with Archivers, a scrapbooking store in Kansas City, Mo., which has shown interest in the organization and is considering manufacturing personalized pages for sororities and other specific organizations, which Handgraaf advocates.

The company may also sponsor a scrapbooking session or cropping session in the fall with free food and supplies for a minimal fee.

The organization is open to anyone interested in scrapbooking and offers students a chance to meet people with similar interests.

Sarah Morton, sophomore in business administration, said scrapbooking is a not only an art, but also a personal reflection.

"It's a good way to make friends and express yourself," Morton said.

When someone looks through your scrapbook, they get a sense of who you are."

While no official plans have been made, the organization anticipates meeting every other week this fall at different times to allow everyone a chance to participate, Handgraaf said.

The meetings will give everyone the chance to learn various techniques and ideas from each other.

To learn more about the organization, students can attend an informational meeting at 6 p.m. Thursday in Kedzie 210, visit www.personal.-ksu.edu/~dabug or e-mail Brie Handgraaf at scrapbookersunite@hotmail.com.

Board attorney says school finance plan contradicts court

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – The Legislature's school finance package fails to comply with a Kansas Supreme Court mandate to improve education funding, an attorney for the State Board of Education said in a legal filing Monday.

Dan Biles, the board's lead attorney, said legislators, whose plan increases annual spending on public schools by $127 million, failed to respond to the court's order in January to base spending on actual costs of educating the state's 440,000 students. The board is a defendant in a school finance lawsuit before the justices.

"Until legitimate cost studies can be completed to verify the adequacy of school funding, HB 2247 standing alone cannot be found to provide, or even presumed to be, full compliance with constitutional mandates as now interpreted by this court," Biles wrote, referring to the bill containing the plan. "At best, HB 2247 is an interim step."

The court ordered Biles and attorneys representing the state to file legal arguments by Monday and scheduled a May 11 hearing. Attorneys for school districts that sued the state in 1999 must file briefs by May 5.

Legislators completed work on the school funding package, which relies on existing state revenues, on March 30 before they took a three-week recess. The package would provide the largest increase in school funding in recent years and would be added to the current $2.7 billion in annual state aid.

Attorney General Phill Kline, during a conference call from New York, said the Legislature's measure would close the per-pupil spending gap between districts.

Districts relying on local taxes often receive less money from the state because they generally do not benefit from other provisions in the school finance formula, such as those providing additional funds for at-risk students or for having a small enrollment.

Kline dismissed Biles' concerns about fairness, citing a recent report by the magazine Education Week giving Kansas high marks in funding. Kline said the board was making "a false calculation and some false assumptions."

Biles said the increased state spending should be viewed as a "good faith effort" toward addressing the court's mandate, and the court should allow that part of the package to become law.

That law would let districts begin planning for the next school term, which begins in August, he said.

Investigation focuses on excessive speed

By Mari Yamaguchi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JAPAN – The death toll jumped to 71 Tuesday as crews pulled more victims from the wreckage of Japan's deadliest rail crash in decades. Investigators focused on whether excessive speed or the driver's inexperience caused the train to derail and slam into a building.

The seven-car commuter train carrying 580 passengers left the rails Monday morning near Amagasaki, a suburb of Osaka about 250 miles west of Tokyo. It hit an automobile and then a nine-story apartment complex. More than 440 people were injured.

Rescuers working under floodlights pulled out a conscious but seriously injured 46-year-old woman then reached a 19-year-old male passenger, also in serious condition.

But most of the work was grim as crews pulled 14 more bodies from the twisted rail carriages, pushing the death toll from 57 to 71.

Two of the five derailed cars were shoved inside and flattened against the wall of the building's first-floor parking garage.

Distraught relatives rushed to hospitals looking for loved ones who might have been injured or killed in the 5:18 a.m. crash. They struggled to comprehend their loss.

"I only saw him the night before," said Hiroko Kuki, whose son died in the crash. "I wish he were alive somewhere... I wish it were only a nightmare."

Takamichi Hayashi said his elder brother, 19-year-old Hiroki, might be among those still in the wreck. He said Hiroki had called their mother twice on a mobile phone from inside one of the train cars hours after the crash but remained unaccounted for.

"He told my mother: 'I'm in pain. I'm not going to make it,'" Hayashi said.

Officials said no cause had been ruled out but added that investigators suspected speed and the driver's less than a year on the job.

The driver – identified as Ryujiro Takami, 23 – was unaccounted for.

He got his train operator's license last May. A month later, he overshot a station and was issued a warning, railway officials and police said. Passengers said he also stopped too far past a station platform Monday just before the crash.

Tsunemi Murakami, safety director for train operator West Japan Railway Co., said it had not been determined how fast the train was traveling.

A surviving crew member told police he "felt the train was going faster than usual," public broadcaster NHK said.

That echoed comments from passengers who speculated the driver might have been speeding to make up for time lost when he overshot the previous station by 25 feet and had to back up. The train was nearly two minutes behind schedule, media reports said.

The crash occurred on a curve with a speed limit of 43 mph. Murakami estimated the train would have had to be traveling at 82 mph to have jumped the track purely because of excessive speed.

Some stretches of track in Japan have safety systems designed to stop trains at any sign of trouble without requiring drivers to take emergency action. But transport ministry officials said the automatic braking system along the stretch of track where the train crashed is among the oldest in Japan and can't halt trains traveling at high speeds.

Outside experts predicted investigators would find a combination of factors to blame.

"There are very few train accidents in Japan in which a train has flipped just because it was going too fast. There might have been several conditions at work – speed, winds, poor train maintenance or aging rails," Kazuhiko Nagase, a train expert who is a professor at the Kanazawa Institute of Technology, told NHK.

"For the train to flip, it had to be traveling at an extremely high speed," Nagase said.

Murakami said investigators also found evidence of rocks on the tracks, but hadn't determined whether that contributed .

Transport Minister Kazuo Kitagawa told reporters he would order all of Japan's railway operators to conduct safety inspections in the coming days.

"It's tragic," Kitagawa said at the scene. "We have to investigate why this horrible accident happened."

Saudi Arabia to increase production

By Deb Riechmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEXAS – President Bush prodded Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Abdullah on Monday to help curb skyrocketing oil prices, and the White House expressed hope that the kingdom's plans would ease U.S. gasoline prices that have shot above $2.20 a gallon.

"A high oil price will damage markets, and he knows that," Bush said of Abdullah, the de facto leader of the desert kingdom.

Asked whether pump prices would drop, Bush said that would depend on supply and demand.

"One thing is for certain: The price of crude is driving the price of gasoline," Bush said. "The price of crude is up because not only is our economy growing, but economies such as India and China's economies are growing."

Saudi Arabia has outlined a plan to increase production capacity to 12.5 million barrels a day by 2009 from the current 11 million limit. Saudi Arabia now pumps about 9.5 million barrels daily. If necessary, Saudi Arabia says it will eventually develop a capacity of 15 million barrels a day.

National Security Adviser Stephen Hadley said the plan could be seen as positive news by financial markets.

"The problem in the oil market now is a perception that there is inadequate capacity," Hadley said. Reassurance that can be given to the market on available supply, he said, should "have a downward pressure on the price."

On another economic issue, the United States and Saudi Arabia are on the verge of a bilateral trade agreement that would allow the Gulf nation to join the World Trade Organization by the end of the year, Abdullah's foreign affairs adviser, Adel Al-Jubeir, told reporters.

Other issues, including terrorism, prospects for peace between the Israelis and Palestinians, Syria's role in Lebanon and democratic change in the Middle East, filled the leaders' meeting and discussion over lunch.

They agreed to set up a high-level committee, headed by Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and the Saudi foreign minister, to deal with strategic issues.

Spreading democracy is a second-term goal that could affect Bush's legacy, yet high gas prices are a drag on his popularity.

A recent Associated Press-AOL poll found the public giving the president low marks for his handling of energy problems, with 62 percent saying they disapproved. Earlier in April, another AP survey found public dissatisfaction growing more generally, with Bush's job approval rating at 44 percent.

Bush has been urging Congress to pass his energy plan, but even the president has said that it will do little to give motorists short-term relief from high gas prices.

In Washington, Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said Bush's meeting with Abdullah was a reminder of America's dependence on foreign oil. He said fewer than 5 percent of the incentives in the energy bill were devoted to developing alternative energy sources.

Kerry said U.S. dependence on foreign oil tethers the United States to unstable regions of the world.

Gay amendment supporters outspend opponents

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Supporters of a measure banning gay marriage outspent opponents by more than 2-to-1 in a successful effort to add the proposal to the Kansas Constitution, campaign finance records show.

Those records showed eight groups favoring the amendment spent a total of nearly $182,000, while two groups and an individual opposing the measure spent almost $81,000.

Groups and individuals were required to file reports last week with the secretary of state's office, listing contributors and their expenditures.

The proposed amendment not only bans gay marriage but declares that only unions of one man and one woman are entitled to the "rights or incidents" or marriage.

The provision prevents the state from recognizing civil unions or domestic partnerships for same-sex couples.

Seventy percent of the voters supported the amendment in an April 5 election.

No Iraqi WMD found; top weapons inspector finishes work on search

By Katherine Shrader
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – In his final word, the CIA's top weapons inspector in Iraq said Monday that the hunt for weapons of mass destruction has "gone as far as feasible" and has found nothing, closing an investigation into the purported programs of Saddam Hussein that were used to justify the 2003 invasion.

"After more than 18 months, the WMD investigation and debriefing of the WMD-related detainees has been exhausted," wrote Charles Duelfer, head of the Iraq Survey Group, in an addendum to the final report he issued last fall.

"As matters now stand, the WMD investigation has gone as far as feasible."

In 92 pages posted online Monday evening, Duelfer provides a final look at an investigation that occupied over 1,000 military and civilian translators, weapons specialists and other experts at its peak. His latest addenda conclude a roughly 1,500-page report released last fall.

On Monday, Duelfer said there is no purpose in keeping many of the detainees who are in custody because of their knowledge on Iraq's weapons, although he did not provide any details about the current number. A U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the ultimate decision on their release will be made by the Iraqi authorities.

The survey group also provided warnings.

The addenda conclude that Saddam's programs created a pool of experts now available to develop and produce weapons and many will be seeking work. While most will probably turn to the "benign civil sector," the danger remains that "hostile foreign governments, terrorists or insurgents may seek Iraqi expertise."

"Because a single individual can advance certain WMD activities, it remains an important concern," one addendum said.

Another addendum also noted that military forces in Iraq may continue to find small numbers of degraded chemical weapons – most likely misplaced or improperly destroyed before the 1991 Gulf War. In an insurgent's hands, "the use of a single even ineffectual chemical weapon would likely cause more terror than deadlier conventional explosives," another addendum said.

And still another said the survey group found some potential nuclear-related equipment was "missing from heavily damaged and looted sites." Yet, because of the deteriorating security situation in Iraq, the survey group was unable to determine what happened to the equipment, which also had alternate civilian uses.

"Some of it probably has been sold for its scrap value. Other pieces might have been disassembled" and converted into motors or condensers, an addendum said. "Still others could have been taken intact to preserve their function."

Leaving the door to the investigation open just a crack, the U.S. official said a small team still operates under the U.S.-led multinational force in Iraq, although the survey group officially disbanded earlier this month. Those staying on continue to examine documents and follow up on any reports of weapons of mass destruction.

In a statement accompanying the final installment, Duelfer said a surprise discovery would most likely be in the biological weapons area because clues, such as the size of the facilities used to develop them, would be comparatively small.

Among unanswered questions, Duelfer said a group formed to investigate whether WMD-related material was shipped out of Iraq before the invasion wasn't able to reach firm conclusions because the security situation limited and later halted their work. Investigators were focusing on transfers from Iraq to Syria.

No information gleaned from questioning Iraqis supported the possibility, one addendum said. The Iraq Survey Group believes "it was unlikely that an official transfer of WMD material from Iraq to Syria took place. However, ISG was unable to rule out unofficial movement of limited WMD-related materials."

Westar lawyer claims no conflict of interest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – An attorney who recently joined a former Westar Energy Inc. executive's criminal defense team says he has no conflict of interest even though he once represented the utility in other matters.

Nick Badgerow, of Overland Park, Kan., hopes to persuade U.S. District Judge Julie A. Robinson to allow him to continue representing Douglas Lake, of New Canaan, Conn., formerly Westar's executive vice president.

Badgerow joined Lake's defense team last month. Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Hathaway asked Robinson to remove him, noting Badgerow's past representation of Westar.

In a response filed last week, Badgerow said he last represented Westar in 2003 and learned nothing relevant to Lake's defense.

"Motions to disqualify should be viewed with skepticism because of their potential as tools for abuse for gaining tactical advantage," Badgerow wrote in his response.

Lake and former Westar Chief Executive David Wittig, of Topeka, each face 40 criminal charges, including fraud, money laundering and circumventing internal controls. Prosecutors contend the two men tried to loot the state's largest utility before leaving late in 2002.

After a mistrial in December, prosecutors decided to try the two men again.

In a reply filed Monday, Hathaway labeled Badgerow's representation of Lake a "prickly situation," adding that prosecutors gain no special advantage if Badgerow is disqualified because he did not participate in the first trial.

Trial begins for Army officer accused of rape

By Samira Jafari
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALABAMA – An Army officer accused of raping a former New Jersey National Guard soldier in her barracks room went on trial in a military court Monday, with a prosecutor saying the defendant stalked the woman for days beforehand.

First Lt. Mike Hall is accused of raping Jennifer Dyer last August at Camp Shelby, near Hattiesburg, Miss.

"He refused to take 'no' for an answer," said prosecutor Capt. Jeffrey Dodson.

But defense attorney Victor Kelley said Dyer, also a first lieutenant at the time, made up the allegation to get out of the Army and avoid duty in Iraq. Hall, 35, contends the sex was consensual.

Dyer, 26, testified Monday that she and Hall left the officers club separately, and he followed her back to the barracks about 12:30 a.m. She said he tried to kiss and grope her in the barracks hallway.

"He approached me and told me he was tired of me saying 'No,'" Dyer testified.

She said Hall then forced his way into her barracks room, a few doors from his. She said he pulled off her clothes and raped her twice within an hour while she begged him to stop.

Asked why she didn't scream, she replied: "I couldn't raise my voice. I was so tired from pushing him away."

Asked why she didn't request help when she got a phone call during that time from her supervising officer, she said, "Lieutenant Hall was still in my room and I was afraid of what he might do."

She testified that she went to her supervisor's room immediately after Hall left and reported the rape.

She was to be cross-examined later.

Dyer has said she went public with her allegations on CBS's "60 Minutes" because Army investigators doubted her story and sequestered her in a hotel for three days without access to a telephone.

Army Special Agent Eric Barreras, who led the investigation, testified Monday that Dyer's allegations "did not add up" at first, but later evidence supported the charges, including an analysis of Dyer's clothing that showed they were torn off.

Hall has opted for a nonjury trial. A military judge will issue a verdict.

Dyer received an honorable discharge from the Army, has married and returned to work in a county sheriff's department in New Jersey.

New anti-racial profiling law not strong enough for some

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Even before a new Kansas law against racial profiling by law enforcement officers takes effect, a civil rights activist is arguing that the statute won't be strong enough.

The new law, which will take effect July 1, will make it illegal for an officer to stop someone's vehicle and use a person's race, gender, ethnicity or national origin or religious dress as the only reason to frisk or search them or their vehicles and property.

But Sonny Scroggins, of Topeka, founder of Bias Busters, said the new law should also apply when law enforcement officers stop people on foot.

He said many minorities are too poor to own cars and, "Our interaction with the law enforcement community is on foot."

The new law, signed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius last week, requires each law enforcement agency to adopt policies against racial profiling and to set up a procedure for handling complaints. They also must compile annual reports on complaints.

The law also will establish a 15-member commission to collect data about racial profiling and make recommendations to Sebelius and legislators by Nov. 1.

Rep. Ward Loyd, R-Garden City, Kan., chairman of the House Corrections and Juvenile Justice Committee, said lawmakers did not have the law cover pedestrian stops because some law enforcement officials were concerned that might have required reporting of routine contacts between citizens and officers.

Scroggins' group plans to hold a workshop on racial profiling Wednesday night at a Topeka hotel.

General Motors recalls 2 million vehicles

By Ken Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

General Motors Corp. is recalling more than 2 million vehicles, including nearly 1.5 million sport utility vans and pickup trucks that have problems with their seat belts.

The company said Monday a few minor injuries were associated with the six separate recalls and owners would be notified of the problems by mail.

Among the vehicles affected were 1.48 million SUVs and pickups from the 2003-2005 model years, including the Chevrolet Silverado Crew Cab, Suburban, Tahoe, Avalanche; Cadillac Escalade, Escalade ESV, Escalade EXT; GMC Sierra Crew Cab, Yukon XL, Yukon; and the Hummer H2s.

The recalls represented the latest challenge for the world's largest automaker, which last week reported $1.1 billion in losses in the first quarter.

GM has cited the financial burdens of providing health coverage for its workers and retirees amid lackluster car sales.

As for the recalls, spokesman Alan Adler said the center safety belt in the second row of the SUVs and pickups, typically used for child seats, was riding high on the occupant's stomach or abdomen. Although no injuries have been connected to the problem, Adler said, there could be a reduced protection in that portion of the body in the event of a crash.

Bob Lange, GM's executive director of structure and safety integration, said fixing the seat belts in the SUVs and trucks was "an important precautionary measure."

"Our commitment to promoting safety and reminding everybody to buckle up properly on every trip led us to this decision," Lange said.

The company announced recalls for the following vehicles:

– More than 330,000 1500 Series Chevrolet Suburban and Yukon XL from the 2000-2001 model years for potential overheating of fuel pump wires that could lead to engine stalling. There were no known crashes or injuries related to the problem.

– More than 142,000 1500 Series Chevrolet Silverado and GMC Sierra pickups from the 1999-2002 model years and 2500/3500 Series pickups from the 2001-2004 model years with manual transmissions for parking brake friction. Adler said 26 crashes and one minor injury were connected to the problem.

– More than 69,000 Buick Lacrosse and Buick Allure 2005 models from Canada for a bent clip that holds part of the brake.

If the clip comes off, it would lead to brake loss and a crash, Adler said.

Allergy medicines' sales restricted

By Joe Bel Bruno
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

All Wal-Mart stores will move many non-prescription cold and allergy medications behind pharmacy counters by June because they include an ingredient used to make the illegal stimulant methamphetamine, the company said Monday.

The world's largest retailer – which has nearly 4,000 Wal-Mart and Sam's Club stores in the United States and another 1,600 international locations – will join rivals Target Corp. and Albertson's Inc. in making such a move throughout all locations.

All three retailers are trying to make it more difficult for customers to easily obtain medications containing pseudoephedrine, which is a key component for making methamphetamine, a powerfully addictive drug. Popular over-the-counter medications such as Pfizer Inc.'s Sudafed and Sinutab and rival Schering-Plough Corp.'s Afrin nasal spray list pseudoephedrine among their active ingredients.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc., which had already been making the changes, estimates that 60 percent of its stores are already selling such abused products behind the counter.

"We will continue with our plan to move the most commonly abused products containing pseudoephedrine behind the pharmacy counter in all our stores by early June," said Wal-Mart spokeswoman Jacquie Young. "The remaining solid dose products containing multi-ingredients will be moved behind the pharmacy counter by September."

Wal-Mart had not previously announced a timetable for making the changes.

Young said Wal-Mart has also been in discussions with suppliers "regarding the reformulating of these products with alternative ingredients."

The move comes as a number of states imposed restrictions on the sale of some cold medicines, which have resulted in a drop in the number of meth lab seizures. Six states allow only pharmacies to sell drugs with pseudoephedrine, and seven others make retailers lock up the products or sell them from staffed counters. Legislatures in 22 states are considering similar restrictions.

Earlier on Monday, food and drug retailer Albertson's said it would shift the sale of some over-the-counter cold medicines to behind the pharmacy counter. The Boise, Idaho-based firm operates some 2,000 pharmacies nationwide under names such as Savon and Osco drugs.

Death sentences on decline for 6th consecutive year

By Juan-Carlos Rodriguez
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The number of people sentenced to death last year fell to the lowest level since the Supreme Court reinstated the penalty in 1976.

There were 125 people sent to death row in 2004, down from 144 the previous year and the sixth consecutive annual decline, according to figures compiled by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. In 1998, 300 people received death sentences.

Miriam Gohara, assistant counsel at the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, said one major cause for the decline is high profile exonerations based on DNA evidence. She said that jurors are less willing to impose the penalty when they see that the system occasionally fails.

"I think people are more concerned about the irreversibility of the death penalty. Once somebody is executed, you can't bring them back," Gohara said.

Dianne Clements, president of Justice for All, a pro-death penalty victim advocacy group, offered another explanation.

"Not only has the murder rate declined, thank goodness, but the types of killers eligible for the death penalty have been redefined by the Supreme Court," she said.

The high court has issued a series of decisions narrowing the death penalty, putting a stop to the execution of juveniles, the insane and the mentally retarded. There are also more jurisdictions where jurors are given options other than death, said Richard Dieter, executive director of the Death Penalty Information Center.

Dieter also said increased public attention has led to better legal representation for defendants who could face the death penalty.

personal errands during working hours. Her previous year's review was allegedly changed to an unsatisfactory rating.

– On June 18, 2004, Hwang claims she discovered she was being paid substantially less than male employees with with less experience and fewer credentials.

– On June 21, 2004, Hwang was allegedly informed she would receive a different secretary. This was allegedly the ninth secretary assigned to her during her employment with the Foundation. She also claims her office was moved three times. Hwang claims Caucasian employees were not subject to these actions.

– On July 1, 2004, Hwang was allegedly instructed to turn over her corporate donor accounts to a new Caucasian employee with less experience.

– On Aug. 23, 2004, Hwang allegedly informed the Foundation she would be constructively discharged – when an employee involuntarily resigns to escape intolerable and illegal employment requirements to which he or she is subject to because of race, religion, sex or national origin – on Nov. 30, 2004.

Hwang's complaint states these actions were taken due to her race, national origin, ancestry and sex.

Hwang and her lawyer, Sheila Hochhauser, refused to comment.

William Minner, Kansas Human Rights Commission executive director, responded to Hwang on Feb. 1 acknowledging the complaint. Minner could not be reached for comment.

and furniture. It will provide meeting space and work space for all organizations.

"We really focused on flexibility to meet the daily needs of K-State," Conner, senior in biology and political science, said.

Plans include an interior exit and entrances from within the Union, she said.

CSA will provide storage space for each organization, Conner said. The space size would vary depending on the organization's needs.

"We plan to provide storage to every student organization," she said. "We would meet the needs of each individual group."

Students could access the center 24 hours a day. People would work the front desk at all hours. Conner said it would probably be professionally staffed during the day and students would work at night.

Student IDs would provide students access to CSA, she said.

If the referendum passes, K-State will hire an architect and plans will be finalized.

Ebert has a contract with K-State stating that he will come up with the preliminary plans for big projects, he said. He could be the architect if he wins the bid.

"I work with them and listening to what and how they plan to use the space," Ebert said. "We take all that information and quantify it into how many square feet it will take."

season sweep of Wichita State, something they had not accomplished in 50 years.

Muegge went 4.0 innings, gave up five hits and allowed only two runs to lead the Wildcats to a 4-2 victory.

"Right now this team is playing very well," junior Steve Murphy said. "We are playing at the peak of our game right now, and we need to have a good showing and get ready for Kansas."

Roundy said he agreed with Murphy.

"We just need to keep playing hard and keep the momentum going into the Kansas series," he said.

K-State will take the field at 2 p.m. at Community America Ballpark.

MEETING SPACE | CSA could free up Union homes.

"We don't really have a place to store our stuff," he said. "I think it's also a good place to go at night."

The $10.27 a student pays each semester would be better spent on classroom improvement or something else, Olds said.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the K-State Student Union, said the Union rarely experiences scheduling problems.

"If people are a little flexible with their meeting time, then it usually works out," Connaughton said. "There might be a time occasionally where everything is booked."

Many groups will reserve rooms for the entire semester.

Caleb Jackson, president of the Japanese Appreciation Alliance, said JAA reserves rooms for the semester. He said was there was a scheduling conflict recently, but that was the first.

Jackson, senior in business management, said JAA wanted to meet with another group but the day didn't work out.

"We wanted the Big 12 Room, but the day we wanted, it was not available," he said.

Jeff Smith, president of the Young Democrats, said YD schedules its rooms for the semester also, but this semester there was some scheduling problems. He said there was difficulty getting a room when the YDs wanted it.

"The new student center would be really beneficial," Smith, junior in political science, said. "The budget plan from the way I understand it seems pretty solid."

Rylan Ortiz, president of Students for Environmental Action, said he could see the CSA being used, but it isn't needed.

"I think that it could be beneficial," Ortiz, junior in electrical engineering, said. "I can also see not having it as well because I have had a lot of success with using the Union."

Josh Criswell, Multicultural Student Organizations representative to the CSA Committee, said he sees a need for the center within MSOs.

"A lot of our MSOs are operating out of the trunk of people's cars," Criswell, sophomore in social science, said. "They really don't have any desk space or any storage."

low of 76 in the third round.

Head coach Kristi Knight said she thought her team played surprisingly well on the front nine during the third round, but needed to finish stronger.

"We started on the back nine, where we had struggled before," she said.

"But we played very well, and we were only 3 over as a team.

"At the turn, we started to lose it and struggled on the final nine."

K-State is now No. 76 in the latest Golfweek/Sagarin poll. All four teams the Wildcats beat were ranked above K-State, with OU the highest at No. 54.

"It is nice to beat teams that are ranked ahead of us," Knight said.

"I am proud of our effort and especially proud of our response after the first round when we were in 12th."

Big 12 Player of the Year Annie Thurman-Young, of Oklahoma State University, won the individual trophy with a 212, 10 strokes in front of second-place Lisa Ferrero. OSU took home the team trophy, shooting 900. Second-place Texas was one stroke behind.

Every K-State competitor finished in the top 51. After Heffel, freshman Kali Quick tied for 30th, then Robert at No. 41.

Heffel's sister Sarah Heffel finished at No. 50 and freshman Michelle Regan finished at No. 51.

The K-State women's golf season is now over, as the team didn't qualify for NCAA Regionals.

beginning.

"I think I feel that way about every single player on the roster. I believe that the senior class that we just graduated really was the core of the way in which we played and who we were in our technical identity.

"Being on the floor with an All-America-caliber player like a Nicole Ohlde, like the nation's leading three-point shooter in Laurie Koehn and like Kendra Wecker as an All-American, it affects positively who you are.

"I truly look at it as a new starting point for all of the returners in our program, and as an absolute-zero starting point for the incoming players.

The four new recruits – Marlies Gipson, JoAnn Hamlin, Shalee Lehning and Danielle Zanotti – will all four of them play as freshmen?

"I think we have the kind of team walking in the gym next year where the opportunity to compete and play is absolutely wide-open.

"I know that we need a core group to emerge that can build itself into a Big 12 competitive basketball team.

"You have to find a way to be competitive, and I think it will begin with the simple reality that if you're going to earn time or opportunities on the floor, you're going to have to be a player that can produce quality offensive numbers.

"I think at the very least, I will be looking for players that are consistent in their ability to take care of the ball, to score the ball and to rebound the ball.

When you talk about that core group of players, are Shana Wheeler and Claire Coggins a good start?

"I really feel like we have a blank page, I honestly do. I think we got some flashes of good basketball from both Wheeler and Coggins from time to time, but more so than at any other time, barring the first year or two here at Kansas State, the mold and the foundation is absolutely, in my mind, 100 percent wide open to people stepping in and establishing what they are going to bring.

"I don't necessarily look at players that had an opportunity to contribute last year any differently than my new players coming in, because I believe their whole life and their whole role has completely and totally changed.

"And the responsibility and productivity that I will be looking for them to bring has completely changed."

"The bottom line reality of that, heading into next season, will be as huge as it's been for three or four years now.

"Megan Mahoney, Laurie Koehn, Kendra Wecker and Nicole Ohlde emerged and, individually and collectively, found a way to bring those kinds of contributions to the floor as freshmen."

Referendum fails

Photos by Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Nacole Boan, junior in political science, and Vicki Conner, senior in biology and political science, read the results of the referendum on the Center for Student Activities vote Tuesday evening at Pat's Blue Rib'N Bar-B-Que in Aggieville. Both served on the CSA planning committee.

Student Activities Center voted down; needed 60 percent of votes to pass

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Center for Student Activities referendum failed to pass Tuesday, receiving only 48 percent of the vote.

It needed 60 percent to pass.

Results showed that 3,813 students voted, which is 16.5 percent of the student body. "No" votes totaled 1,983 or 52 percent. "Yes" votes totaled 1,830 or 48 percent.

Supporters of the referendum gathered at Pat's Blue Rib'n Bar-B-Que Tuesday night to await the results.

Student Activities Center
Students voted on Tuesday on the possible reallocation of privilege fees to fund the Center for Student Activities.

The CSA Committee began planning the proposal at the beginning of this school year.

"I know it's hard to stick with something for so long," Vicki Conner, co-chair of the committee, said to the about 20 people in attendance. "You guys put in so many hours to this."

Conner, senior in biology and political science, said she was disappointed in the results but respected the students' voice.

"I continue to 100 percent believe the Center for Student Activities is something K-State needs," Conner said. "I think it's a disservice to our students to not have one."

Others commented on Conner's hard work.

Campus buildings to receive new roofs during summer break

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eisenhower and Weber halls will be re-roofed over the summer.

Companies will make bids this week for the project, said Gerry Carter, director of facilities planning. The exact cost of renovations will be unknown until a company is chosen.

The roofing project will take place while students are using the classrooms inside Eisenhower, Carter said. No classes are scheduled in Weber for the summer.

Loleta Sump, facilities support manager, said 39 classes are scheduled in Eisenhower for the May intersession, summer courses and August intersession.

However, Carter said the re-roofing shouldn't disturb the students in the classrooms despite the hammering or smell.

"If we have people having problems and difficulties, we deal with it right at that time," he said.

Sump said she had not known about the re-roofing project when scheduling classes in Eisenhower.

However, she said that may change.

"Once we get the information about the actual project – the dates and the time, more in depth information – we will look at that and see if we have to move any classes," she said.

Another building will be re-roofed at K-State-Salina. Curbs and gutters will also be repaired over the summer.

Magazine editor ordered to pay

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After seven years of litigation, Johnson County Court District Judge James F. Vano ruled that Tim Fitzgerald, editor of "Powercat Illustrated" magazine, must pay $140,000 for using the subscriber list for "Purple Pride Magazine."

Fitzgerald was the editor of "Purple Pride" before leaving to start "Powercat Illustrated" in 1998.

The case was originally filed in 1998, and a 2000 ruling put the original amount owed at $10,000.

Intellisports, LLC, which owned "Purple Pride" at the time, appealed to the Kansas Court of Appeals.

Twice, the court sent the case back to the district court, leading to the current ruling.

Fitzgerald issued a statement and declined to comment, but said his choices at this point include appeal or settlement.

According to the statement, "While I cannot comment on this ongoing case, I will say that the judge who heard the evidence in the case twice ruled under $25,000, which was appealed by my former employer, so while we respect the new judge's decision, we disagree with this ruling.

"We are evaluating our next step, but I want to be clear that the costs associated with this ongoing litigation have become part of the Spirit Street Publishing doing business, and I am looking forward to publishing "Powercat Illustrated" and

Charter school still possible for USD 383

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Show me the money," Roger Brannan, member of the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board, said, quoting the movie "Jerry Maguire" when asked about the recent charter approval of the Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School.

The district was approved for a charter school, the first for the city of Manhattan, but might not get it due to funding.

Brannan said he likes the fact that the district was approved by the state to have a charter school, which is a federally funded school that experiments with different methods of teaching.

But he said that due to the decline of enrollment and the current financial situation of the Kansas Board of Education, Manhattan will probably have to put plans for a charter school aside for the year.

"I'm glad that what we submitted met standards that approved the charter," he said. "But looking at it in a harder light, the fact that there's declining enrollment, the money has to be there to have this work out."

Brannan said he likes the idea of having a charter school because it allows for experimentation with different methods. Through rearranging class schedule or different forms of teaching, sometimes a district can find new or better ways to teach, he said.

Though money isn't everything, Brannan said that is the core issue.

CAMPUS CHRONICLES

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Students celebrate April 20 in broad daylight

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. – For many years now, April 20 has been a sacred day for unknown masses from all ages, faiths and origins who gather at different areas of the country to celebrate the benefits they get from the plant lifestyle as the time in their region strikes 4:20 p.m.

Many people who take part in the supposed joys of blunts, bowls and taters typically do so in private, but then there are some who risk taking part in this subculture holiday out in public places.

Some even do it on the Quad at the University of Alabama.

Midway from the sidewalk in the center of the Quad and the corner of Colonial Drive and University Boulevard is a set of three benches where at least four male students set some Mary Jane to flame, and two of them agreed to talk to The Crimson White as they soaked up the blue skies, sun rays and temperate weather the day offered.

"It's been such a beautiful day," said one student, who had begun taking part in the day's festivities just minutes beforehand. "It's great to be out here celebrating."

Both described themselves as responsible adults and future leaders of America who see nothing wrong with the use of marijuana because their use of it doesn't create a threat to anyone.

One said this was because of the positive mindset in which smoking marijuana puts people in, and, much like the spirit of Christmas, "the spirit of cannabis" was something that could bring peace to the world if practiced year-round.

"Everybody is doing this," he said.

The other student said marijuana should be legal because it takes the edge off people in ways similar to alcohol but has fewer harmful side effects and, in some cases, even increases his ability to do things.

"It makes me kayak better," he said.

They decided to smoke out on the Quad at 4:20 p.m. because they had a class that was in the area that ended at 4:15, he said.

"Even if you have responsibilities, you can still make time for (smoking marijuana)," one said.

U. PITTSBURGH SLEEP TECHNICIAN WARNS AGAINST USE OF PILLS

PITTSBURGH – Having trouble sleeping?

Before you pop a pill, Melissa Ilnicki has a warning for you.

"Pills aren't the way to go," said Ilnicki, a pulmonary sleep technician at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center Montefiore Hospital Sleep Lab. While she acknowledged that sleeping pills are effective, she does not recommend them for anyone suffering from insomnia.

Young adults might have trouble sleeping because of their sleep patterns, Ilnicki said, pointing out that many college students do not go to bed until 4 a.m. and then get up at 7 a.m.

Mark Bordwell, a registered polysomnographic technician from University Services in Pottstown, Pa., also offered warnings about sleeping pills. Taking over-the-counter drugs such as Benadryl can cause drowsiness, Bordwell said, explaining that such sleep aids can cause lingering drowsiness into the next day.

Sophomore Alicia Barnes often has problems getting to sleep, but she said she has never used sleeping pills.

"When I have trouble sleeping, I generally don't get to sleep until around 5 a.m. I've just started staying up late because my schedule's all out of whack now, anyway. I do want to go to try to go to bed early; it's such a pain to fall asleep," Barnes said. "Usually, I'll just get on the computer and mess around until I feel tired."

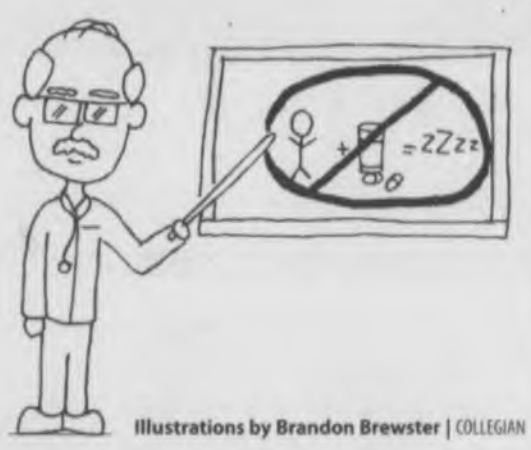
Other students, however, don't feel they can get through school without getting enough sleep.

Pitt sophomore Kurt Esenwein has been using prescription Ambien since the beginning of the semester.

"I started on anti-depressants like a year and a half ago, which gave me a hard time sleeping, but I didn't start with the Ambien until school started and I really needed a good night's sleep," Esenwein said.

Younger people need more sleep than middle-aged people, Bordwell said.

He suggested that people should get an average of seven to eight hours of sleep each night, but he stressed that everyone is different. Some people need nine to 10 hours of sleep each night, while others are fine with only six hours.



"Not sleeping properly causes problems with short-term memory," Bordwell said.

Ilnicki warned that not getting enough sleep can also create problems with falling asleep in class, eating disorders and trouble concentrating while driving.

According to Bordwell, long-term insomnia can even have an effect on the immune system.

There are thousands of types of sleep disorders, Bordwell said. While most cases of sleep disorders are related to psychological issues, such as tragedies in life, he said this is not always the case.

For a person diagnosed with any type of insomnia, Bordwell said, there are two main methods of treating it: cognitive behavior modification and pharmaceuticals. Which method a physician chooses often depends on that physician's school of thought, Bordwell said, adding that some physicians even use both.

CITY COMMISSION

Aggieville Campus Edge development plan receives criticism

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioners were skeptical about the Aggieville-Campus Edge District Plan presented at their session Tuesday.

Commissioner Tom Phillips said though the plan was a good idea, it wasn't acceptable.

"I like the overall idea, but I'm not comfortable with the proposal as it was presented today," he said. "We have a great picture, but that's all we have. There are too many unknown factors to say that this will actually happen if we approve it."

Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning, said the purpose of this plan is to establish long-range goals for the redevelopment of the Campus Edge neighborhood and the Aggieville district.

"We want to develop these locations into high-quality residential, mixed-use and commercial areas," he said.

The district plan focuses on the Aggieville commercial district, the five-block residential area campus edge neighborhood to the north of Aggieville and the Bluemont/Aggieville Corridor. This corridor includes properties that are adjacent and face Bluemont Avenue between North Manhattan Avenue and 11th Street.

The Bluemont/Aggieville corridor component encourages residential uses above first floor commercial development.

Ockert Fourie, senior planner, said the developing businesses are supposed to provide services that support the needs of both students and residential community members, but also serve as residential units and offices.

The plan also calls for additional parking in the Aggieville commercial district. Using a business's ground floor as a parking garage is a proposed solution.

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville business district, said the additional parking was needed, but finding the required funding could be a challenge.

"The business district doesn't have any hidden pots of gold, and it's difficult to find funding because there are so many independent business and property owners," she said. "If the business district comes together and forms a partnership with someone like KSU, we could possibly find the funds."

The plan recommends a higher-density residential development along the east side of North Manhattan Avenue. These new developing buildings will have architectural designs requirements, such as limited building height.

The recommendations for the Aggieville commercial district include placing buildings as close as 14 feet to the front of the property line and preventing new curb cuts on Bluemont Avenue and North Manhattan Avenue. The plan also recommends changes that will make it easier for pedestrians to cross the street.

Commissioner Mark Hatesohl said the only way the redevelopment district plan could work was if a big developer came in and bought all of the land.

Harry Kitchener, who owns four houses on the north corner of Aggieville, said there could be some who were interested in purchasing some property.

"I've had interested buyers from Wichita and Kansas City contact me about purchasing my land," he said. "I don't know about many big commercial buyers will be interested."

Royal Purple Yearbook on sale in Union parking lot

The Royal Purple Yearbook is on sale in the K-State Student Union parking lot.

The Royal Purple, which includes a DVD, 496 pages and more than 200 organizations and clubs, is selling for $36.95.

After April 27, unsold books and ordered books that have not been picked up will be transferred to the Student Publications, Inc. office in Kedzie 103 where students will have the opportunity to buy or pick up yearbooks until the end of the semester.

About 2,500 yearbooks have been sold so far this year, compared to the more than 4,000 books that were sold last year. While many students, staff and faculty continue to support the yearbook, sales have been declining in past years.

Linda Puntney, interim director of Student Publications Inc., said the decrease in sales has led to a new and improved Royal Purple for the students.

"I think we have to work harder and harder each year to sell yearbooks now," Puntney said.

Student Publications, Inc. now distributes three different yearbooks – one each for the main campus, K-State-Salina and the College of Veterinary Medicine. Also, for a small fee, students can create their own dust jackets for their yearbooks simply by bringing in pictures. The staff does the rest.

Jennifer Newberry, junior in mass communications and 2005 Royal Purple editor, said the staff has even taken the creativity of the book a step further.

"The past few years sales have been down, and a lot of people say why buy the yearbook when they're not even in it, but we have new opportunities like 'Strike a Pose' where students can have their picture taken for free with their friends and it will appear in the index," Newberry said.

Also, from noon to 1 p.m. today, members of K-State's women's basketball team will be signing yearbooks outside on the north side of the K-State Student Union.

Newberry said the women will only be signing the Royal Purple.

"We had a lot of success with it last year, and it helped boost sales and the students enjoyed it too," she said.

She said that around 20 yearbooks were sold Monday, and a few more on Tuesday, but Wednesday's sales should be even higher thanks to the celebrity signers.

TO THE POINT

Facilities should consider students when reroofing

The Division of Facilities will be re-roofing Eisenhower and Weber halls during the summer, possibly causing problems for students in classes.

The noise of hammering and smell of chemicals could disturb the atmosphere that is necessary for students to learn.

Thirty-nine classes will take place in Eisenhower during the May intersession, summer courses and August intersession.

The Division of Facilities should consider the students' needs when planning where classes will meet.

It is understandable that buildings need to be re-roofed during the summer months, however, it should be planned around students' needs.

Students are already distracted in summer courses by beautiful weather taunting them from the window. What they don't need is a pounding hammering sound and the smell of a new roof.

Therefore, there should be more than enough space to be able to move classes out of Eisenhower during the re-roofing project and into a more suitable classroom environment.

If the course times and re-roofing schedule are in conflict, the Division of Facilities should look into moving the 39 classes in Eisenhower to other buildings.

This action may be an inconvenience to the Division of Facilities, however, it will be beneficial to students in the long run.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Innocent victims

Be nice to roommates, significant others, classmates during finals week

As the end of the semester draws closer and closer, the honor students on campus are down to their last resorts, the alcoholics are giving up on classes in favor of Aggieville, and all of campus is ready for the summer to finally be here.

JULIA STOSKOPF

Thank you, Captain Obvious.

Now, before assuming that this column is simply about stress, check the archives. Been there, done that. On the contrary, this column is a campaign to save the less fortunate–the roommates, significant others, co-workers, families, and classmates who will suffer until May 13 is over.

Why single out these unfortunate souls? These are the individuals who will suffer the wrath of every stressed-out student on campus.

Admit it–the end of the semester is worse than "that time of the month."

Students are stressed out. So what?

The problem arises when students do not take into consideration that every single one of their classmates is suffering from the same amount of pressure, even though it may seem that some of their peers are simply floating down Moon River on a gondola filled with beer cans.

Seniors are scrambling. Others are trying to decide if they would rather go home, find a job or disappear to the ends of the earth. Everyone is attempting to survive until finals week is over.

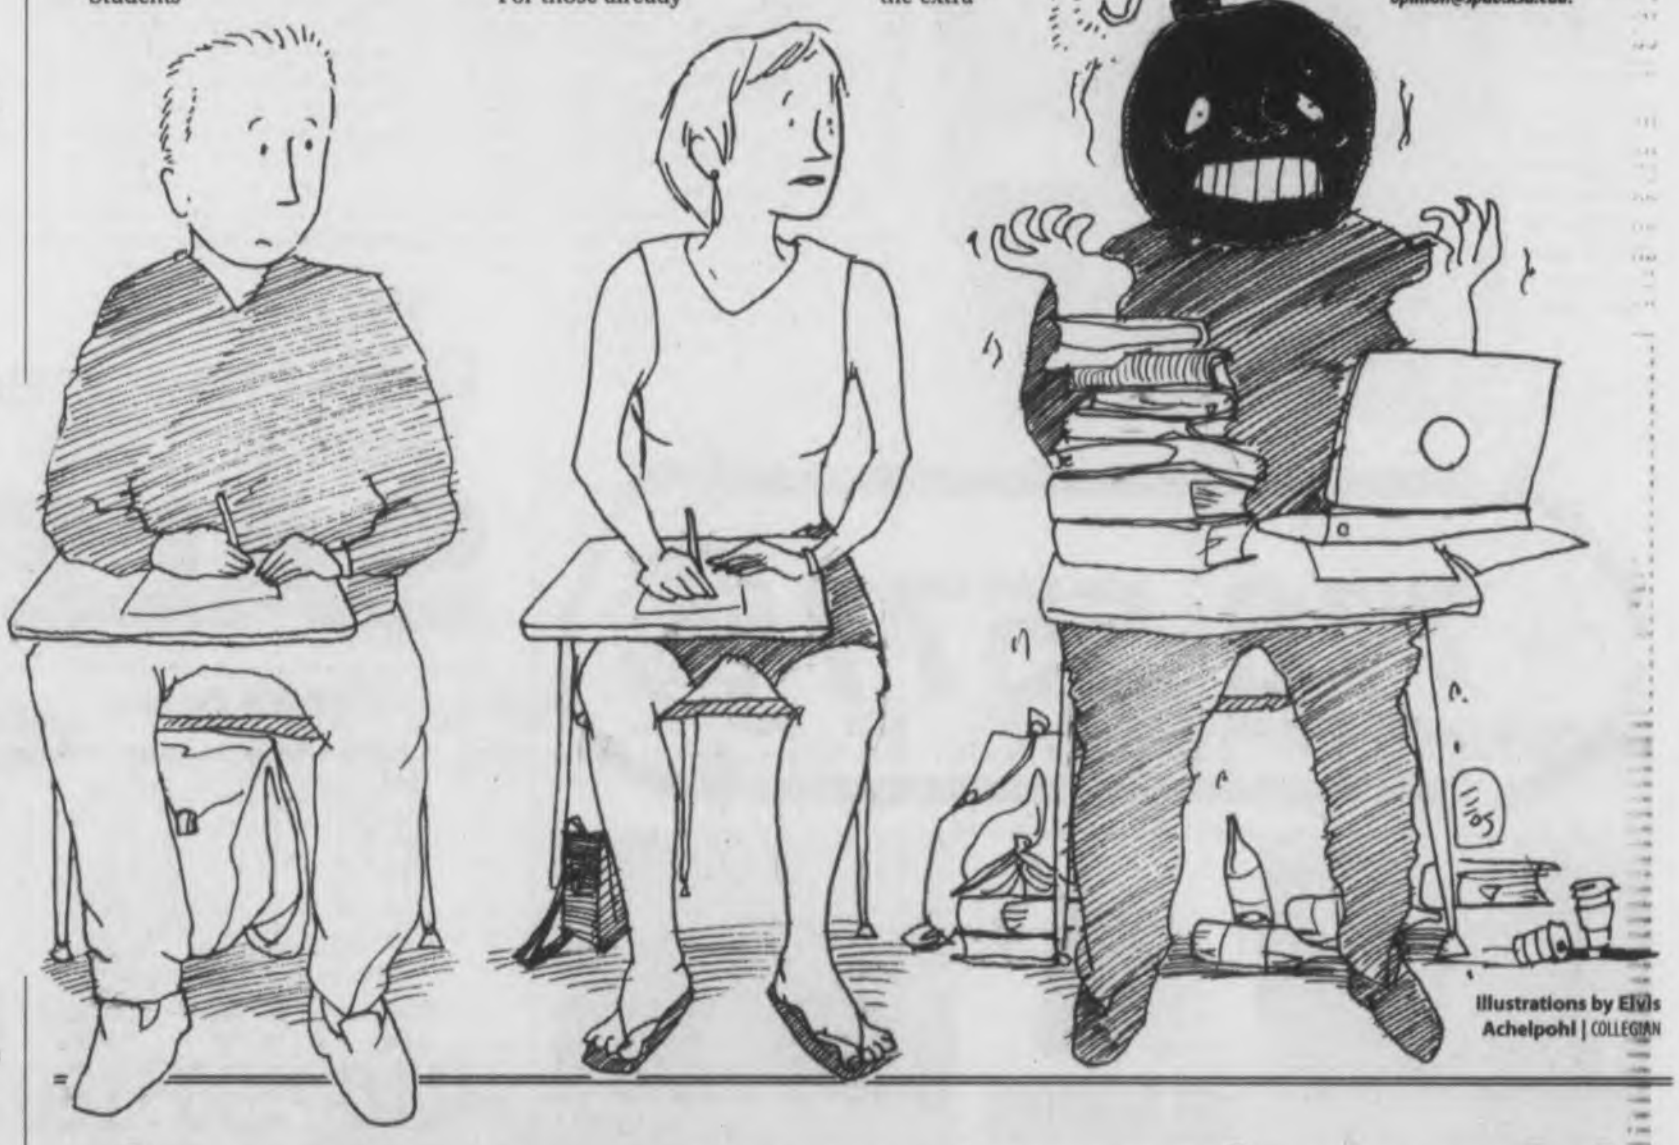
Take all of this into consideration. While everyone may be stressed, that does not give us permission to take all of that frustration out on others; therefore we must follow Captain Obvious to the outer realms of her expertise – what exactly to do in order to solve the problem.

As always, this Captain Obvious is smarter than she looks. The solution can be as easy or as difficult as one desires.

For those already threatening to poke out the eyes of students who actually are laughing during class, relax! Breathe (insert the name of a religious figure of importance according to personal preference – i.e. Jesus, Buddha or Jimmy Buffet) in, blow the evil out. Feel better?

Okay, so breathing isn't a perfect solution, but taking a moment to sit, watch a movie or walk around City Park will do wonders.

If the academically apathetic students on campus are that annoying, find a bubble. A bubble can be a set of headphones and a treadmill, a room with a closed door and the music all the way up or even just a drive around town. Find some place that provides a solitary moment and go there - often.



These solutions are not perfect, and if the situation is really bad, find a professional to talk to, excluding the bartenders in Aggieville. After all, they have been just as stressed out as you are; think about all of the extra years of school they had to attend.

Most importantly, before taking off shoes and slamming them against the wall in order to communicate to neighbors that their rock band is not appreciated, think about it. Is exploding into a raging ball of stress that threatens to engulf all those who encounter it really worth it?

School will end May 13 whether or not students stress about it. Stress can be a healthy push to find that extra bit of motivation to end the semester on a good note, but it shouldn't consume lives or facilitate the murder of helpless bystanders during these last few weeks.

Join in the campaign to save lives, relationships and jobs during the crisis that is sweeping the nation's college campuses. After all, only you can prevent spontaneous combustion of the psychological kind.

Japanese government must be careful

The political climate in East Asia can best be described as a paradox. Despite an unprecedented degree of cultural exchange and booming bilateral trade between China and Japan, political ties between the two Asian giants have remained icy at best.

DAVID LIANG

Earlier this month, Sino-Japanese relations sunk to an all-time low following the approval of a series of controversial textbooks, which critics say whitewash Imperial Japan's wartime legacy. Protests broke out in China and South Korea, demanding that Japan retract its UN bid.

In Tokyo, where the general attitude toward World War II is, "yes, we did some harm, but look–we were the victims, too," the protests were met with mixed feelings.

An overwhelming majority of Japanese–for good or bad–view World War II as a thing of the past. The Chinese and Koreans, however, still carry a rather large chip on their shoulders. They feel that Japan has, to this day, neither adequately compensated them nor expressed sincere apologies.

And their sentiments aren't completely baseless. High-level Japanese politicians have frequently downplayed atrocities committed during the war, such the hundreds of thousands of women forced into sexual slavery during the war, euphemistically referred to as "comfort women."

In 1994, then-Justice Minister and Army Chief-of-staff Shigeto Nagano declared that all claims of Japanese atrocities were all "fabrications," and that the Nanjing Massacre was "made up" by the Chinese.

Japan's current Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi has made regular visits to the controversial Yasukuni shrine, which honors Japan's war dead, including the architects of Japan's militarism and Class A war criminals.

Japanese politicians need to realize that they stand to lose a lot if they alienate their Asian neighbors. For starters, they need South Korean support on the ITER fusion reactor project, and Chinese leverage on North Korea to push for further diplomacy. Japan also needs the support of both countries to win the much-coveted seat on the UN Security Council.

And if that isn't enough reason to maintain good ties, there's always money. The recent revitalization of the Japanese economy from its decade-long slump has been credited much to dealing business with these two countries.

While the Chinese Communist party clamps down on most forms of political expression, it gives anti-Japanese nationalist groups a relatively long leash. It also likes to portray everyone in Japan as a closet militant, partly to divert attention from their own shortcomings and failures

This means any foul-ups on Japan's part would be put to great use through the CCP's propaganda machine. Yes, China needs to move on. But until the Communist party loses hold of power they're not going to let that happen. Until then, the best way for Japanese government to protect its own interests in China would be simply to lay low and watch its words.

Hey, Josh Witt: San Diego already has a decent running back by the name of LaDanian Tomlinson, so Sproles probably isn't the reason they'll rise. Thank you and come again.

Oh yeah, and one more thing: Hey, Josh Witt, take those purple-colored glasses off and think like a decent human being.

Hey, did any K-State fans notice that a running back who has been out of football for two years went before Darren Sproles? Ouch. That's a kick in the nuts.

Thank you to the nice group of ADPIs for helping me. You're cute.

How could you release the names of the people trying out for Willie? You ruined it.

Flight competition begins

Airlines, plane-building companies on display

By Alex Yocum
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The National Intercollegiate Flying Association and K-State-Salina are hosting the 57th annual Safety and Flight Evaluation Conference.

SAFECON began Tuesday on the Salina Airport and concludes on Friday with an awards ceremony.

"The event planning started over one year ago in March," Heath Larson, flight instructor, said. "There were about 10 to 15 students that did all the preparation for the event."

Some of the week's events are not easy for the public to view. However, the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer is going to be on display Thursday and there will be a Black Aviation's speech as well, Kristin Magette, coordinator, said.

There will also be numerous sponsors with booths set up in the hangar on campus for students and the public to view. Many of the exhibitors are major airlines and plane-building companies.

To participate in SAFECON, teams had to qualify and receive bids from prior competitions.

GlobalFlyer available for viewing

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After being out of the spotlight for almost two months since making its historic non-stop flight around the world, the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer will be on display Thursday at the Salina Airport.

K-State-Salina Associate Dean of Students Dixie Schierlman said there have been several requests from the public to see the plane.

"There has been huge interest because it is such a unique airplane," Schierlman said. "It's just really exciting for people interested in aviation to know it's been around the world."

The plane, which took off from Salina, made the 23,000-mile journey around the world in 67 hours. It will be on display in conjunction with "The Dreamers and Achievers" panel discussion and the national Safety and Flight Evaluation Conference being held at the Salina Airport.

SAFECON, which began Tuesday, features about 30 of the top collegiate flight teams from around the country.

"We definitely wanted to be able to share the excitement with the community and people who were involved and who supported the GlobalFlyer," Kristin Magette, coordinator of public and alumni relations at K-State-Salina, said.

The panel, which includes retired U.S. Air Force Lt. Col. Lee Archer, retired Kansas Civil Air Patrol Col. George Mills Boyd, retired Kansas Rep. U.L. "Rip" Gooch, Federal Aviation Administration air traffic controller John Hightower, Federal Express second officer Tahira Lamont Brown and Federal Express captain Clovis Jones Jr., will discuss the past and future of minorities in the aviation industry.

Dennis Kuhlman, dean of students at K-State-Salina, said in a news release the panel will add a historical element to the day's events.

Magette said all the events will tie in together.

"The event is an opportunity to build on aviation interest in the GlobalFlyer and the panel discussion will be something else for them to enjoy," Magette said.

The panel discussion will begin at 9:30 a.m. Thursday and the GlobalFlyer will be available for public viewing from 11:30 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Local youth show off talent at festival

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singers, instrumentalists and actors performed Tuesday night at the Manhattan Town Center.

The festival is sponsored by the Manhattan Town Center and is open to kids from kindergarten to 12th grade.

Jocelyn Umberger, customer service director for the Manhattan Town Center, said the festival is positive for the community and kids alike.

"It's a chance for the community to come see the local talent and gives kids a good platform to showcase their talents," Umberger said.

Cindy Okot-Kotber, eighth-grade student at Susan B. Anthony Middle School, placed first in the competition with her vocal solo "Angel of Mine." She participated in the competition last year as a dancer but did not place. She said she enjoyed the competition and the opportunity to sing.

"It's good experience and I wanted to perform more vocally. It was my first vocal performance in front of a big crowd," she said.

Okot-Kotber said she likes the expression involved with music.

"I just love music and it's a good way to express my feelings," she said.

Cindy Okot-Kotber sings "Angel of Mine" while competing in the Spring Music Festival finals at the Manhattan Town Center. Okot-Kotber took first place, winning a $500 mall gift certificate.

Heather Moore gives a dramatic presentation entitled "An Exciting Night & Day in My Life!" while competing in the Spring Music Festival.

Berkley Matthews, sixth-grade student at Salina South Middle School, placed second in the competition with a vocal solo, "I Want to be a Cowboy Sweetheart." This was her first year of participating in the competition, but she participated in the Star Search competition in Salina, where she took first place. She said she heard about the competition on the radio.

"I come over on Saturdays to watch my sister play soccer, and I heard about it on the radio and decided to enter," Matthews said.

Matthews said she has been singing since she was six and she enjoys it.

"I love to sing and it's fun for me to do," she said.

Wildcats eager to show fans improvements at annual Purple-White game

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats have said they are an improved football team since last season. Players and coaches have said the team has made strides after a 4-7 season in 2004.

As of now, fans have had to take their word for it. Saturday, at the annual Purple and White Spring Game, the Wildcat faithful can judge the team's improvement for themselves.

"It's important to show and get rid of all the doubts that we're going to be a 4-7 team," senior right tackle Jeromey Clary said on Tuesday. "I don't think we are. I don't think we need to see it ourselves, but the fans need to see it."

The Spring Game will mark the end of spring practice for the Wildcats, and the general response has been that the team is doing its best to bounce back from its first season without a bowl game since 1992.

Coach Bill Snyder said he had seen the play of both the offense and defense improve over the course of the spring.

Snyder highlighted a scrimmage last Saturday as a good practice for the Wildcats.

"From a defensive standpoint, I thought we played more aggressively, scrimmaged more aggressively," Snyder said. "We attacked the thrown ball more aggressively than we had and that just comes through with a gaining of confidence. I think we've tackled much better."

Wildcats win big against Sacramento State, 14-3

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Led by junior Joe Roundy's 3-for-4 performance at the plate and helped by three K-State home runs, the K-State baseball team rolled over the Sacramento State Hornets 14-3 Tuesday afternoon at Community America Ballpark in Kansas City, Kan.

In the first game of the Best of the Midwest Tournament, the Wildcats (21-18) fell behind early 3-0 before storming back to score 14 unanswered runs.

Freshman Brad Hutt started for the Wildcats, and picked up his first win of the season to move to 1-0. He gave up three runs, one earned, in five innings.

Things started slowly for Hutt, as the Hornets (18-23) claimed the early 3-0 lead in the second inning off three hits – an error and two safety squeeze bunts.

In the fourth, the K-State offense came alive, as the Wildcats plated four runs with senior Terry Blunt, senior Josh Dent, Roundy and junior Barrett Rice each scoring runs to give K-State its first lead. Blunt led off the fourth with a solo home run to deep right.

K-State scored six more runs in the fifth. Junior David Baker blasted a two-run homer in the seventh, and junior Steve Murphy added the third Wildcat home run in the eighth with another two-run shot, giving the Wildcats the final margin.

Eight of K-State's nine starters picked up hits on the day.

Senior Eric Rollins picked up his fourth save by throwing the game's final 4.0 shutout innings. Sacramento State's Travis Kane took the loss to fall to 2-3 on the season, as he gave up seven runs on eight hits in 4.2 innings.

The next action for the Wildcats will be at 7 tonight against New Mexico State at Community America Ballpark, as K-State finishes out the final game of the Best of the Midwest Tournament.

Joe Roundy went 3-for-4 to help the Wildcats to a 14-3 win over Sacramento State Tuesday afternoon at Community America Ballpark.

MEN'S GOLF

K-State prepares for Big 12 championship

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although the K-State men's golf team has never played at the Whispering Pines Golf Club– home of the Big 12 Championship this weekend in Trinity, Texas– the golfers are not concerned.

Why not?

Senior Matt Van Cleave said the Wildcats have re-established their confidence.

"We've had almost two weeks to get on top of things," Van Cleave said. "It's important to have a couple weeks before the post season to just practice. Everyone feels more comfortable."

After K-State's last outing at the FirstEnergy Intercollegiate in Akron, Ohio, the Wildcats felt their collective performance was weak. With roughly two weeks of uninterrupted practice, spirits are back up.

"I feel like I can compete with the rest of them again," junior Ben Kern, who struggled in his past couple tournaments, said. "The past few tournaments, I was bombed with schoolwork, and it was tough to balance. Now I've practiced every day and feel like I'm back in my groove."

Coach Tim Norris said he is feeling optimistic as well, despite no course experience for his team.

"I saw the course about three or four weeks ago, and I think it's going to set up well for our guys," Norris said. "It's a Jack Nicklaus-designed course, so it leaves the driving areas open. There's more skill needed around the green, though."

The 7,300-yard course, rated third best in Texas by GolfDigest, is longer than those to which K-State is accustomed, Norris said.

"That's a good thing, though," he said. "We're going to have to overachieve a little bit, but if we're playing well,

Lakers have no choice; put up the money to bring back Jackson

ANTHONY MENDOZA

How does a coach bash his former team's best player on the way out of town in a tell-all book, only to be considered to be brought back a year later?

If you have the season the Los Angeles Lakers did, you have no choice but to pony up the reported $10 million a year it would take to bring Phil Jackson back to Los Angeles.

Like a bad break up last season, the Lakers took their ball and went separate ways. Jackson went to Montana and then traveled the world. Shaquille O'Neal shed about 60 pounds on his trek to Miami, Kobe Bryant kept the house and owner Jerry Buss gave Bryant a big enough allowance to buy all the toys he wanted.

Unfortunately, Buss should have taken some of that extra cash he had lying around and given it to Jackson last year to get him to stay.

That would have started a domino effect that would have kept O'Neal in Los Angeles, Karl Malone from retiring and kept the sanity of L.A. in place.

But in order to make the deal happen and bring Jackson back to the Lakers, the battle of egos will need to be put aside for the betterment of the Lakers, which affects the entire NBA.

The Lakers were pathetic this year, but they are Jackson's best option of teams still without a coach.

If Jackson can rebuild this team as it is constructed now, he will erase his image as a coach who produces championships because he has always been blessed with superior talent.

The Lakers have talent, but not anything close to what Jackson is used to working with.

Bryant is one of the top-five players in the league and knows Jackson's schemes and the triangle offense. Lamar Odom can be molded into a Scottie Pippen-type player and former Texas Longhorn Chris Mihm could be Bill Wennington, Luc Longley or "fill-in-your-token-big-man-in-the-triangle" here.

What is likely is that Bryant steps up and, in order to clear his image, accepts Jackson as his coach once again.

A battle of immovable egos complete, the page turned.

NCAA | K-State's Zenger named A.D. at Illinois State

NORMAL, Ill. — Sheahon Zenger, associate athletic director at K-State, was named athletic director Tuesday at Illinois State University, which spent nearly a year seeking a new leader to boost its 19-sport program.

The 39-year-old Kansas native replaces Perk Weisenburger, who was ousted last June after heading the 20,000-student university's sports programs for five years. President Al Bowman said the athletic department needed new leadership.

Bowman said Zenger was chosen from about 65 applicants because of his "vision, his passion for excellence and his commitment to student-athletes."

Zenger, a K-State graduate who spent five years as an administrator at his alma mater, said he was drawn to Illinois State by the school's athletic tradition and commitment to academics.

MLB | Baird: Pena's job with Royals not in jeopardy

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals, who began play this week with the worst record in the major leagues, say they have no plans to change managers.

Pena

"Tony Pena is our manager this year, no doubt about it," general manager Allard Baird told The Associated Press on Tuesday. "We're not going to change the direction of the ballclub."

Coming off a franchise-record 104-loss season, the Royals are on pace now for an even more wretched campaign. Going into Tuesday night's game against Minnesota, they were 5-14, tied for second-worst after 19 games in club history.

MLB | Wells could be out for more than a month

BOSTON — David Wells went on the disabled list Tuesday and could be sidelined for more than a month after spraining his right foot.

NFL | Maximum number of steroid tests increased

NEW YORK — The NFL is tripling the number of offseason steroid tests each player can face, part of several changes to the league's drug policy that officials will tell members of Congress about Wednesday.

Players now will be subject to a maximum of six random drug tests during each offseason, up from two, NFL spokesman Joe Browne said Tuesday.

The league and union also had recently agreed to add new substances to the list of banned performance enhancers, to put in writing previously agreed-to policies to test for designer steroids and to lower the testosterone ratio threshold.

Facial hair can reflect personality

Male students forego shaving in favor of style

1. The Beard:
A full beard will have complete coverage of every part of the face possible. Can range in surface area and bushiness. Seen on Santa Claus, Jesus, friendly old men and your mother.

4. Sideburns:
A wide variety of sideburns exist. Conservative sideburns generally only go down to the end of the ear, while full-blown sideburns and mutton chops can be as long or bushy as the wearer chooses.

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is a ritual that all men go through. Once they hit that golden age, boys get taller, they trade their alto spot in the choir for a seat in the tenor section and they begin to sport facial hair.

Facial hair can be as original as the person sporting it. From the more common goatee and mustache to the humorous beards from the days of yore, facial hair comes in just about every shape, size, color and thickness. Even this fearless writer can be seen sporting mutton chops around campus.

The occurrence of facial hair often comes with the boredom of shaving.

"I was tired of shaving, and I wanted something different," Tyler Hands, senior in milling science, said. "I grew a goatee. It was something different."

Sometimes finding facial hair that looks good can come by accident.

"I got a lead role in my school musical. I was a truck driver, and I decided I should look the part," Alex Goossen, freshman in parks and wildlife conservation, said.

Goossen said that he has had the goatee ever since.

"When I first grew it, everyone thought I was crazy. I think I started a trend because by the time of graduation, about one-third of the class had some flavor of facial hair," he said.

The goatee can get itchy once in a while, but Goossen said that he will only trim his goatee, not shave it off completely.

Women on campus also have opinions about facial hair on guys.

"Typically I like goatees, not beards and mustaches," Kelley Bryan, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Bryan added that she would prefer no facial hair, but a goatee would be her limit.

Emily Ashton, sophomore in family studies and human services, also has an opinion on guys' facial hair.

"I like a little on the chin, maybe a little on the sides, but mostly on the chin," she said.

Ashton said that she would not make a guy shave his facial hair unless it got out of control.

No matter what type of facial hair the men decide to sport, make sure it is a good fit for the face and the personality. When considering facial hair, Ashton has this advice for all men on campus:

"I like a guy for his personality, not his facial hair," she said.

2. Mustache:
Facial hair that only covers the upper lip. Various subclasses range from pencil thin to handlebar mustaches. Most commonly associated with cartoon villains or porn stars.

5. Stubble:
The 5 o'clock shadow. Often a result of not shaving all day or an all-night drinking binge. Often enjoyed by scuzzy men, but is found attractive by many women to the puzzlement of facial hair experts everywhere.

3. The 'Chop 'Stache:
A mustache that originates in the sideburns and curves around the face connecting to a mustache. Think President Chester A. Arthur. What the writer of this story would like to grow when he finally reaches puberty.

6. The Goatee:
Carrying a wide range of subclasses, the goatee can be a half variety (chin only) to a full variety (chin, mustache and connectors). The full goatee is perhaps the most difficult to grow due to the connectors. Referred to as "chin pubes" by Alicia Silverstone in "Clueless."

Folds' latest album offers brilliant maturation

"Suburbs"

Album review by Michael Barnett
THE DIAMONDBACK (U. MARYLAND)

Somewhere along the line, Ben Folds dropped the Five and flew solo – and a smart move it was.

Though Folds saw some mainstream success with his band's mid-90s hit, "Brick," he decided to try out the solo gig and it worked out nicely. For the first time in five years, he is back with a band, but not the original one.

Folds returns with the follow-up to 2001's "Rockin' the Suburbs" as if he had hit pause four years ago and just decided to hit play. "Songs for Silverman" is a collection of brilliant piano-pop ballads. Dropping that whole "Five" thing has allowed Folds to bring his piano chops to the forefront.

And for fans of the "Five," "Silverman" sounds more like something Folds would have put out back in the day – with a more mature twist.

The album showcases some of Folds' best lyrics. It seems his maturation as an artist, and as a person, has caused his words to seem a bit more introspective. He turns to his daughter for inspiration on "Gracie," an almost-lullaby backed by an enchantingly cheesy progression.

His latest single, "Landed," a return to the Folds of old, is about being stuck in a stalled relationship and boasts the album's catchiest chorus. And in tribute to the late Elliott Smith, Folds penned "Late," a track about sharing experiences with someone as they did on tour in 1998. He sings about Smith's guitar playing and dirty, elbow-throwing basketball skills.

The self-produced album was recorded over the span of a month in a Nashville, Tenn., studio with Jared Reynolds on bass and Lindsay Jamieson on drums. The trio also enlisted the help of another 90s icon, "Weird Al" Yankovic, for backing in some soaring "oohs" and "ahs" on "Time." The songs on "Silverman" cover a range of emotions and styles, even including a country feel on "Give Judy My Notice" where Bucky Baxter sits in on pedal steel guitar.

While his style seems to lean more toward adult contemporary on a few tracks, Folds comes right back at you with a few great pop ballads. "Jesusland" kicks off with some harmonies reminiscent of The Beach Boys and moves on to sound a bit like Elton John, while "Bastard" feels a bit more like classic Folds.

People who pick up this disc foolishly searching for another "Brick" will be sorely disappointed – mostly because the track was so un-Folds in the first place. But those checking it out for the sake of hearing something fresh from one of the best rock-pianists of the last decade will be pleasantly surprised Folds hasn't lost a step.

Sure, "Silverman" has nothing on "Suburbs" musically, but it shows an outstanding musical maturation for Folds and a smooth transition into a new Ben Folds era.

Residence halls' leaders recognized

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the most prominent leaders from on-campus housing dined on dessert, all in formal attire, a prom-like atmosphere filled the main ballroom at the K-State Alumni Center as the outstanding leaders of the on-campus housing units were rewarded for their year of outstanding service.

The Leadership Banquet is an event held jointly by the National Residence Hall Honorary and the Association of Residence Halls each year to recognize the best leaders in the residence halls and the Jardine Apartment Complex.

"It has been an ARH tradition for many years," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said. "It is very important that we recognize the energy and the outstanding leadership we enjoy at K-State through our residence halls year after year."

The banquet is one of the largest events that ARH and NRHH hold each year and gives a chance for the 224 individuals in attendance to mingle and socialize, Craig Wanklyn, senior in architectural engineering and Leadership Banquet chair, said.

"This is the only time during the year that all students and advisers have a chance to get together," Wanklyn said.

Besides giving a chance to recognize hall leadership, the evening also gave a chance for the residence hall community to get together and relive memories from the year. Photo albums from each hall and Jardine were available, and several short films were shown.

"This is one of those events where they can get together and see faces they haven't seen all semester," Erica Mederos, senior in psychology and president of NRHH, said.

The theme for the evening was "Leader Ship," using the illustration of a shipping company that delivers leaders.

Several awards were given. Nine $500 scholarships were awarded during the banquet, all to be used for the student's housing the next semester.

Other awards were given for the halls' best advisers, students, and assistants.

Kipp Van Dyke of Goodnow hall received the Advisor of the Year award; Kelsey Jo Dorshorst, sophomore in psychiatry and Boyd hall resident, received the First Year Experience Award; Aleigha Ford, sophomore in sociology from Goodnow Hall, was the student of the year; Peter Wetzel, sophomore in elementary education from Van Zile Hall, was awarded the Multicultural Assistant of the Year award.

The Resident Assistant of the Year award was given to Nathan Vallette, junior in mass communications from Goodnow Hall.

The Hall of the Year award was given to Goodnow Hall.

The awards presented were provided by both ARH and NRHH, who split all the costs from the evening, Mederos said.

The ceremony has been in the works since the fall, Wanklyn said, although most of the work was done at the beginning of the spring semester.

"It takes an effort from everybody to make this thing possible," Wanklyn said.

Riley County registration due for Relay for Life

Cancer research event to take place June 17-18 at Memorial Stadium

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People from different backgrounds and beliefs will be joined together this summer in Riley County by one common bond – cancer.

Whether it is remembering someone lost to cancer, celebrating the life of a cancer survivor or helping to raise money for the cause, anyone in the area is invited to participate in Relay for Life beginning at 6:30 p.m. June 17 and ending at 6 a.m. June 18 at Memorial Stadium.

Renee Gassman, head of the team recruitment committee, said it's a rewarding event open to the entire community – survivors and current cancer patients, families, businesses, students, old, young – anyone.

"We invite anyone in the community to join in or just watch," Gassman said.

The only requirements are the desire to participate and the ability to form a team of eight to 15 members. Teams then gather donations prior to the event in an effort to raise money for a cancer cure.

The actual Relay is an all-night fund-raising walk – the largest in the nation. It is also an opportunity for all teams to come together, celebrate and show their support.

Entertainment will be provided all-night long, Gassman said.

"We kick it off with a survivor's lap at 7 p.m.," Gassman said. "Then, there'll be a disc jockey, food, an activity tent with teams running events, contests and a silent auction with baskets open to the public," Gassman said.

While the Relay is a fun, entertaining experience, it also serves as a time to remember and honor those lost to cancer, those who survived and those currently battling the disease.

Gassman said the most special part of the evening is the luminary ceremony.

"There are luminaries lining the track, with the name of a survivor or someone who's passed on the bag," Gassman said. "We light the luminaries at dusk and read the names aloud."

There is no deadline for team entries and no limit to teams entered for the Relay, Gassman said. However, adequate time is needed to gather a team and raise money.

In Riley County's 14th year teaming with the American Cancer Society to combat cancer through Relay for Life, Gassman said this year's fundraising goal is $75,000.

According to the American Cancer Society, one million people are diagnosed with cancer yearly. If you are interested in getting involved, contact Gassman at 539-8039 about organizing a team.

Restaurant owner to discuss competition

By Adrianne DeWeese

Thom Crosby will present the 31st annual Grace H. Shugart lecture Thursday at Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

Crosby is president and chief executive officer of Pal's Sudden Service, a Tennessee-based restaurant chain.

The Grace M. Shugart lecture series honors the former department head of dietetics, restaurant and institution management from 1957 to 1975.

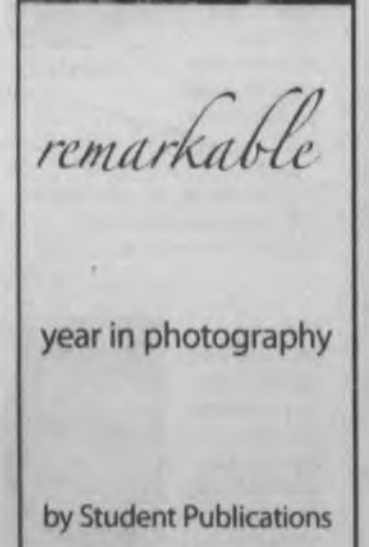
Crosby

Deborah Canter, professor and department head of hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics, said the goal of the lecture series is to bring in upstanding professionals in the two fields of the department.

Crosby won the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award winner for excellence in small business in 2001. His food service operation is the first ever to win this prestigious award.

"Anyone in the business world would benefit from hearing what he has to say," Canter said.

Mary Molt, assistant professor in hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics, said the lecture is a rare opportunity for the public to hear a Malcolm Baldrige award winner.



"The quality standards he has for his operation that had to be in place for him to win the award would be an interest to a wide variety of people," she said.

"We invite the entire K-State community to hear what he has to say," Canter said.

Development students reach out to elderly

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Instead of spending the evening in class Tuesday listening to a lecture, students in the Human Development class took flowers, word puzzles, lotions and other items to the residents of Homestead Nursing Home.

"Kids get more coming to nursing homes than having us lecture," John Proffitt, graduate student in human ecology, said.

The class has been visiting the nursing homes for six to seven years. They did not visit the homes the last two semesters because they had a total of 1,000 students.

Throughout the day, 375 students visited St. Joseph Senior Community during the day classes, and 75 visited the nursing home during the evening class.

When entering Homestead Nursing Home, the students were given the choice of either visiting with the elderly in the lobby or in their rooms.

Having the students give her a May basket made Genny Wittwer, resident of Homestead Nursing Home, remember giving May baskets when she was young.

"I've done May baskets before," Wittwer said. "We used to go around and put them on the doorsteps and run."

Kristen Buck, freshman in pre-nursing, said the program made the residents of the home realize that students today are not as bad as they are perceived to be.

"I hope they get in touch with their local students," she said. "We're not obnoxious, but caring."

Proffitt said when asked during class, some students were afraid to visit with the elderly in nursing homes.

"I hope this experience helps them realize the elderly still have a lot to do and a lot to say," he said.

Prior to going to the nursing home, Buck said she was nervous about visiting with the elderly.

"I was a little nervous because I didn't know exactly how to talk to them," Buck said. "It was okay though."

Tenborg said he enjoyed talking to the residents.

"I liked talking to Harold about baseball and dominos," he said.

During the past years, Proffitt said the residents of the home have enjoyed visiting with students and receiving the baskets.

"This is something they can enjoy," he said. "Sometimes they send a thank you card to Dr. Welch. They have an appreciation of the students coming out."

Studying abroad offers benefits

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can experience the life-changing effects of studying abroad both professionally and personally.

Jenifer Chambers, study abroad director, said a semester abroad makes students more marketable on a professional level. Employers are looking more at potential employees' international experience, given the global nature of the economy.

"We don't have a lot of exposure to different cultures and languages," Chambers said. "With this experience, no matter where you work, you'll be prepared for the global aspect of your career."

Opportunities to study abroad are available every semester and to every student who wants the chance. Kenneth Holland, associate provost for international programs, said college students have fewer responsibilities and there's no better or cheaper time to travel.

Students should consider all of their options. The area in which students plan to study should be of personal interest to them, Chambers said.

"There's so many possibilities," Chambers said. "You can go anywhere, really. The world's out there, go get it."

While the language barrier is often a consideration, many of the programs are taught in English. Students will largely use foreign language when communicating with local inhabitants and for conversing with students from other countries.

For most language programs, the minimum grade point average to qualify for study abroad programs is 2.5, but many programs don't have grade requirements.

Before leaving, students should confirm that they will receive credit for all classes taken abroad. The specific grades are actually graded in terms of pass or fail, easing students' concerns about hurting their GPA.

Despite the expense of studying abroad, scholarships and financial aid already allotted for the semester can be applied to abroad studies to help defer costs. Furthermore, many students find a semester abroad as a priceless experience.

Students should also verify their passports and make sure their destination doesn't require a student visa.

Medically, some countries or the language program may require additional vaccinations to ensure student health.

While it shouldn't be an issue, safety is always a concern for students studying abroad. Holland said the office of international programs strictly follows guidelines and warnings from the U.S. Department of State concerning areas of high risk for Americans.

Whenever in a foreign country, students should try to blend in. Either as an American or simply as a tourist, students could be targeted.

Chambers said one of the hardest struggles students face is being homesick. While getting homesick is more difficult in this age of technology, it's still possible, but there are methods to combat it, such as seeing an American movie, eating at McDonald's with other American students or buying a magazine with all the reminders of home.

However, students shouldn't let homesickness stop them from studying abroad or enjoying the experience while they're there, Chambers said.

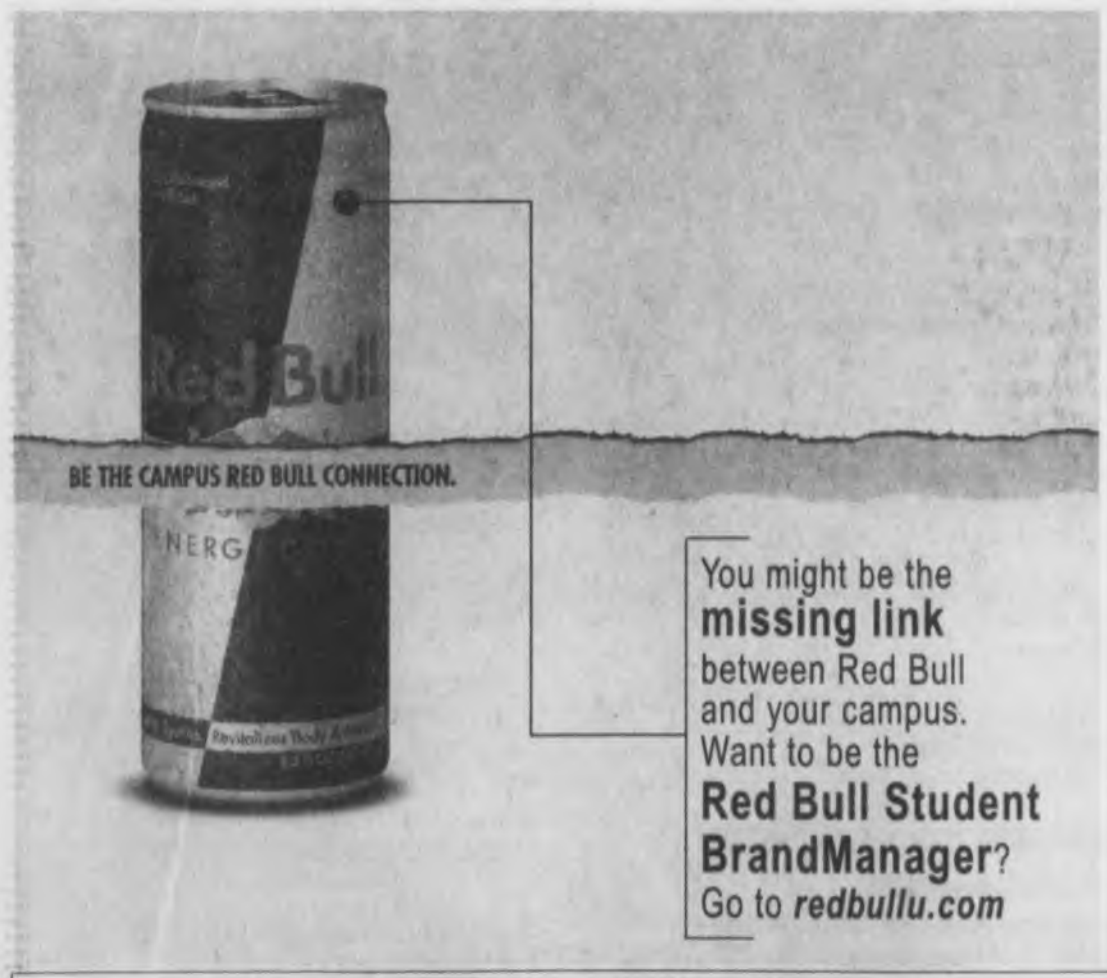
"Being somewhere exciting and being a little homesick is better than staying at home and doing the same old thing," Chambers said.

The greatest comfort when away from home is the solace students can find in their new friendships, Holland said. The friendships garnered can make any country reminiscent of home.

Holland said the greatest value of studying abroad is the understanding and personal insight students learn of other cultures.

"It makes students aware of the wider world around them," Holland said. "It helps them see how people in other cultures and societies look at the United States. It helps them change their prejudices or misconceptions of other cultures."

Brie Vankeuren, senior in industrial engineering, participated in the Semester at Sea program, traveling to Japan, China, Vietnam, Cambodia, Tanzania, Brazil and several other countries.



Vankeuren said the experience allowed her to see what the world holds, from the beauty of the Taj Mahal to the comparative nature of all human beings.

"I noticed more similarities throughout cultures than differences," Vankeuren said. "It seems like everyone's so different, but we aren't. People are all the same everywhere."

Students have choice of selling back books at Varney's, on online sites

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the semester comes to a close, thousands of students will try to give away or sell their books back to Varney's Book Store, the K-State Union Bookstore, over the internet or to their friends.

Even though the Union Bookstore and Varney's official buyback date is May 4, both stores buy back books year round, Dan Walter, Varney's textbook manager, said although the prices get better as finals week approaches, he said.

"Faculty are letting us know what books they are using, and once we know they are being used, the buy-back price goes up," Walter said.

Currently, both Varney's and the Union Bookstore average a total of 15 to 20 buy backs a day combined, Walter said.

However, during finals week, the numbers will be more than a thousand students a day.

Finals week is the busiest time for selling books back to the Union Bookstore or Varney's because almost everyone is done using the text and won't be needing it again next semester.

"Usually, if they don't need their books for finals, they sell them back the week before," Denis Threewit, the textbook supervisor at the Union Bookstore, said.

"If they do need them, they sell them back the minute they are out of their final."

During finals week, the busiest times are from 1 to 4 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, Walter said.

"People will have morning tests, then go to lunch when they're done, then come in to sell their books," he said.

To avoid lines, students should arrive earlier in the day or in the evening, Walter said. However, even when students arrive at rush hour, the wait is usually less then 10 minutes, he said.

Varney's and the Union Bookstore's used book supply comes from buying back from students, so they try to give students the best price possible, Steve Levin, the Union Bookstore manager, said.

"We buy back books because it's good business, it is a service to our customers, it provides us with a source of used books for next semesters students and it helps put cash in the local economy," Walter said.

Also, it is important for students to remember to bring their student IDs with them when they go to sell their books back.

Without it, neither Varney's nor the Union Bookstore will buy the books.

There are three factors that determine the price that students get for their books when they sell them back to either Varney's or the Union Bookstore, Walters said.

The first is whether or not an instructor will be using the book next semester. If there are none, then they generally will not buy the book back. Also, if the publisher is coming out with a new edition, the price will be lowered. Finally, the stores look at the national wholesale value for the book and set their prices accordingly.

"As a bookstore, we do not have a lot of control over those factors that influence book prices," Walter said. "In fact, we don't have any."

Even though both bookstores try to give students the most money for their books, some believe that they are able to get a better deal using Web sites.

"We by back books because it's good business, it is a service to our customers, it provides us with a source of used books for next semesters students, and it helps put cash in the local economy."

Dan Walter
VARNEY'S TEXTBOOK MANAGER

One of these sites is www.ksubooks.com, a Web site that allows students to post what classes they have textbooks for and gives that information to other registered users.

Branden Comfort, senior in finance and co-founder of the Web site, said that during this time of year, the number of books will begin to pick up, with between 500 and 1,000 textbooks being listed.

"Right now, it's a little down, but it will start picking up at the end of the semester," he said.

Comfort said that there are several benefits, but the most influential one is that generally, students are able to earn more money for their used books.

"If you sell a book to a friend, you will get a lot more money," he said.

"The way you work it out, it benefits both of you."

Chris Althoff, graduate student in business administration and project director for the Wildcat Information Network, said he uses the WIN portal to post his textbooks and estimates his average savings at around $150, compared to returning them to the bookstores.

However, Levin said that when purchasing books online, it's hard for students to know they are getting the right book and if they don't, it is even harder to try and track down the person who sold it to you and get them to return your money.

"We think we give a competitive price and as far as the student who purchases the book, it's a buyer beware situation," he said.

Aaron Apel, sophomore in philosophy, plans on selling his books both to the Union Bookstore and over the Internet, hoping to get the best of both worlds. He's already started selling back the books he doesn't need for finals.

"I needed the money right now and the class was over, so I just sold the book back," he said.

Apel said that even though he was able to buy books for slightly less then at either bookstore, it was difficult for him to find the right author and edition of textbook.

Also, the Union Bookstore was convenient for him, since it is right on campus.

"The biggest thing selling back to Varney's and the Union, they don't give you what your book is worth because they are trying to make a profit." Apel said.

However, Apel said his preferred method of finding textbooks was asking friends who had taken the class the previous semester for their texts, benefiting both parties.

In some cases, he has even been able to make a slight profit.

"I got this book from a friend. He charged me $30, and I got $35 back," Apel said. "Maybe I'll take him out to Wendy's or something."

Facebook holdouts avoid less personal communication

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It seems to be the obsession on college campuses these days – Thefacebook.

Checking and rechecking to see who the newest people are or if there is an invitation to a weekend party waiting, this Web site is becoming more and more of a social hub for activities at colleges and universities.

But, can it be? There are people who are not on members of Thefacebook, and, for various reasons, they are either waiting to join or will not join at all.

Scott Steinlage, junior in pre-education, said he has not joined because of a problem with his computer.

"(I haven't joined) probably because most of the time my computer's not working," Steinlage said.

"It's too big of a pain to try to go through everything to try to get it to work. Until I get it fixed, I probably won't be on it."

He also said the Web site is not as personal as face-to-face contact.

"I think it's definitely less personal, but I don't think that is always a bad thing," he said.

"If you want to call somebody, you can call, and if you want to drive over to their house, you still can.

"It's definitely less personal, but it's not the only option out there."

Another person who hasn't logged on is Brett Seeliger, sophomore in English.

"Eventually I probably will, but I am in no huge hurry. It's not like I'm losing sleep about not being on facebook."

Scott Steinlage
JUNIOR IN PRE-EDUCATION

He said he has just been too lazy to join.

"I don't really see the benefit I get from it," Seeliger said. "I'm not really against it; it just doesn't really appeal to me."

Although he is still not a member, Seeliger said he has watched others use Thefacebook and thought it was fun.

"It's a way for everyone to be connected," he said.

"It's a way to hear about what is going on. I'll probably join someday; I just haven't gotten around to doing it."

Thefacebook can be time consuming, but there are other vices in college life that can be worse, Seeliger said.

"People check it all the time, but it's not something that is overly time consuming so it's not something that can get in the way of your grades, like video games or drinking could," he said.

Another use for the site is looking for a person to ask on a date.

Steinlage said if people wanted to use it for that purpose, it was fine with him.

"That wouldn't work for me, but for somebody else, that might work for them," Steinlage said.

Seeliger said he has seen his friends use it to look for girls.

"There's always guys looking for hot girls and hoping or whatever," Seeliger said.

"There's a large amount of girls on campus there for the guys to check out and thumb through."

Seth Schultz, senior in information systems, said he has not joined because Thefacebook shares too much personal information.

"It's just kind of an intrusion, really," Schultz said.

He said that it just seemed like a fad and he preferred actual face-to-face contact with other people.

That way there is not any question as to who the person really is.

Seeliger said that there was a potential for people to stalk others using the information on the site.

"I haven't heard of any problems yet," he said.

"It's always possible with that much information for the public."

Overall, Steinlage said he was not in any hurry to be a part of the online community at Thefacebook.

"Eventually I probably will, but I am in no huge hurry," he said.

"It's not like I'm losing sleep about not being on facebook."

Last Syrian soldier leaves Lebanon; 29 years of fighting finally ends

By Sam F. Ghattas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEBANON – The difference between Syria's entry and exit was stark.

Twenty-nine years ago, its tanks and troops stormed into Lebanon, fighting in the mountains and descending on Beirut to restore order to a city ravaged by civil war. On Tuesday, Syria's last soldier quietly walked home across the border, ending the military domination.

Lebanon is at relative peace today. Many of the country's one-time warring factions united in the wake of the assassination of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri on Feb. 14 – and the world, which once tolerated Syria's intervention, told Damascus in one voice to get out.

The Syrian departure Tuesday was largely quiet, except for a modest military ceremony where military brass from both sides exchanged medals at an air base near the border.

A Syrian commander told Lebanese troops at the ceremony: "Brothers in arms, 'til we meet again." The Lebanese replied, "'Til we meet again" – using the Arabic phrase "ila liqaa," a breezier goodbye than the more formal "farewell."

"Brothers in arms, thank you for your sacrifices," a Lebanese commander then told the Syrians.

Lebanese army commander Michel Suleiman pledged continued cooperation and credited the Syrian army with ending the 1975-90 civil war and rebuilding Lebanese forces. "Together we shall always remain brothers in arms in the face of the Israeli enemy," Suleiman said.

The two dozen or so Lebanese who stood at the border were less charitable as they watched the last 250 Syrians leave – the remnants of a one-time mighty force of 40,000 that ran the country virtually unchallenged since entering in 1976 as peacekeepers.

"I feel like someone who was suffocated and jailed and has finally emerged from jail," said Shaaban al-Ajami, mayor of the Lebanese border village of Majdal Anjar.

"We don't want to say goodbye. We are happy to see them leave," said Hussein Mansour, 27, who stood at the border holding the lone Lebanese flag.

With the Syrians gone, Lebanese now look ahead to an election that should prove freer of Syrian influence but still runs the risk of sinking into violence. The anti-Syrian opposition is hoping to defeat Damascus's political allies at the ballot box.

Terrorist suspect eludes U.S. military

By John J. Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – U.S. forces in Iraq believe they just missed capturing most-wanted terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi in a February raid that netted two of his associates, a senior U.S. military official said Tuesday.

The official, who discussed the operation on the condition of anonymity, could provide no details on how Zarqawi escaped. U.S. forces recovered a computer belonging to Zarqawi, the official said, although he did not say how it was obtained.

Iraqi officials announced the Feb. 20 raid at the time but did not say Zarqawi was the target.

At a Pentagon news conference, Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, would only say, "we were close," but declined to elaborate, citing concerns about disclosing operational details.

"I think in general the intelligence is getting better. Having said that, we still don't have Zarqawi," Myers said.

Questioned about the level of insurgency in Iraq compared to last year, Myers said, "In terms of incidents, it's right about where it was a year ago."

Zarqawi, who has a $25 million bounty on his head, is believed to have orchestrated a relentless wave of car bombings, kidnappings, assassinations and beheadings across the country.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said of Zarqawi, that "in terms of lethality, I would rank him quite high," but added, "I think he is on the run. Life for a terrorist, extremist is hard."

Troops with a covert military unit were reportedly in place to arrest Zarqawi as he was on his way to Ramadi, but he caught wind of them, ABC News reported late Monday, citing an unidentified senior military official.

The official said that just before the meeting was scheduled, a car was pulled over as it approached a checkpoint.

A pickup truck trailing the car then turned and headed in the opposite direction.

Officials believe Zarqawi was in the fleeing truck, but when U.S. teams pulled the vehicle over several miles later, he was not inside, ABC reported.

CSA | Referendum fails to get 60 percent of votes

"Vicki did a great job," said Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

Bernard Pitts, director of the K-State Student Union, said Conner was able to unite Greek Affairs, Multicultural Student Organizations, Student Governing Association and Union Program Council in this project.

"She was able to do something that is rarely seen on this campus," Pitts said.

Conner said students were misinformed, which contributed to the "no" vote. She said she hopes it will happen in the future.

Senator Tim Weninger, sophomore in information systems, was not at the watch party. He said the student voice was heard.

"It's just pretty apparent that it's not what students want at this time," Weninger said.

He said he believes the money should go toward new classrooms, classroom improvement or something similar.

"I would like to see classroom improvement or educational enhancements. Something that's directly related to the quality of education," Weninger said. "There are ways that the money could be used more effectively."

CHARTER | Charter school's future still uncertain

Keith Miller, the chair of the charter committee, said the idea and support for a charter have been around for a while.

When the proposal was written, the committee knew there would be a lack of funding for a charter school, but the main goal was to get the grades from the state that come with any submitted application.

"We knew that all available funds were up and we talked with the state education department and decided to submit a proposal knowing there would be a lack of funds," Miller said. "The state reviews it. It's a lot like a big exam or turning in a term paper. We wanted the grades to see where we were strong and see where we're weak."

Passing the first charter application that Manhattan has submitted is important, because most charter applications are declined on the first submission, Miller said.

The future charter school is still up in the air, Miller said. He said there are still several options, one that would decline the acceptance and one that could accept it, but he has yet to see the graded application from the state.

He said one possibility that he heard the Manhattan school board might consider is accepting the proposal, but receiving no money for the first year.

"You wouldn't get money the first year, but you would get it the next year," Miller said. "You could see the first year as being planning time if you accepted it."

There's been some confusion as to having the charter school at Theodore Roosevelt, due to the fact that it is scheduled to be closed down by the 2005-06 school year.

He said the proposal for a charter school must designate a building, like Theodore Roosevelt.

"We figured TR would be the best location for many reasons," Miller said, "but it doesn't have to be there. We had to choose a building, and it could be changed to some other location later on."

Vice president of the Manhattan School Board, David Colburn, said the location for the building for the charter school isn't important.

"Some charters' locations don't exist, because they're virtual, they're online," Colburn said. "Part of what you can run into is a charter proposal might take over some other school, generally an old school where no one is in it, but we still have students at Roosevelt.

"As a general rule, all students are eligible to attend, and we could face challenges with the school and existing neighborhood."

FOOTBALL | Fans get first look at Wildcats Saturday

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Coach Bill Snyder argues a call made by officials against Texas Tech. Snyder said in a press conference Tuesday that a number of players will not play in the Spring Game Saturday.

Then, in a Monday scrimmage, offense rebounded, coaches said.

"The defense really got after us Saturday," running backs coach Michael Smith said. "Coach (Snyder) challenged the offense to come back on Monday. (Monday), we had the ball in our court, our kids responded well.

"Now, the challenge is to maintain it."

All practices are closed to the media and the public, as has been the policy under Snyder, and for the first time this year, fans will get to witness battles at the tailback, quarterback, offensive line and linebacker positions, among others.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said he will not judge his overall defense– which has had to fight through injuries to senior linebacker Matt Butler and senior defensive ends Scott Edmonds and Tearrius George this spring– based solely on Saturday's performance.

"I don't usually evaluate our defense based on the Spring Game," Elliott said. "So I don't know if (injuries) make much difference. Saturday's game is for show pretty much. We look at individuals, but as far as team– if we can't get our guys out there for Saturday's game, I don't know how much we lose."

Although Snyder and his coaches say the scrimmage will be a basic one and the 2005 season will not live and die by the Spring Game, giving fans the first opportunity to see the 2005 Wildcat football team is very important, Clary said.

"I think we need to get our confidence and our swagger back and get our fans back behind us again," Clary said. "I think they have kind of fallen off a little bit, but with the Spring Game and a good performance, I think they'll be right back with us."

Snyder said he is still debating some aspects of the scrimmage, such as whether to play his No. 1 defense versus the No. 1 offense.

Regardless of what he chooses, Snyder said he has a top goal for the Wildcats.

"I really want to see our football team play 60 minutes of fundamentally sound football," Snyder said. "That's what's really important to me."

News update

Football

- Coach Bill Snyder indicated a number of players will not play in Saturday's Spring Game. While he said as many as 10 players could be held, he singled out quarterback Dylan Meier, offensive linemen Greg Wafford and Logan Robinson and linebacker Matt Butler as those players who will definitely be held from the game.
- Tight end Rashad Norwood has not been practicing with the team and will not play in Saturday's Spring Game.

"He won't play and has not been practicing," Snyder said. "It's a combination of things. Physical can be a part of it, but it's some things beyond that as well."

- While Meier will not play in the game Saturday, Snyder said Meier will participate in some aspects of practice.

"He'll do some of the running game stuff," Snyder said. "We won't let him throw. He's doing quite well, and he'll get started on that probably around the first of June."

we're going to have no problem adapting."

In the competitive Big 12 Conference, Norris said Oklahoma State, ranked No. 1 in par-4 scoring and sub-par strokes per round, according to www.golfstat.com, should be the tournament's fiercest contender.

"OSU's ranked No. 1 or No. 2 overall," Norris said. "They've had a great year. There wouldn't be much disagreement that they're the best, no matter what conference they're in."

K-State's line-up of Van Cleave, Kern, senior Nick Schumacher and juniors Jonathan James and Tyler Cummins has more on its mind than just OSU, however.

The Wildcats are also motivated by the need to ensure their invite to the NCAA Central Regionals on May 19-21.

"We're fifth or sixth in the district, and we have to be in the top seven to get into Regionals," Van Cleave said. "If we play like we know we can, it will take care of itself."

The Wildcats tee off at 8 a.m. Friday for the first round of the three-round tournament, which ends Sunday.

Flight competition brings hundreds to K-State-Salina

SALINA, Kan. – Hangar 509 in Salina is at full capacity.

The 57th annual Safety and Flight Evaluation Conference is a four-day competition at K-State-Salina; Wednesday was the second day of competition.

There are 100 airplanes at hangar 509, 20 more than expected by flight instructor Heath Larson. Larson said 80 planes were expected, but many of the small schools brought more than he had originally thought.

"I went out to count the number of ties we had so that we could count the number of planes we could house for the competition," Larson said.

More than 400 competitors from 29 schools are in Salina Larson said. He said it was a surprise when more than 80 planes showed up in Salina.

"We are at full capacity. There are not any more spaces," Larson said.

The competition Wednesday began at 8 a.m. and ended at 8 p.m. with a viewing of the GlobalFlyer. Larson said that one school has been in Salina since April 18.

"They got to practice more than the people who showed up late because after it gets a bit more crowded, we start scheduling takeoffs," Larson

Daylight-Saving time likely to be extended to November

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States House of Representatives approved the energy bill Wednesday that will extend daylight-saving time by two months.

The energy bill includes $12 billion on tax breaks as well as provisions that will allow oil drilling in an Alaska wildlife refuge and protect makers of a gasoline additive from water contamination lawsuits, according to the Associated Press.

The new daylight-saving time would begin on the first Sunday of March and end on the last Sunday in November. It now begins in early April and concludes in October.

Supporters of the bill argued that it would save energy, equivalent to thousand of barrels of oil.

It was also acknowledged that it would do little to help lower high gasoline prices, but supporters determined that it would increase the country's energy supply in the long run.

The tax breaks will be offered to homeowners to install more energy efficient windows and insulation.

The Senate is expected to develop the bill in the next few weeks, hoping to finish in mid-May.

Nick Reid, press spokesperson for Congressman Jim Ryun, said Ryun was not directly involved will the formulation of the bill, but he supported it.

"This new extension still doesn't require all states to participate, but it is believed to that it will save energy costs," he said.

"Studies have shown that it would save $100 to $300 million a year."

The Senate must agree to the bill and it is likely that they will do so, according to the Associated Press.

$18.8 million parking garage would take 18 months to construct

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new parking garage on campus may soon be a reality.

Plans are underway for an $18.8 million parking garage located south of the K-State Student Union. Construction could start as early as summer 2006.

The garage will provide 1,406 parking stalls, which is a net gain of 966 stalls.

The estimated construction time is 18 months. During that time, no parking will be available in the Union parking lot.

However, there are plans underway to alleviate the amount of spaces lost, Darwin Abbott, director of parking services said.

"It's been discussed about running a bus service from the stadium," he said.

Bill Muir, assistant vice president of institutional advancement, said although having a shuttle from the KSU Stadium parking lot isn't ideal, gaining a parking garage will be beneficial in the long run.

"There is no painless way to get this thing in," he said.

Compared to other Big 12 schools and peer institutions, K-State is among the last without a parking garage. The University of Kansas has two parking garages.

The parking garage will be funded through parking fees over a span of 20 years. Student permits will increase $25 a year for three years, doubling the current fee to $150.

2 Fort Riley soldiers killed in Iraq

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Fort Riley soldiers were killed in Iraq.

First Sgt. Timmy J. Millsap, 39, of Wichita, Kan., was killed Monday after a homemade bomb exploded near his vehicle in Taji, Iraq.

Millsap
FIRST SGT.

Millsap was a combat engineer with Company A, 70th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division. He joined the Army in December 1984 and had been stationed at Fort Riley since January 1999.

This was his second time of service in Iraq for Operation Iraqi Freedom. He was deployed with the 3rd Brigade in March 2003 and returned 2004.

Another soldier was killed in a separate incident although his name was not released by Fort Riley officials.

However, the Associated Press reported that a family member identified the soldier as Sgt. David Rice, 22, of Sioux City, Iowa. His mother, Laurinda Finken, said Rice was killed Monday, northeast of Baghdad.

These incidents bring the number of Fort Riley soldiers killed in Iraq to 50.

Approximately 4,300 Fort Riley Soldiers are now serving in Iraq.

Task force to discuss use of remaining student funds

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are very few restrictions on how student fees can be used.

The referendum to fund a Center for Student Activities failed Tuesday. It was asking to redirect student fees and not increase them.

Students approved an increase of $10.27 per semester in fees in 1993 to fund Hale Library expansions. Fees could pay off the bonds as early as fall 2006 due to increased enrollment. The excess money goes into a reserve account.

"This is money that is in a surplus fund, and it can be used for any lawful purpose," said Keith Ratzloff, assistant vice president in the Controller's office.

Ratzloff said it is up to the students what is done with the money, but there are several options. One is retiring the bond early.

"If they decide to retire the debt early, then we could eliminate the $10.27 fee," he said.

Michael Burns, student body president, said Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore and he are

Tri-Delt wins lip sync competition

Photos by Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Pi Beta Phi's Katie Greenwood, senior in elementary education, participates in a Lip Sync competition Wednesday evening. The competition was at the Houston Street Ballroom.

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everything from rap to 80s pop rang through the Houston Street Ballroom Wednesday night at Sigma Chi's annual lip-sync competition.

The competition is part of Derby Days, a philanthropy project that has been put on since the early 90s. Last year, Sigma Chi raised $6,000 for the Children's Miracle Network during Derby Days and the fraternity is hoping to raise more this year.

The final fund-raising total for the year is nearing last year's, but there is still more fund raising to come. Tonight there will be a benefit dance competition as part of Derby Days.

Chris Heil, sophomore in criminology and co-coordinator for Derby Days, said the girls that perform make the competition fun.

"I love their participation because the girls really get into it," Heil said.

Brian Stout, junior in golf course management and member of Sigma Chi, participated in Derby Days for his third time this year. He said the participants make the competition interesting.

"Seeing the unique costumes and the girls getting into the events is what makes it fun," Stout said.

Stout said he was glad that the fraternity is doing the benefit.

"The best part is getting involved and having fun," he said. "After all, it's all for the kids."

Sigma Chi's Chris Heil, junior in criminology, Brian Stout, junior in golf course management and Parker Land, junior in business, entertain the crowd in the opening act for the lip sync competition as a part of Derby Days.

Jennifer Lyon, junior in history and pre-law and member of Kappa Delta, said she likes doing the competition.

"This is my first year competing," she said. "It's fun to get to know the guys and it's something that I can do that I like."

Lyon said she likes performing because she doesn't get worried about the crowd.

"I don't get nervous about performing so it's fun for me," she said.

Jake Olberding, freshman in construction science and member of Sigma Chi, said although he had never lip-synced before, the team did a fabulous job. He said part of the fun was getting to be crazy in front of the crowd.

"I just thought I would do it and go all out," he said.

Web site offers teacher evaluations

Pick-A-Prof publishes reviews, class comparisons, grade histories

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catering to more than 105 universities nationwide, Pick-A-Prof.com offers an online option to find reviews on professors, course comparisons or grade histories.

Karen Bragg, director of university relations at Pick-A-Prof, said about 650,000 students are registered on the site with 40 campuses recently added.

"We're just starting to let students officially know on some of these campuses," Bragg said. "So it's going to sound like a new service for a lot of people."

But this site isn't just for students. Professors are able to check what students are saying to help their teaching style.

"We're starting to have professors even review themselves," Bragg said. "They like that additional feedback, and it's an opportunity for feedback anytime in the semester."

Many students are familiar with the written teacher evaluations distributed by K-State at the end of each semester. Victoria Clegg, director of the center for the advancement of teaching and learning, said the center is in charge of processing semester evaluations.

"Student ratings were inaugurated to solicit student opinion to enhance professor ratings," Clegg said.

University policy states teacher evaluations will only be seen by the teacher over which the evaluation is done unless the teacher gives written permission.

Clegg said the questions asked of students to benefit a teacher would be different than those beneficial for students seeking advice or help on course decisions.

"It is probably different information than what students want to know about classes or teachers," Clegg said.

Advantages of Pick-A-Prof also include a new study-buddy system where students from the same class can compare notes and ask questions.

"If it's midnight, and you need help on your homework and there's no one you can call, you can see if there's anyone online," Bragg said. "It really connects students with others students."

While students can write reviews about professors and instructors, Bragg said each comment is proofed for profanity or obscenities. If the reviews are not appropriate for the Web site, they will be sent back to the student to revise their comments.

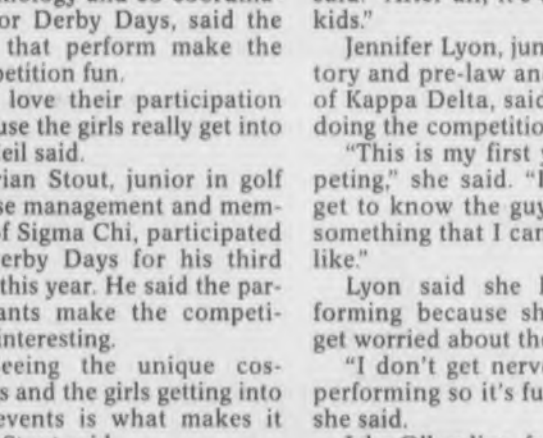
"We encourage students to leave good support," Bragg said. "We read all that comes in to make sure reviews are acceptable."

Although some comments could be helpful, Clegg said she did not think that online reviews will always be the most effective.

"I don't think it's very effective because you don't know which person that is," Clegg said. "When you ask a person about a class, you know what values you place on that person."

Even if changing classes does not work for every schedule, Bragg said the site can help students learn what to expect.

"Even if you can't pick your professor, you can prepare for the class," Bragg said.



The Web site will also be offering a new textbook exchange for students to swap books over the Internet.

"It's by students, for students," Bragg said.

Parking garage needed, overdue at university

Finally, the end to our parking problems may be in sight. The parking committee has come one step closer to providing an $18.8 million parking garage for students, faculty and visitors.

It is great to see some progress being made concerning the current parking chaos.

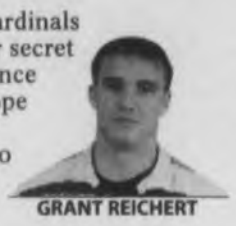
Although we have waited years for a parking garage, now is not the time to rush through the important decisions. It will be more beneficial to everyone involved if the parking committee takes as much time as needed to iron out the fine details.

The parking situation on campus has been a problem since the 1950s. The campus has been battling an ongoing struggle for parking spaces for more than 50 years and it's time to alleviate the problem. ,

K-State needs to catch up with the rest of the Big 12 universities that already have parking garages. The University of Kansas even has the luxury of having two.

It is disappointing that K-State is trailing the pack in a service that should be provided not only for students, but faculty, staff and visitors as well.

The parking committee should make sure that this time, the parking garage is more than just a false promise. It's time to make something happen and provide for the future of K-State.



To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Papal priorities

New pope can appease reformists by supporting complicated food pyramid

GRANT REICHERT

Last week the Cardinals emerged from their secret batclave to announce the new pope, Pope Benedict XVI.

But much to the chagrin of liberals, it turns out Benedict is Catholic. Can you believe that – another Catholic pope? What is this, some kind of conspiracy?

Liberals were perplexed a pope would hold Catholic views. They seemed to be expecting Pope Rainbow Juniper IV, who would sanction gay marriages (thus finally allowing men to become "fishers of men") and also recognize the sainthood of Edward Said (whose finger just completed its first miracle, appearing in a bowl of Wendy's chili in California, bearing the heavenly message, "I'm a finger, and I'm in your bowl of chili! Orientalism is racism!").

Don't get me wrong, I don't want to denigrate reformist Catholics. In fact, reformist Catholics have been such a large part of the history of our church that we have a special name for them – Protestants.

But liberals don't understand that part of what makes the Catholic Church great is its steadfastness through the ages. For example, they complain the Church is out of step with the times, and should endorse contraception instead of having people rely on the old "Vatican Roulette."

They want to reopen some of the most basic theological questions, such as whether Martin Luther could take the Pope in a bar fight, no schisms or Popemobiles allowed (I bet Luther would take a dive in the second and try to win on faith alone).

Many Liberals also think the Pope shouldn't speak out on political matters, because, c'mon, he's only Christ's Vicar on earth, not an actual Hollywood movie star.

But, I do have to concede that they make some very whiny points. Maybe the Pope shouldn't concentrate on upholding all those divisive Catholic beliefs, and should, instead, focus on things more applicable to people's daily lives – say, obesity.

According to my unscientific poll of Wal-Mart shoppers, the average person in America weighs approximately 767 pounds (467 if you don't count back hair, random filth accumulations, or small nesting mammals). Let me just say, as an adherent of the Thomistic thought tradition, that's friggin' fat.

Gluttony is a deadly, albeit tasty, sin. If you eat the wrong foods, you might catch obesity, a dangerous food-borne illness characterized by the inability to see one's lower half. Unlike upholding centuries-old church doctrine, a papal fad diet would be just the thing to win over open-minded Liberals.

Pope Benedict XVI could get a good start on his papacy by endorsing the newly revised USDA food pyramid. Sure, the pyramid is a tad complicated, but, as I read it, I've got to up my intake of the color red by five-thousand pixels a day or Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns will devour me.

The pyramid also said that I need to eat eight tablespoons of oil a day, but I was only able to choke down five before I was going into negatives on my intake of the color red (not to mention purple, orange and chunky).

The pyramid is also notable in that it includes exercise, a substance heretofore considered inedible, much like glass or Wendy's chili (miracle or no). It's unclear how I will incorporate this into my diet, but that's why we have a pope – not for all that judgmental, hurtful, WWJD-y moralizing, but, rather, to help us with stuff relevant to our daily lives, like losing weight, eating right, and not being devoured by Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns.

Because, let's face it: a Diet of Worms is outdated. We need a reformation.

Student evaluations poor measure of teaching quality

AARON DUNCAN

It is that time of year when large manila envelopes start materializing in classrooms and are quickly filled up with students' concerns, thoughts and beliefs about their professors on campus.

As a graduate student at K-State, I am torn. As a student, I should be allowed to express my feelings about my teacher, but as a GTA, I worry about whether students are qualified to assess me.

And the more I looked into the dynamic of student evaluations, the more concerned I became about the reliance on them by administrators. A wide variety research indicates that students reward teachers who give easy A's and few assignments.

Paul Trout, an English professor at Montana State University, wrote in the Commonweal on April 21, "To earn high scores, instructors must give students what they want. And what a lot of students want nowadays are stress-free classes, 'understanding' instructors, easy-to-get high grades and undemanding workloads – in essence, 'education lite.'"

And instructors have every reason to want good evaluations. Tenure, pay raises and future employability all ride on students' opinions of them.

Further, studies indicate that how much students learn in a course is not at all related to how high they score on student evaluations. A study published in the July/August 2003 edition of the Journal of Education for Business reported that students in beginning accounting courses who ranked their instructors as being low in quality actually learned more than students under different instructors who ranked their teachers higher.

The study summarized that the reason certain teachers got better evaluations despite teaching their students less was due to the fact that they on average gave higher grades and demanded less.

The Latin phrase "en locos parentis" is used to describe the role of teachers. It translates into "in place of parents," meaning that when students go to school, teachers in effect take on the role of parent. Students do not understand their teachers.

If trends continue, we may very well come to exist in an academic world where we treat education as a consumer-driven industry.

However, this is not to say that students should not have some input into their evaluations of their teachers. When students criticize bad teachers, they do so with just cause.

An improved system of evaluations needs to be developed. We border between two extremes: the old way where students had no input into the system and the new where students have too much.

We have to avoid a system like the one characterized in the February 2004 edition of the Chronicle of Higher Education by Stanley Fish, Dean Emeritus of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at the University of Illinois at Chicago.

Fish warned against a system where "decisions affecting the career and livelihood of countless junior scholars would be inflected by the ill-informed opinions of transient students with little or no stake in the enterprise."

Part of the burden falls on students to honestly evaluate the jobs done by professors.

Mission accomplished: SGA zero, Collegian one.

To the girl that hit that truck last night at the Rec: we got your license plate number and left the truck owner a note. So, hope you're honest next time.

So I just walked by a car in the parking lot with a garter in the window and a Dungeons and Dragons book in the back seat. Does that mean he has a level-17 hooker?

Aren't you guys up for budget review next year? Hmm, nice try.

Ryan: seriously, calm down!

I just saw a guy installing a brand new subwoofer in his car whose trunk was currently held down with duct tape. Awesome priorities.

Hey resident guys: do the letters FO mean anything to you?

Turns out a golden shower is something completely different in Marlatt.

I really don't care how apathetic I am.

To the FIJIs who lost the fight Sunday night at Kites: I'm sorry guys, it happens sometimes, but calling the Fourum and whining about it just makes you guys look worse.

Did anyone else see that cloud that looked like a penis?

Let's see. $10.27 is not going to the CSA, maybe we can go to get a new student newspaper on campus.

Hey Collegian: if you're gonna criticize something, come up with a better solution. That you don't have. Great leadership.

It's not over. I'm contesting the results.

Americans speak out against filibuster policy change

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As most people were getting off work, groups of community members and K-State students joined together on Wednesday to protest the Bush Administration's agenda and the Republican leadership's threat to change the filibuster policy in the Senate.

"Today is part of a nationwide, organized protest through Moveon.org," said Christopher Renner, member of the Flinthills Human Rights Project and the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice. "More than 180 protests are happening today across the nation."

Renner said his reason for protesting is due to "overreaching by the Bush Administration into the judiciary," and to try to protect civil liberties.

Currently, Senate Democrats are threatening to filibuster nominees they view as radical.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) said Sunday it was not 'radical' to ask senators to vote on judicial nominees as he hardened his effort to strip Democrats of their power to stall President Bush's picks for the federal court, according to the Associated Press.

Kristina Kramer, junior in sociology and member of MAPJ, said she shares the same concerns as Renner.

Bonnie Brestelli, senior in art history, stands out at the corner of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue Wednesday afternoon protesting against the current Bush agenda.

"I just want to help raise awareness about the fact that Bush is trying to stack the courts with new justices that are conservative Republicans," she said. "We should be worried about abortion laws and our civil liberties in the next few months and years."

Others in attendance said they wanted to help increase the national dialogue.

"America is descending into fascism," Cortney Barackman, senior in philosophy, said. "People forget what fascism means.

"We're silencing the minority voice (by denying the filibuster of nominees) – it's tyranny," she said. "The courts are the last protection from tyranny of the government."

Shakes offers custard desserts

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The local snack and dessert market just got a little more competitive with the official opening of Shakes, a 1950s-themed ice cream drive-through.

Pebbles McIver, general manager, said the turnout for the opening has been steady.

Tuesday was Shakes unofficial opening.

"To follow that up with having consistent sales all day to day has been very promising," she said.

Shakes makes a custard-based ice cream, offering vanilla and chocolate.

"What makes the store unique is the number of multiple toppings offered to enhance the smoothness of our ice cream," she said.

McIver said the sizes vary as much as the cost, ranging from small to extra large, from $1.39 to $4.39.

"Shakes is very much drive through, though we do possess a picnic area that has umbrellas for sunny days as well as benches," she said.

McIver said there is an added incentive for K-State students, as they and alumni receive 10 percent off with an ID.

Tom and Joyce Watkins, of Alma, Kan., were two of the customers who came to Shakes's opening. They said they were big fans of custard-based ice cream.

"Custard-based ice cream tastes more like homemade, though it can often be a little more pricey," Joyce Watkins said.

Mimi Balderson and Chuck Jackson, both Manhattan residents, were trying to decide where to eat dinner when they decided on Shakes.

"My recommendation would be to stick with the vanilla, but try the different toppings each time you come to get the assortment of flavors," Balderson said.

Nuclear weapons conference offered in Abilene, Manhattan

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Conferences highlighting nuclear weapons policies will be today and Friday.

Jack Holl, director for the Institute, said an important part of the conference is the history.

"Management and control of nuclear arms and technology, or weapons of mass destruction, is probably something the U.S. has been dealing with for over 50 years. The first president after World War II to address the issue of nuclear arms was Dwight D. Eisenhower," Holl said.

Holl said the Eisenhower administration has a legacy in nuclear policy.

"Much of the legacy of nuclear administration and policy can be traced to the Eisenhower administration. The current president's policies of non-proliferation are similar to what Eisenhower was doing," he said.

The keynote speaker, Susan Eisenhower, is Dwight Eisenhower's granddaughter. She is presenting a lecture today called "Establishing the Nuclear Parameters: The Eisenhower Legacy."

On Friday, the lectures will be "Non-Nuclear Weapons of Mass Destruction," presented by Justin Kastner, Jason Ackleson and David Franz; "From Eisenhower to Today," presented by Elaine Tyler May, General Donn Starry and Alex Burkart; "Eisenhower's Nuclear Policies," presented by President Jon Wefald; and "Roundtable on Eisenhower's Nuclear Legacy," presented by Donn Starry, Sergei Khrushchev, Elaine Tyler May and Cargill Hall.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Kan. – On a chilly night at Community America Ballpark, the Wildcats remained hot and took down the New Mexico State Aggies 6-4.

With the win, the Wildcats have won seven of their last eight ballgames.

"We are playing much better baseball and have a positive feeling when we come to the ball park," Coach Brad Hill said. "It's not really one guy for us. It's people coming up with plays all up and down the lineup."

The Aggies (22-19) struck first, as they took the lead in the top of the fourth inning when Luke Hopkins hit a no-out RBI shot into right field off K-State starter Brett Muegge. The Aggies inflicted no further damage, as Muegge got himself out of a two-on no-outs situation by getting a strike out and an ending-inning double play.

In the bottom of the inning, the Wildcats (22-18) tied the game up at 1-1 off junior Barrett Rice's single that scored senior Josh Dent.

After the Aggies took a 2-1 lead in the top of the fifth, the Wildcats scored four runs in the bottom of the fifth off sophomore Jared Goedert's single, a Tamar Kvaratskhelia returns a volley during her match against Texas. K-State begins the Big 12 Women's Tennis Championships as the 10th-seed and will face 7th-seeded Oklahoma.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team kicks off the Big 12 Tournament in Austin, Texas, today as the No. 10 seed, with an opening round match against 7th-seeded Oklahoma.

The Wildcats (8-11, 3-8) are facing the Sooners for the second time this season, after falling in the first match to the Sooners 6-1 in Norman, Okla. K-State owns the all-time series record at 19-7, and has a 2-1 record on neutral courts.

K-State enters the match in the middle of a season-long, four-match losing streak, with all four losses coming in Manhattan. The Sooners are losers of three of their last four, with the lone win coming at home against Missouri.

The last time the two squads faced off in the Big 12 Tournament was in 2001, when K-State beat Oklahoma 4-0.

Despite struggling late in the season, numerous personal records fell this season.

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia set the single-season wins record with a mark of 30-6, and was the only Wildcat to collect a victory in the first match against Oklahoma. She also set the record for the highest winning percentage in K-State history, winning 83 percent of her matches at the No. 2 singles spot.

Senior Maria Rosenberg enters her final Big 12 Tournament as a Wildcat owning the all-time singles win record at K-State with a career record of 78-51.

The key to the match, as it has been all season, may be the doubles point. The Wildcats are 7-2 when capturing the doubles point, and 1-9 when losing it.

K-State dropped the doubles point the first time out against Oklahoma, 2-1, but came close in the No. 2 doubles match, losing 8-6.

K-State's match against the Sooners begins at 1:30 p.m. at the Penick Allison Center. If the Wildcats win, they will face No. 2-seed Texas in the second round at 3 p.m. Friday.

Chiefs complete a successful draft, address needs on defense

NATHAN RYERSON

I would like to send my thanks to the Kansas City Chiefs' front office, coaching staff and general manager for not completely screwing up the draft this year.

The trend over the years has been that the Chiefs are terrible at drafting talent.

Anybody remember Percy Snow? I didn't think so.

This year, the exact opposite can be said.

As a matter of fact, I give the Chiefs an A- for their picks in this year's NFL draft.

The Chiefs are now ready to compete. All the pieces are on board and a strategy can now be assessed.

In a pre-draft move many thought would not happen, the Chiefs picked up a two-time pro bowler from the Miami Dolphins when they acquired Patrick Surtain, who will be able to come in and provide an immediate upgrade in a lacking secondary.

The draft itself could not have gone better.

In the first round, a projected top-10 pick Derrick Johnson from the University of Texas slipped through the cracks and fell into the Chiefs' lap. He was tagged by some as the best defensive player in the draft.

He is now a Chief and will compete – and should obtain – a starting job in the Kansas City linebacking corps.

The Chiefs made other solid choices throughout the draft besides Johnson. In the fourth round, the Chiefs addressed their need at wide receiver by drafting Craphonso Thorpe from Florida State.

Thorpe would have potentially been a first-round pick had he not broken his leg during his junior year as a Seminole. Instead, he ended up in the fourth round, and now, he has the potential to come in and add immediate depth to an aging crop of wide receivers.

The only draft pick the Chiefs made that I am uneasy about is Tennessee punter Dustin Colquitt. Colquitt is a good punter, but taking him with a third round pick doesn't sit well.

At that time in the draft, there were other players that would have made a bigger impact in the future.

Even though they signed Surtain, the Chiefs still have a lack of depth at corner. Instead of the punter, the Chiefs should have drafted Travis Daniels from Louisiana State. He helped establish a solid secondary for LSU when they won the national championship two years ago.

Besides Colquitt, I cannot fault any of the other picks in the draft. In the later rounds the Chiefs picked up two offensive tackles that will help give depth to one of the oldest offensive lines in the NFL.

The Chiefs also drafted James Kilian, a quarterback from Tulsa, in hopes of maybe finding a talented backup for Trent Green, and hopefully develop into a seasoned starter for the Chiefs.

Overall, Carl Peterson earned his salary for this next year. The draft was a success and the Chiefs appear set to make a run for the Super Bowl next season.

Volleyball | Wildcats close out spring season

The K-State volleyball team concluded its spring schedule over the weekend by compiling a 10-1 record in games against Southwest Missouri State, Arkansas, Memphis and an Arkansas Alumni squad.

K-State's record during the spring was 24-3, and the Wildcats won every match except two, 1-1 splits with Nebraska-Kearney and Southwest Missouri State.

Coach Suzie Fritz and the Wildcats open the 2005 season Sept. 2 in Fayetteville, Ark., at the University of Arkansas Tournament.

Tennis | 2 named Academic All-Big 12 1st team

Senior Maria Rosenberg and junior Jessica Simosa of the K-State women's team were named to the 2005 Academic All-Big 12 First Team on Wednesday.

Rosenberg

Simosa

It is Rosenberg's second honor, while Simosa earned the award for the first time in her career.

Rosenberg, a modern languages major, became K-State's career singles win leader with 78 wins this season.

Simosa, a business management major, has totaled 20 wins this season — a career high.

NFL | Congressman says steroids policy 'not perfect'

WASHINGTON — The NFL's steroids policy is tough, "but it's not perfect," the head of a congressional committee said Wednesday, adding that he plans to introduce a bill governing drug testing across the spectrum of U.S. sports.

Rep. Tom Davis opened the House Government Reform Committee's second hearing on steroids by saying the NFL had been more cooperative than Major League Baseball was when its drug program was examined publicly by the panel last month.

But saying that all sports leagues must "acknowledge that their testing programs need improvement," the Virginia Republican added that he and ranking Democrat Henry Waxman of California, along with Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., are working on legislation to create uniform policies for major sports.

CFB | Fiesta gets 2007 title game, BCS seeks new poll

PHOENIX — The Bowl Championship Series is looking to establish a new poll to help determine the teams that will play for the national championship.

BCS member athletic directors made it clear at their meeting Tuesday that they prefer starting a new poll to replace the departed Associated Press rankings, rather than making radical changes to their formula, BCS coordinator Kevin Weiberg said.

Also on Tuesday, the Fiesta Bowl organization was awarded the first national college football championship game under the new, expanded Bowl Championship Series format.

Beginning in the 2006 season, there will be a new game to determine the BCS national champion, a contest separate from the four existing BCS bowls — the Fiesta, Orange, Sugar and Rose. In essence, it means that two more schools will qualify for a BCS contest.

NHL | Bertuzzi still out of league indefinitely

NEW YORK — Todd Bertuzzi and Steve Moore were in the same room, but nowhere near each other — and not at all close to a return to the NHL.

Bertuzzi

Bertuzzi needs permission from commissioner Gary Bettman to resume his hockey career. Moore needs a much better medical report because he's still feeling the effects of Bertuzzi's blindside punch to his head nearly 14 months ago.

Moore might never play again because of the hit he took during the game in Vancouver on March 8, 2004.

Spicing it up

Students experiment with sex toys, no need for embarrassment

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether to spice up sex in a relationship, fulfill the requirements for a white elephant gift or just as a replacement for a partner, there is a sex toy out there for almost any need.

However, opening up to the wide and wonderful world of sex toys can be an embarrassing and daunting task.

No worries, it is perfectly healthy and natural, and no matter what you think, there is always someone out there who is much kinkier than you.

In some occasions, ownership of a sex toy occurs by accident. Heather Kirk, freshman in secondary education and history, said that she came to own a vibrator because of a prank Christmas gift.

"I worked at a restaurant with a lot of older women who talked very openly about their sex life and sex toys," Kirk said. "One day, the ladies asked me if I owned a sex toy and at the time, I did not."

At a Christmas party, the waitresses presented Kirk with her prank gift. They had purchased a dildo for Kirk in a package that read 'Good 'n Horny.'

"One of the waitresses walked into the room, turned it on and set it on the table in front of me," Kirk said. "I was shocked at the time, but in retrospect it was really funny."

For those interested in purchasing a sex toy for themselves, it is important to decide what you find arousing, said Jesse DeBey, junior in women's studies at Wichita State University. Some women prefer clitoral stimulation, others prefer vaginal penetration, and some prefer double penetration. There are many types of toys with a variety of features, so it is easy to find the best toys for you, she said.

When buying a toy, there are many outlets to purchase one. For those wanting to shop in the privacy of their homes, the internet is littered with many stores that have a near endless stock of products.

"I recommend the site www.goodvibes.com," DeBey said. "They have information on all types of sex toys as well as various supplies that one may need such as cleaning supplies for toys, how-to books and lubricants."

DeBey said that an easy way for a woman to determine if a vibrator is right for them is to hold the toy under your nose to your septum at its highest speed. If the vibrator is annoying, then it is too strong, but if it merely tickles, then the vibrator will work well for you, she said.

There are also a wide variety of sex toys available for men as well. Everyone can benefit from sex toys, DeBey said.

"It's gotta beat a sock and some hand lotion," she said.

Sex toys can be beneficial for a number of reasons. They are an alternative for someone who is not in a steady physical relationship or for couples who don't want to have sex for risk of STDs or pregnancy. Also, using sex toys can be a safe and excellent way to relieve stress and tension, DeBey said.

"There is no need to be embarrassed, there is no shame in masturbation," DeBey said. "Open communication is best in a relationship and there is no need to be ashamed about masturbation or your own sexual desires."

Fast facts

Sex toy safety

- Stay clear of products made from jellys, nonoxynol-9, and lotions and potions. Using jelly products for oral, vaginal, or anal stimulation is going to introduce Phthalate and other toxic solvent absorption into the mucous membranes of the body. These chemicals provoke eye, respiratory, skin, and mucous membrane irritation. Headaches, cramps and nausea are side effects that result from exposure.
- If the pitch for a lotion or potion sounds like a hoax, it probably is. Anal desensitizing cream, orgasm lotion or stay-hard potion normally turns out to be a bogus joke along the same vein as hair growth tonics and breast growth miracle pills.
- When it comes to toys, don't swap fluids. Slip a clean condom over toys before you use them and use a fresh condom when switching partners.

Take unwanted older men home to see parents

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My friends and I always get hit on by old nasty guys at the bars. How can I get these guys to leave me alone?

A: The old guys at the bars who hit on college girls always crack me up. You really have to have a pair to even try this. I have trouble finding things to talk to freshman girls about, so I can't even imagine what these 40-plus-year-old guys have to say to college girls.

But I can't knock these guys too hard, because I aspire to be the old guy hitting on younger girls when I get old.

But for now, I will give you some tips to get rid of these guys. Just don't use them on me.

The best line to use when an older man is hitting on you is to ask him if he is in one of your classes. This works great when used on a gross older guy who is obviously not taking any college courses.

He will realize that your dating pool is centralized within your classes on campus. And it will embarrass the hell out of him when he realizes that you know for a fact that he isn't in your class and that you've noticed how old he is.

Another good one is to tell the older man that he looks familiar and then ask him if he is one of your friend's dads. This will make the guy suddenly realize how old he looks to you. And when he realizes that he could have a daughter your age, this should freak him out. I say "should" because you never know. There are a lot of weirdos out there.

One more way to get rid of these old guys, and people in general, is to invite them somewhere that they will definitely not go since the event would embarrass them tremendously.

When one of these predatory old men starts hitting on you at the bars, tell him that your parents are in town for the weekend, and that you would like him to come have dinner with them so he can meet your dad.

This should send him running for the hills, but if not, you better run for the hills.

Note: Someone accused me of making up the questions for this column in the Fourum. Of course I make up some of the questions, idiot. The last question was "what's your favorite kind of alcohol." Who the hell would care what kind of alcohol I like to drink. Think about it.

Most of the questions I answer are real. I make up questions when I don't get any good ones submitted.

And trust me, some of the questions I get are ridiculous and make no sense at all. Also, I make up questions whenever I feel like it because I can.

If this bothers you, e-mail me some good questions. And by the way, today's question was real.

Fight Night promotes boxing for amateurs

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For people with dreams of becoming a boxer, there is a chance to see if they have what it takes.

Silverado Saloon will be host to Fight Night tonight, where amateur fighters can duke it out for a prize of $150.

Weigh-ins begin at 8 p.m. There are three weight classes: 160 pounds and below is lightweight; 161-185 pounds is middle weight; and 186 pounds and above is heavy weight.

The competition is open to both men and women. Those wanting to fight can either register online at www.knockoutevents.com.

Shane Swartz, owner of Knockout Events, said Fight Night has been attracting a solid crowd in Manhattan since it first came two years ago.

"In Manhattan, they're very popular," Swartz said. "We usually have about 300 people."

Fight Night has tournament style boxing, with each weight class having a championship fight. The three champions receive $150 and a championship belt.

Each fight has three one-minute rounds, with a one-minute break between each round.

Even though Fight Night is for amateurs, safety is taken seriously. Boxers are required to wear headgear and use 20-ounce gloves.

Swartz said injuries are a rarity at Fight Night. If fighters are injured, the round is called early and they get a chance to recover.

Swartz said a lot of the fighters come because they want a taste of the boxing life.

"They want the money, they want the popularity and fame that comes from it, they want bragging rights to their friend," Swartz said.

If you go

Fight Night

What: Silverado Saloon in Aggieville

When; Weigh-ins begin at 8 p.m., doors open at 9 p.m., fights start at 10 p.m.

How much: Tickets cost $10 at the door.

Businesses not suffering from Wal-Mart

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Contrary to popular belief, there is plenty of business in Manhattan for both Wal-Mart and local businesses.

The Wal-Mart Supercenter has been open for more than a year.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said unlike in some communities, Manhattan has enough business growth to complement the grocery and retail demands of the community.

"Wal-Mart has done well in Manhattan, and it hasn't been at the expense of most businesses," he said.

"Many of Manhattan's local and regional retailers have opened new stores to accommodate the growth we've experienced. We've seen the people of Manhattan and the surrounding areas choose to stay and shop in Manhattan, and because of that there has been an influx in prosperous businesses," he said.

Butler said when national chains such as Wal-Mart look to move into Manhattan, the population size, the possible income, and their potential demographic all play a huge part.

"What people need to realize with a store like Wal-Mart is that despite people's perceptions, people continue to shop there. People would not shop there if they did not like the service and the price," he said.

Christi Gallagher, spokesperson for Wal-Mart, said that the community of Manhattan has done a good job embracing it since its inception.

"The Wal-Mart Supercenter has consistently been a great store for us. It is the second oldest store in the state of Kansas. The store was built in 1971, and was the 35th Wal-Mart store overall," she said.

Gallagher said the Manhattan Wal-Mart surprisingly sells a lot of yogurt to customers.

"Yogurt seems to be a healthy snack alternative for the kids and college students in the community," she said.

"Also, we always seem to have strong results in the furniture, and back-to-school type items, as students look to continually furnish apartments and dorms while needing the necessary supplies for classes."

Gallagher said the community of Manhattan likes to be able to deal with several errands at once.

"People's busy schedules often make Wal-Mart the current place for one-stop shopping, allowing people to handle things like groceries and an oil change, all at once," she said.

Su-Ella McKinzie, director of advertising and public relations for the Dillons grocery chain, said Dillons could not directly comment on a competitor's impact but wanted to stress that a store like Dillons remains an integral part of the community.

"Dillons has been in the Manhattan community for quite a while. Dillons is viewed as being important to Kansans, as it is a hometown grocery store. We are proud of the services offered to our customers," she said.

McKinzie said Dillons prides itself as one of the faces of the Manhattan community.

"We've recently made renovations to one of our stores, in a major celebratory event," she said.

FLIGHT | K-State team competes in flight competition at Salina campus

said.

GPS systems are going to be used for judging for the first time, Larson said. Most of the planes already have these systems, but he said the pilots have to use only compasses.

This is the first time the competition has been in Salina since 1999, but regional competition was at Salina in 2002, Larson said.

Jill Hudson, sophomore in professional pilot, said the K-State team competing this week is only half-experienced because only half of the members were in the regional competition.

"We had lots of people join at the middle of the semester," Hudson said. "But it's still hard to say whether or not that will affect our competition status."

Inside the hangar, a new G100 Cessna aircraft was on display by K-State-Salina. Andrew Waterland, sophomore in professional pilot, said K-State got the plane only days ago and was one of the first aviation schools to get the plane.

"We're excited about the new plane," Waterland said. "But we won't be using it in the competition this week."

Cody Honeyman, sophomore in professional pilot, said the presence of the GlobalFlyer in Salina has brought more attention to the university and people knew where they were going to competition.

"People have at least heard of Salina before they come here now," Honeyman said.

Classes on the Salina campus were not cancelled, Larson said, but the 10 students competing would probably not go to class.

"I know I don't plan on going to class," Larson said.

The awards banquet for all individual and team competitions is Sunday at Salina.

CSA | Fees unlikely to pay for classroom improvement

creating a task force to come up with some options.

Students have suggested using the money to improve classrooms or build more classrooms, but that it is generally funded by tax money distributed by the Kansas Board of Regents, Ratzloff said.

Funding the library expansion would normally be funded by tax money also, but it wasn't. It was a combination of student fees, private donations and federal funds.

Ratzloff said it may be beneficial to continue paying the bonds until they expire in 2015 because rates may be better than starting a new bond.

"It may not be beneficial to pay this library bond off early," he said. "Sometimes old money is cheaper than new money."

K-State does have facility needs.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities, said there is more than $260 million in maintenance needs at K-State.

The board of regents plan to approach the 2006 Kansas Legislature to fund these needs.

In the mid 1990s there was a crumbling classroom initiative where K-State needed more than $250 million, and the state gave $35 million, Carter said.

"We used it well," Carter said. "We had well over $250 million and we got $35, but we are thankful for what we got."

Bill Muir, faculty representative on Student Senate, said student fees can be put toward nearly anything, but precedent is to where money wouldn't go toward classrooms.

Muir said legislature may be less inclined to fund such projects if students will.

"It's sort of the old story that if we raise tuition then the legislature will give us less money. It's a vicious circle that we go through every year," he said. "It seems that in the last few years you have been bearing the burden of tuition increases."

Carter said it could help if students take initiative, because Hale might not have happened without student initiative. The federal funds unexpectedly became available, and K-State had plans in the works to where it could receive a share, he said.

"If the student body hadn't been prepared for it, we probably wouldn't have been able to justify our need for what resulted in what is now Hale Library," he said.

BASEBALL | Cats get win, play again this weekend

two-RBI double to the right field wall by freshman Cris Tapia and a passed ball that scored Dent.

Hopkins and Brandon Lance got the Aggies back to within one in the top of the sixth with one RBI each, making the score 4-5, but the Wildcats scored one more in the bottom of the sixth to give them a 6-4 lead and the final margin.

Relief pitchers Chase Bayuk and Daniel Edwards helped hold the Aggies scoreless the rest of the way, and the Wildcats came out with the victory.

Goedert led the Wildcats offensively on the night by going 3-for-3 with two RBI.

"Tonight I got a hold of a couple of curve balls and they helped me out a lot," Goedert said.

Hill said Goedert is the team's "Mr. Consistency."

"He doesn't change," Hill said. "He is going to give you the same stuff every night and be good for us."

Muegge went 5.0 innings for the Wildcats, giving up two runs, one earned, while walking two and striking out five.

"Brett Muegge did an outstanding job for us tonight," Hill said.

B.J. Kissel got his first save as a Wildcat after throwing a scoreless ninth.

"B.J. had a good couple of plays behind him that helped get this game over with for us," Hill said.

Goedert said he feels everyone is now getting to see what this team can do.

"We've known all along that we were a good team, and that we could get some wins," Goedert said. "I think that is what you are starting to see right now. Everyone is coming together right now and it's a great time to be peaking."

The Wildcats return to action this weekend for a three-game series with the Kansas Jayhawks. The Wildcats will take the field at 6:30 p.m. Friday at Tointon Family Stadium. The action will then shift to Lawrence, where the series will continue at 7 p.m. and 2 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday, respectively, at Kansas' Hoglund Ballpark.

PARKING | Plans for garage ready for presentation to Board of Regents

Faculty and staff permits will increase $34 a year for three years doubling the fee to $202.

Abbott said fee increases may be implemented as soon as Fall 2006.

The parking garage plans include 134 reserved stalls, 300 student stalls, 300 faculty stalls and 672 unaffiliated stalls.

The unaffiliated stalls will be similar to the metered parking that is in place now, Abbott said. However, instead of meters, students will be able pay for parking by the hour when they exit the parking garage.

Visitor parking will also be included in the unaffiliated stalls. Abbott said this will open up more parking in the Memorial Stadium lot because there will be no need to block off parking spaces.

The 300 student parking stalls could possibly have a fee of $17 a month. The fee would be separate from the student fee for the flat parking lots, Abbott said.

However, Abbott said the affiliation of the parking stalls and the separate fee for student parking is not finalized.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning, said he is hopeful the parking garage will come through this time.

"Since 1950, eight different times we've looked at what it's going to take to solve the parking situation on campus," he said. "This time we are the farthest we've ever been."

Abbott said he would like to gather input from many people before plans are finalized.

"We want to take this to everyone: faculty, staff and students, take it to more groups of people and see what their views are," Abbott said.

Student Body President Michael Burns said he is hopeful for student support.

"I think we are going to have a small amount of students who are not going to be in support of it, but I honestly believe an overwhelming majority of students see the need for a parking garage," Burns said.

The next stages include presenting plans to the Kansas Board of Regents, which could be as soon as October, and getting the plans approved by the Kansas Legislature.

Parking garage stalls

- 134 reserved stalls
- 300 student stalls
- 300 faculty and staff stalls
- 672 unaffiliated stalls used similarly to the meters and will accommodate visitors.
